Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current interest rate differential between publicly provided capital for the national health service education and British Rail and capital raised through his private finance initiative.

Sir George Young: For appraisal purposes, the pre-tax cost of capital for central Government activities is normally taken as 6 per cent. in real terms, or its nominal equivalent. For nationalised industries, financial objectives are specified in terms of a required rate of return of 8 per cent. in real terms. The cost of capital raised for projects under the private finance initiative will depend on the creditworthiness of the body concerned and the types of financing which best fit the project.

Cross-border Shopping

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the annual loss of tax revenue from cross-border shopping; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The latest annual estimates were included in HM Customs and Excise's submission to the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee and published in the Committee's report on 23 November 1994, 1994–95 Session, 1st report, HC35.

Fraud

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 27 February, Official Report, column 401, in what form the data on fraud are collected.

Sir George Young: The current reporting arrangements are set out in chapter 37 of "Government Accounting". The chapter includes the form to be used by Departments in reporting fraud.

Living Standards

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the change in the standard of living of manual workers in manufacturing relative to white-collar workers in the private sector since 1979.

Mr. Aitken: Figures based on data from the new earnings survey show that between 1979 and 1994 average gross real earnings of manual workers in manufacturing rose by 20 per cent., compared to 57 per cent. for non-manual workers in the private sector as a whole.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the percentage change in Britain's gross domestic product since the first quarter of 1990.

Mr. Nelson: The growth in real GDP—gross domestic product at constant factor cost—between the first quarter of 1990 and the fourth quarter of 1994 was 4.2 per cent.

Price Stability

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the relative priority attached by Her Majesty s Government to price stability and to maximising living standards.

Mr. Aitken: The objective of the Government's economic policy is to promote sustainable growth and increasing prosperity. Permanently low inflation, combined with sound public finances and structural policies to improve the long-term performance of the economy, is the best way to achieve this objective.

National Power and PowerGen

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Government's sale of substantially all of its shareholdings in National Power Plc and PowerGen plc.

Sir George Young: I am pleased to report that the Government's United Kingdom public offer and international offers of National Power and PowerGen shares were successfully completed this morning, when dealings in interim rights started on the London Stock Exchange.

As a result of bids received in the international offers, the prices of the third instalments for all investors in the UK public offer and the international offers were set at 136p per National Power interim right and 142p per PowerGen interim right.

Accordingly, the price for National Power interim rights purchased in the UK public offer was 476p per share, comprising 170p paid on successful application, 170p to be paid by 6 February 1996 and 136p to be paid by 17 September 1996.

The price for PowerGen interim rights purchased in the United Kingdom public offer was 512p per share, comprising 185p paid on successful application, 185p to be paid by 6 February 1996 and 142p to be paid by 17 September 1996.

The price for interim rights purchased in the international offer of National Power shares was 486p per share, comprising 180p paid on successful application, 170p to be paid by 6 February 1996 and 136p to be paid by 17 September 1996.

The price for interim rights purchased in the international offer of PowerGen shares was 522p per share, comprising 195p paid on successful application, 185p to be paid by 6 February 1996 and 142p to be paid by 17 September 1996.

The Government offered for sale up to 371.8 million National Power shares and 238.3 million PowerGen shares in the UK public offer and the international offers.

Some 1.1 million applications were received in the UK public offer for a total of some 367 million National Power and some 245 million PowerGen shares. This represented two times the share initially expected to be sold in the UK public offer. In response to this demand, the Government increased the total number of shares allotted to the UK public offer to 229 million National Power and 153 million PowerGen shares. At this level, the number of shares applied for in the UK public offer represented some 1.6 times the share available.

Over 98 per cent. of applicants in the UK public offer received an allocation of shares. Half of all applicants had their applications met in full.

Almost 248,000 qualifying National Power and PowerGen shareholders and more than 2,600 eligible National Power and PowerGen employees made applications in the UK public offer. All such applicants received an allocation of National Power or PowerGen shares, as appropriate.

Excluding the retail tender, 108.5 million National Power shares and 56.1 million PowerGen shares were allocated to bidders in the international offers. This number does not include any shares that Kleinwort Benson Ltd. and Barclays de Zoete Wedd Securities Ltd. may have over-allotted in connection with the international offers. The extent of any such over-allotment will not be disclosed until later. As already announced, Kleinwort Benson Ltd. and Barclays de Zoete Wedd Securities Ltd. may also effect stabilisation transactions.

Individual investors bidding in the UK retail tender bid for some 24 million shares in National Power and 28 million shares in PowerGen. Of these numbers, some 10 million shares and some 12 million shares, respectively, were in respect of PEP applications.

In addition to the shares sold in the UK public offer and the International Offers, Kleinwort Benson Ltd. and Barclays de Zoete Wedd Securities Ltd. as global co-ordinators for the sale, hold an option to acquire from Her Majesty's Treasury up to a further 37.2 million National Power and 23.8 million PowerGen shares for the purpose of meeting any over-allotment made by them in connection with the relevant International Offer. This option must be exercised by 5 April 1995.

Pursuant to an agreement with HM Treasury, National Power plc purchased 98 million shares in conjunction with the offers, at a price consistent with the international offer price. Total gross proceeds from this purchase amount to some £453 million and will be received in this financial year.

Similarly, pursuant to an agreement to HM Treasury, PowerGen plc has purchased 60 million shares in conjunction with the offers, at a price consistent with the international offer price. Total gross proceeds amount to some £292 million and will be received in this financial year.

Total gross proceeds from the UK public offer, the international offers and share repurchases amount to some £3,642 million, of which some £1,782 million is expected to be received in this financial year.

Total gross proceeds may be further increased by a maximum of £305 million to the extent that, if at all, the global co-ordinator, Kleinwort Benson Ltd and Barclays de Zoete Wedd Securities Ltd. exercises its option to acquire further shares.

The costs to the Government of the National Power and PowerGen shares offers, and of the share repurchase arrangements, are estimated to be as follows:

UK Offers	£ million
Marketing	15.2
Share Shop Commissions	18.7
Prospectus production and distribution	0.6
Receiving Banks	3.1
Advisers' fees and expenses	7.9
Total (UK Offers)	45.6
International Offers commissions and other costs	15.1
Total (UK and Overseas Offers)	60.7

Those costs represent about 1.7 per cent. of the estimated total proceeds due from the sale of shares—excluding any shares that the global co-ordinator have an option to purchase. The costs exclude stamp duty and VAT on services provided to the Government, which are not net costs to the Exchequer. There will be some further expenditure in 1995–96 onwards in respect of instalment collection and the issue of bonus shares.

Following the offers, the purchase of shares by National Power and PowerGen and assuming the exercise in full of the option over National Power and PowerGen shares granted by Her Majesty's Treasury to Kleinwort Benson Ltd. and Barlcays de Zoete Wedd Securities Ltd., Her Majesty's Treasury expects to hold not more than 1 per cent. of the issued share capital of either company. These amounts comprise principally shares that may be needed to meet share bonus entitlements under the UK public offer.

Muriel Nissel

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library of Muriel Nissel's article written for the latest issue of Social Trends but not published.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 16 February 1995]: The article Mrs. Nissel submitted to the CSO was not included in the latest edition of Social Trends. However, I understand that it will be published in a forthcoming edition of the Journal of the Royal Statistical Society. Copies of the journal are available in the House of Commons Library.

Barings Bank

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the cost to public funds for the Bank of England of the Bank's offer to provide liquidity for the rescue of Barings; and if he will instruct the Bank to make no further offers of this nature.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 2 March 1995]: As my right hon. and learned Friend told the House on Monday 27 February, the Bank of England stands ready to provide liquidity to the banking system to ensure that it continues to function normally. There was no rescue of Barings and the Governor did not recommend that public funds should be used for this purpose.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made as to by what method and to what extent the asset management arm of Barings is ring fenced to protect it from any disadvantageous situations arising in its other divisions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 2 March 1995]: Barings is now in the hands of the administrators. The regulatory requirements applying to fund management should protect the fund management arm from losses elsewhere in the group, but any investors' cash balances held on deposit at Barings Bank will be frozen. Current discussions between the administrators and the ING Group raise the prospect that a favourable settlement may be obtained.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the position of local authorities who had money on short-term deposit with Barings bank; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding reply 2 March 1995]: The administrators are currently engaged in identifying the options for realising maximum benefits for creditors of Barings. Current discussions between the administrators and the ING Group raise the prospect that a favourable settlement may be obtained, but until the administration order is lifted, deposits remain frozen.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy that no public money will be used directly or indirectly in any attempt to rescue Barings and that the Bank of England should not put any of its own money at risk in such a rescue attempt.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 2 March 1995]: As my right hon. and learned Friend, the Chancellor told the House on Monday 27 February, the Governor did not recommend, and in any event he would not have agreed, that public funds should be used to rescue Barings.

Derivatives Markets

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has for regulation of derivative markets to ensure that the bank exposure is geared to a fixed ratio to the capital of the bank concerned.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 2 March 1995]: We have no current proposals for further regulation of derivatives. The Bank of England already sets a variety of capital requirements for credit institutions depending on the nature of business in which they are engaged. The capital adequacy directive, which comes into force at the end of this year, provides for EU-wide rules on the capital which must be held against market risks, including those involved in derivatives markets.

As my right hon. and learned Friend told the House on Monday 27 February, he has asked the Board of Banking Supervision to investigate fully and urgently all aspects of the Barings episode and to report back to him. Any lessons to be drawn must await a thorough analysis.

Banks (Regulation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the Bank of England power to inspect the operations and control structures, and audit the accounts of, all overseas operations of subsidiaries of British banks.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 2 March 1995]: The Banking Act 1987 already gives the Bank of England extensive powers to supervise the worldwide operations of UK authorised institutions. These powers do not, however, apply directly to non-banking subsidiaries. Their supervision requires co-operation with other relevant regulators. As my right hon. and learned Friend, the Chancellor told the House on Monday 27 February, he has asked the Board of Banking Supervision to investigate fully and urgently all aspects of the Barings episode and to report back to him. Any lessons to be drawn must await a thorough analysis.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, what proposals he has for setting up an independent regulator with its own inspectors and audit teams to regulate banking.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 2 March 1995]: The Bank of England already discharges these responsibilities.

PRIME MINISTER

Northern Region

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the Government's achievements in the northern region since 1979.

The Prime Minister: The Government have had many achievements in the northern region since 1979 as our policies have created a favourable economic climate for growth. During this period the region has undergone the biggest transformation since the 19th century with the emergence of a new and diverse industrial base. Pharmaceutical, food processing, clothing, light engineering, electronics and car manufacture have replaced traditional industries. In the area covered by the Government office for the north-east this change has come about through a range of measures:

- the attraction of £3 billion overseas investment since 1985, the most notable successes of which were Nissan and Samsung and a further £1.3 billion private sector investment into the areas covered by the Tyne and Wear and Teesside Development Corporations since 1987, creating and safeguarding over 30,000 jobs;
- over 5,500 hectares of derelict land reclaimed, including over 700 by the Urban Development Corporations in Tyne and Wear and on Teesside;
- in partnership with other organisations, the region's Training and Enterprise Councils have successfully developed innovative solutions to the training and enterprise needs of their areas including the establishment of a business Innovation Centre in Sunderland and a management training and higher education facility in Northumberland. TEC's in the region have also piloted a number of new initiatives: Open Learning Credits, Youth Credits, Adult Credits, the Out of School Childcare Grant, Workstart and Skillchoice.;
- assisting over 26,000 unemployed people to start their own businesses since 1987 through the Businesses Start Up Scheme run by Training and Enterprise Councils;
- 820,000 people placed in jobs by the Employment Service since 1986;
- unemployment has fallen by 16,100 or nearly 10 per cent. since the national peak in December 1992;
- a substantial number of homes built and improved;
- over 4,000 jobs created, 5,000 jobs preserved and 550 new businesses assisted by the South Tyneside and Stockton and Thornaby Task Force; and,
- an increase in the numbers of young people staying in full-time education after reaching school leaving age. 12.4 per cent of those leaving schools in the region in 1992–93 intended to pursue a Degree course.

The region also piloted the development of job clubs, now a successful national programme and expects to become the first to have contracted out careers services and to have facilitated a comprehensive network of Business Links.

Internet

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the Internet E-mail numbers of all Government Ministers.

The Prime Minister: It is a matter for individual Ministers to decide whether to make public their Internet electronic mail addresses. The two Ministers with responsibility for use of the Internet are the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service and Science and the Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whose E-mail addresses are publicly available.

Government Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what role the Cabinet plays in the formulation of (a) economic policy, (b) monetary policy and (c) policy on a single European currency.

The Prime Minister: The Cabinet is the ultimate arbitrator of all aspects of Government policy.

Social Development Summit

Ms Corston: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his Answer of 27 February, Official Report, column 412, if the Minister for Overseas Development, in representing him at the Heads of State world summit for social development in Copenhagen, is responsible for negotiating those aspects of the draft declaration and action programme covering national action within the United Kingdom to reduce inequality and poverty and promote full employment and social integration.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development will represent me at the high level segment of the summit on 11-12 March. My right hon. and noble Friend will make a statement setting out the United Kingdom perspective on the issues covered by the summit.

Ms Corston: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his answer of 27 February, Official Report, column 412, if he will publish briefs which have been prepared by his Government for discussion at the world summit for social development about social development and anti-poverty measures taken and proposed to be taken in the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: There are no plans to do so. It is not usual to publish briefing provided by officials to Ministers. The speeches of my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State for Overseas Development will be published, and copies will be placed in the Library.

Lockerbie

Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has which would allow Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the United States of America to resolve the Lockerbie affair other than by way of instituting criminal proceeding in Scotland or the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Lockerbie bombing was a crime committed against a United States aircraft over Scotland. It has been investigated from Scotland with the co-operation of the United States authorities. The trial of those accused of this terrible crime must take place in Scotland or the United States. This has been confirmed by the UN Security Council.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if he will discuss with President Clinton the role in Beirut in 1988 of Ron Carviene, Bill Leyene and Dan O'Connor, under the command of Matthew Gannon and Charles McKee.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he had when he last met President Clinton on the subject of the setting up of an international court to try those persons alleged to have perpetrated the murders of the passengers and crew members of Pan Am flight 103 and residents of Lockerbie in December 1988; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: None.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library a copy of the memorandum for No. 10 Downing street in 1989 adducing the reasons why Her Majesty's Government would not allow the public inquiry into the Lockerbie crime; and at what level the decision on the public inquiry was taken.

The Prime Minister: It is not usual practice to place internal Government correspondence in the Library. I have nothing further to add to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Linlithgow on 10 January, Official Report, column 20.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his letter of 30 August 1994 to the hon. Member for Linlithgow what examination has taken place of the Toshiba and Helsinki warnings in relation to Lockerbie since the fatal accident inquiry.

The Prime Minister: The fatal accident inquiry, which took place 22 months after the disaster, examined both warnings in some detail. In his determination, the Sheriff Principal concluded that the so-called Toshiba warning was not relevant to the circumstances of the deaths and that the so-called Helsinki warning lacked credibility. It has therefore not been considered necessary to conduct further examinations into these.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what representations Her Majesty's Government have had from the German Government about their interrogation of Edwin Bolliers's Statsi control and the sale of timing devices to the Statsi.

The Prime Minister: None.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will discuss the implications with President Clinton of the FBI briefing paper regarding Iranian links and baggage being unloaded on Air Malta 180 destination Frankfurt airport.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if British authorities have interviewed Marwin Khreesat, a bomb maker, briefly detained and then released in Neuss, Germany;

(2) if he will put the transcript of the interview with Mr. Ghandanfar and Mr. Dalkamouni in the Library.

The Prime Minister: As the hon. Gentleman well knows, it would be wrong to reveal details of the evidence in a criminal case while proceedings are pending.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will ask Chancellor Kohl the reasons why in October 1988 the Verfassungschütz released certain Palestinians and their bomb-making equipment.

The Prime Minister: The release of detainees from German prisons is a matter entirely for the German authorities.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will discuss with Chancellor Kohl the prima facie evidence that a German-based terrorist organisation used its knowledge of a covert United States drugs operation to switch an unaccompanied bag containing drugs with an identical bag containing a bomb which destroyed Pan Am Flight 103.

The Prime Minister: The allegation has been examined. No evidence has been found to support it.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received from Lockerbie victims' families regarding information conveyed to them by members of the United States commission about the extent of the information available to United States and United Kingdom Governments and the probability of its publication; what elements of the United States commission's findings support the families' version; and if he will place in the Library the United Kingdom responses to these findings.

The Prime Minister: I have recently received a letter from the family of a Lockerbie victim which referred to the United States President's commission on aviation security and terrorism. A copy of the commission's report, dated May 1990 will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment Her Majesty's Government has made of the role of Khaled Jaafar, a Lebanese victim of the Lockerbie bombing.

The Prime Minister: The fatal accident inquiry in 1990–91 considered allegations of involvement of Khaled Jaafar in the bombing. In his determination, the sheriff principal concluded that there was no connection between Mr. Jaafar and the suitcase which contained the bomb.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister on what evidence British officials publicly dismissed a document of the United States Air Force, air intelligence unit, asserting that Ali Akbar Mostashemi, former Iranian Interior Minister, paid $10 million to terrorist gangs to carry out the attack on Pan Am Flight 103 in December 1988, as based on dud intelligence.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the answer I gave the hon. Gentleman on 26 January, Official Report, columns 299-300.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made of American reports about the destruction of Pan Am 103, based on reports from defecting Iranian pilots.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the answer I gave the hon. Gentleman on 26 January, Official Report, columns 299-300

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his letter to the hon. Member for Linlithgow of 25 January, what strategy, other than demanding a trial of Libyan suspects, Her Majesty's Government have for obtaining justice for all the victims of the crime of Lockerbie.

The Prime Minister: The Lockerbie investigation has been the most exhaustive ever undertaken in this country. It remains open but has to date uncovered evidence to support charges against the two Libyans accused. Our demands, endorsed by the United Nations Security Council have been for the surrender of the accused for trial in the United States or Scotland, the satisfaction of French justice over the bombing of UTA 772, the payment of appropriate compensation and concrete proof from Libya that it has renounced terrorism. I can see no other means of meeting the legitimate demands for justice than by trial of the persons alleged to be responsible before a criminal court properly exercising jurisdiction in respect of these matters.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister whether Her Majesty's Government were informed on or about 19 December 1988 of the travel plans of Major Charles McKee by the US Drug Enforcement Agency in Cyprus.

The Prime Minister: No. I understand Major McKee was not an employee of the DEA.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to his answer on 14 February, Official Report, column 571, he will identify the partners to whom he referred in relation to discussions about Lockerbie and UTH 772.

The Prime Minister: The United States, France, other EU states and other friendly countries. We work most closely with the United States and France, the other states most seriously affected by the Lockerbie and UTA bombings. The Lockerbie issue is raised in bilateral contacts with a wide range of countries.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what information came to Her Majesty's Government about approaches by members of the Juafar family offering precise testimony about Hezbollah and Achmed Tibril and their role in using a member of the Juafar family to get a bomb on board Pan Am Flight 103.

The Prime Minister: No such approaches have been received.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what reports the United Kingdom and the United States authorities in Cyprus received from Mr. David Lovejoy, an employee of the United States Government directly or through other sources on the movements of the United States hostage rescue team, including Matthew Gannon and Major Charles McKee subsequently killed at Lockerbie, before the destruction of Pan Am 103; and if he will discuss with President Clinton the reasons why these reports were sought.

The Prime Minister: The British authorities in Cyprus neither sought nor received any such reports.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his Private Secretary, Mr. Edward Oakden's letter of 18 January to the relatives of the Lockerbie victims, if he will bring forward proposals whereby fatal accident inquiry presiding judges can have access to intelligence information.

The Prime Minister: Section 4(3) of the Fatal Accidents and Sudden Deaths (Scotland) Act 1976 requires that, subject to an exception relating to the reporting of matters affecting persons under the age of 17, any fatal accident inquiry shall be open to the public. There are no proposals to amend that provision.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if pursuant to his letter to the hon. Member for Linlithgow of 15 February on Lockerbie, if he will list the witnesses interviewed by the German authorities at the request of, or in consultation with, the Scottish authorities and on what dates; and on what occasions Scottish officers were present, assisting at interviews.

The Prime Minister: Disclosure of the fact the Messrs Ghadanfar and Dalkamouni were interviewed was an exceptional step taken only because of the unwarranted criticisms which had been, and were continuing to be, made of the German authorities and the Scottish police. It would not be appropriate to go beyond this by discussing details of confidential communications between the Scottish police and prosecuting authorities and their counterparts in Germany, or indeed in any other country.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Linlithgow on 26 January, Official Report, column 300, in what month of what year allegations were first made to the effect that Ali Akbar Mostashemi had paid $10 million to have the Lockerbie bombing carried out; who were the competent authorities to whom the Prime Minister refers; and how much of the alleged contradicting material came from Abdul Meged Jiacha.

The Prime Minister: This allegation first appeared in the British press in September 1989. I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave the hon. Gentleman on 26 January, Official Report, column 299-300.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will discuss with President Clinton the statement of Mr. Vincent Cannistraro, head of the CIA counter-terrorism operations until 1990, that the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine general command was implicated in the bombing of Pan Am flight 103 and had been planning other operations against United States and Israeli targets when some of its members' squad were arrested in Frankfurt and that the operation had been bankrolled by Iranians.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will discuss with President Clinton the posting of warnings about Pan Am flight 103 on United States embassy bulletin boards, and the subsequent United States directive requiring imprisonment of officials, should they discuss warnings with family, friends, and colleagues in the absence of a public warning.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so.

European Courts

Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he had with the leaders of the other member states of the European Union, on the modification of structure, membership and functions of (a) the European Court of Auditors, (b) the European court of first instance, and (c) the European Court of Justice; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: We did not discuss these issues at the last European Council meeting in Essen, but, as I said in my December statement to the House, we did emphasise that, in the interests of combating fraud and waste, the Council must ensure that the Court of Auditors' reports are rigorously scrutinised and followed up.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he has taken to assist the speedy conclusion of the Scott inquiry and to ensure that the report is published before 1 May.

The Prime Minister: As I said when I announced the terms of reference for the inquiry on 16 November 1992, Official Report, columns 74-75, Lord Justice Scott will be entirely free to decide on the publication of his report. The inquiry will report to my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade. The Government continue to give Sir Richard Scott's inquiry the fullest possible co-operation.

Disabled People

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister what is the percentage of disabled people directly employed by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: For these purposes, my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I therefore refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Secretary Office of Public Service and Science gave the hon. Member for Dundee, East (Mr. McAllion) on 1 February, Official Report, column 712.

Public Inquiries

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, in what circumstances a public inquiry may take evidence on intelligence matters in camera.

The Prime Minister: Whether and to what extent a public inquiry may take evidence in camera depends on the powers given to the inquiry when it is established.

Libya

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if the United Kingdom has an extradition treaty with Libya.

The Prime Minister: No.

Command Papers

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list White Papers, Green Papers and pamphlets issued by his Department, or agencies for which it is responsible, in 1994 giving, in each case, the total cost to the Exchequer of their publication and distribution; and what was the total equivalent cost in 1980.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 March 1995]: Her Majesty's Stationery Office aims to recover all production and distribution costs from the sales revenue of all White Papers and Green Papers which it publishes. The cost to my Office of the 1994 pay review body reports was approximately £8,000. Figures for 1980 are not available.

SCOTLAND

Renfrewshire Healthcare NHS Trust

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when Renfrewshire Healthcare NHS trust most recently sought a meeting with him; what date the meeting took place; what matters were discussed; when the next meeting is planned; what matters will be discussed; if he intends to raise the matter of care in the community provision in Renfrewshire; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has not received a request from the Renfrewshire Healthcare NHS trust for a meeting and there are no current plans for a meeting to be held at a future date.

My right hon. Friend looks forward to receiving a copy of Argyll and Clyde health board's draft joint community care plan. Only then can an assessment be made of the planned provision and its impact upon the services currently provided by the Renfrewshire Healthcare NHS trust.

Case Statistics

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, how many cases under summary procedure, have been brought to trial within 14 days by (a) the Paisley procurator fiscal, and (b) other procurator fiscal offices in the past 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is not available. Procurators fiscal are required to keep a record only of the average number of weeks between pleading and trial diet. The period will vary according to the particulars of the case. For example, in custody cases under summary procedure, the trial must commence within 40 days of the bringing of the complaint in court. If the accused is not in custody, there is likely to be a delay of several weeks between the diets, unless the circumstances justify the fixing of an early trial diet. Early diets are often fixed in cases involving children or where the anticipated availability of particular witnesses makes an early diet desirable.

NHS Trusts

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what guidelines he has issued to NHS trusts in Scotland regarding the use of staff facilities including canteens and cafeterias, for hiring out for commercial catering functions; what guidelines he has issued to prohibit or discourage such practice and use; what assessment he has made of the practice of the Royal Alexandra hospital, Paisley; what action he intends to take; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what facilities are available in the Royal Alexandra hospital, Paisley for supplying hot meals to staff; for what reasons such facilities are not always available for staff use; what alternative arrangements are made on such occasions; and if he will make a statement;

(3) when the dance floor in the staff facilities at the Royal Alexander hospital in Paisley was installed; how much it cost; who approved the expenditure; what cost-benefit analysis was carried out; what were the results of that study; what are the precise projections of financial commercial gain to the trust; to what use any profit will be applied; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Section 7 of the Health and Medicines Act 1988 gives health bodies the power to generate additional funds to be used for the purposes of enhancing and improving patient care. Income generation is now an integral part of all NHS activity, but no specific guidance has been issued to NHS trusts regarding the use of staff facilities. It is for each NHS trust to determine opportunities for generating income from non-clinical activities.

There have only been two occasions when the main dining room at the Royal Alexander hospital has been closed for the night meal service. On these occasions staff were informed in advance that an alternative facility would be available in the maternity unit dining room, an area which is not normally open at night. Hot food was available to staff on both these occasions.

An area suitable for dancing was created within the dining room in December 1994 at a cost of £3,000. This was met from hospital endowment funds following approval by the trust's investments committee. The income generated will be re-invested in the endowment funds. No Exchequer funds were involved.

The dining room has been hired out for functions for a number of years, and the income received is invested in enhancing patient care services. The main impetus for improved social facilities came from hospital staff.

Procurator Fiscal's Office, Paisley

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what assessment he has made of whether the procurator fiscal's office in the sheriffdom of Paisley has operated efficiently, effectively, objectively and impartially in all cases placed before it since 1984; if he will make particular reference to those cases involving people who were elected as a councillor at the time the charge was made against them; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will instruct an independent inquiry into the efficiency, effectiveness and operational and objective impartiality of the procurator fiscal's office in the Paisley sheriffdom;

(3) if he will make a statement on his assessment of the efficiency, effectiveness and operational and objective impartiality of the procurator fiscal's office in the Paisley sheriffdom since 1984;

(4) what is the normal involvement of the Crown Office in matters of summary procedure; how many such cases have been referred by the procurator fiscal at Paisley to the Crown Office in each of the past 10 years; what were the reasons and circumstances for these referrals; how many of these involved elected councillors; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what assessment he has made of whether, in relation to the policy and operation of Paisley procurator fiscal's office, any person accused or suspected of any criminal offence was more or less likely to be charged because they held elected office as a councillor; and if he will make a statement;

(6) what assessment he has made of whether all prosecutions conducted by the Paisley procurator fiscal's office since 1984, where the suspect or accused held elected office as a member of a local authority at the time of alleged offence, have been conducted properly and in the same manner as those not holding such office and that the involvement of Strathclyde police in all such cases has been conducted properly, and in the same manner as cases which did not involve the holder of such office; and if he will make a statement.

(7) what assessment he has made of the operation and policy of the procurator fiscal's office in Paisley; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate is satisfied that the procurator fiscal and his deputes reach decisions, including those relating to cases involving elected councillors, on an impartial basis. Such cases are dealt with on exactly the same basis as reports relating to any other accused persons. The decision whether to take proceedings and the nature of any proceedings will be determined on the basis of the procurator fiscal's assessment of all the relevant circumstances including the public interest. There is no requirement to report summary cases to the Crown Office, although procurators fiscal are free to do so if they wish to seek Crown counsel's advice on any aspect of the case. Procurators fiscal do not keep a record of cases involving councillors or of cases reported to the Crown Office. Accordingly, no information is available as to the number of cases referred to the Crown Office by the procurator fiscal at Paisley.

My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate is aware, however, of three cases, involving elected councillors, reported to the procurator fiscal at Paisley.

In two of these cases criminal proceedings were taken and in one no criminal proceedings were taken. My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate is satisfied that in each case the decision represented an appropriate exercise of the procurator fiscal's discretion, and that the decisions were arrived at impartially. The effectiveness and efficiency of all procurator fiscal offices is kept under review by the Crown Office through a programme of office reviews. My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate does not intend to instruct an independent inquiry into the operation of the Paisley office.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, in how many cases under summary procedure in the last 10 years the procurator fiscal at Paisley has paid for witnesses to be flown to from countries outside the British Isles; how many involved police escorts; what was the cost to the public purse in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many requests for an independent inquiry into the operational efficiency, effectiveness and objective impartiality of the Paisley procurator fiscal's office he has received since 1992 from right hon. and hon. Members; how many similar requests were made of the Lord Advocate by right hon. and hon. Members; if he will list those made by right hon. Members representing constituencies in Renfrewshire; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Neither my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland nor my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has received any general request from any Member of Parliament for an independent inquiry into the operational efficiency, effectiveness and objective impartiality of the procurator fiscal's office at Paisley. On the other hand, my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate is aware of three requests for independent inquiries into the handling of particular cases. Two of these requests were made by the hon. Member himself and one was made by my hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart). My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate does not accept that there is any need for an independent inquiry into the handling of cases by the procurator fiscal's office at Paisley.

Scottish Homes

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet the chairman of Scottish Homes to discuss bringing the 56 flats in Waverley court, Foxbar, back into habitable use; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend meets the board of Scottish Homes from time to time to discuss a range but he would not normally discuss detailed matters of operation such as this. I shall therefore ask the chairman of Scottish Homes to write to the hon. Member.

Structural Funding

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the contribution of capital costs associated with the redevelopment of Houstoun square, Johnstone, by (a) European Community sources, (b) central Government sources, (c) Renfrewshire Enterprise, (d) Strathclyde regional council and (e) Renfrew district council.

Mr. Kynoch: The western Scotland objective 2 programme management committee recently approved ERDF funding of £246,000 towards £491,000 of eligible expenditure on the project. The application indicated that Renfrewshire Enterprise is to contribute £95,000 and that Renfrew district council is to contribute £150,000 towards the ERDF-eligible costs. We understand that Renfrew district council is to contribute a further £50,000 in respect of costs which are not eligible for ERDF support. We are not aware of any proposed contribution by Strathclyde regional council or of any application for central Government support. Decisions on the level of support for this project by Renfrewshire Enterprise and Renfrew district council are entirely for these bodies to make.

Flood Prevention Schemes

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to impose a statutory duty, rather than a permissive right, on local authorities to submit flood prevention schemes to him for approval and funding assistance; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The Flood Prevention (Scotland) Act 1961 already provides that where a regional or islands council wishes to carry out flood prevention operations, other than maintenance or management, these operations must be carried out in accordance with a scheme made by the council and confirmed by the Secretary of State. These arrangements will apply also to the new unitary local authorities. Fifty per cent. Government grant is payable to the authorities concerned on the eligible capital costs of confirmed schemes.

Hospitals, Renfrewshire

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future of (a) Dykebar hospital, Paisley and (b) Elderslie hospital; when he last discussed their future with representatives of Renfrewshire Healthcare trust; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has not received a request from Renfrewshire Healthcare NHS trust for a meeting and there are no current plans for a meeting to be held at a future date.

The Argyll and Clyde health board is committed to developing quality care in the community which in time will lead to increased provision and care support outwith hospital settings.

I understand that the board's draft joint community care plan which covers the period up to 1998 has no specific proposals to close Dykebar hospital.

The future of Elderslie hospital and the reprovision of services was the subject of a detailed public consultation exercise in 1992. It is the health board's intention to close Elderslie hospital once quality replacement community services have been created. Closure will require the consent of the Secretary of State.

Raymond Gilmour

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what stage he has reached in his consideration of the application for the prerogative of mercy submitted to him by solicitor Gordon Ritchie on behalf of Raymond Gilmour; what assessment he has made of whether it would be appropriate for him to meet the hon. Member for Paisley South, Mr. Ritchie and others prior to his final decision on the case; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Fresh representations were submitted on behalf of Mr. Raymond Gilmour on 12 December 1994 and 1 February this year. These are currently under consideration and the hon. Member will be informed once our inquiries are complete. Any request for a meeting could be considered at that stage.

Correspondence

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes the Lord Advocate proposes to make in respect of the matters dealt with in his letter dated 6th July to the hon. Member for Paisley, South.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has no plans to make changes in respect of any of the matters referred to in his letter.

Red Star Parcel Service

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has made to the Department of Transport and the Treasury over the sale of Red Star parcel service; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend and I concur with the sale of Red Star and have made no representations.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will specify the quantity and nature of the drugs found in the debris near Lockerbie after the destruction of Pan Am 103.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No significant quantities of drugs were recovered in the course of the Lockerbie investigation. Small "users" quantities of cannabis were found.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what study the Crown Office has made of the "File on Four" investigation of the destruction of Pan Am 103 over Lockerbie on the evidence against two accused Libyans.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Crown Office officials have considered this programme, as they have other media productions which have come to their attention. My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate considers that the appropriate place to test the results of the Lockerbie investigation is in the criminal courts and not on a radio programme.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library copies of the documents dealing with the only direct alleged eye-witness evidence identifying the alleged Libyan agents in Malta, supposedly involved in the destruction of Pan Am 103.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate cannot disclose details of the evidence in the Lockerbie case while criminal proceedings are pending.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Crown Office will place in the Library the report given to representative James Tafficant of Ohio of investigators hired by Pan Am insurance underwriters alleging that the CIA had allowed a man with terrorist connections to transport drugs to the United States in exchange for information about United States hostages in Lebanon.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is not in accordance with the policy of my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate to arrange for foreign litigation material to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library the letter from the senior legal assistant to the Lord Advocate, Mr. A. Dunn, to Mr. Martin Cadman of the Lockerbie Relatives Association concerning the examination by the Crown Office and the Dumfries and Galloway police of the evidence in "Maltese Double Cross".

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is not the policy of my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate to arrange for such correspondence to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library the results of the Crown Office examination of the evidence in "Maltese Double Cross".

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It would be inappropriate to disclose the results of the examination of a film purporting to investigate the Lockerbie bombing while criminal proceedings are pending.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, what communication the Crown Office has had with Der Spiegel in relation to Lockerbie, and the information published in Der Spiegel, of March 1995, in the article "Lockerbie: War Es Abu Nudal?"

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There have been no communications between Crown Office and Der Spiegel in relation to the article "Lockerbie: War Es Abu Nidal?" published in January 1995.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what conclusion the Crown Office adduced from the court award to Air Malta of compensation against Granada Television in relation to its allegations about the role of Malta G.C. in the destruction of Pan Am 103 over Lockerbie.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Crown Office has drawn no conclusions from settlement of a civil litigation which proceeded upon the basis of allegations which are different in detail from those contained within the charges in the petition warrants for the arrest of the two Libyans accused of this crime.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Scottish police have interviewed Maurice Callejas, Commander of the Maltese armed forces in 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has made clear in relation to the Lockerbie case, as in any other case, it is not appropriate for the investigating or prosecuting authorities to give details of investigative steps which have been taken.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what positive identification took place by anyone interviewed by the Scottish police in Malta of Libyan suspects.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate cannot disclose details of the evidence in the Lockerbie case while criminal proceedings are pending.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what dates Scottish police interviewed Dr. David Fieldhouse, Bradford police surgeon, in connection with his work in the Lockerbie area in December 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Dr. Fieldhouse travelled to Lockerbie on a number of occasions in early 1989. He held discussions there with officers of Dumfries and Galloway police concerning his involvement in the identification and examination of Lockerbie victims. These discussions culminated in his submission of a detailed statement to them on 22 April 1989.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Crown Office endorsed the apology given in his written report by Sheriff John Mowat to Dr. David Fieldhouse for overlooking his information about Lockerbie body DCF 12 Male, Hillside NE of Shawhill farm and of the undeserved criticism of his activities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Sheriff Principal Mowat QC did not apologise for overlooking information about a body but apologised for criticism which had been made of Dr. Fieldhouse during the fatal accident inquiry relating to the Lockerbie disaster. The Sheriff Principal found in terms that Dr. Fieldhouse had pronounced life extinct in 58 bodies. That accorded with the evidence of the police at the fatal accident inquiry.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland pursuant to the letter JAD/91 of 9 January from Mr. J. A. Dunn, senior legal assistant at the Crown Office, to Mr. Martin Cadman, father of a victim of Pan Am 103, what new material arising from examination of the film "Maltese Double Cross" has been investigated and subjected to detailed scrutiny.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It would be inappropriate to disclose the results of the examination of a film purporting to investigate the Lockerbie bombing while criminal proceedings are pending.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Crown Office has sought to interview Mr. James Shaughnessy, lawyer for Pan Am, with regard to United States-United Kingdom surveillance of the Iranian embassy in Beirut in the second half of 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has made clear in relation to the Lockerbie case, as in any other case, it is not appropriate for the investigating or prosecuting authorities to give details of investigative steps which have been taken.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if (a) the Crown Office and (b) the Scottish police have sought to interview Mr. Ali Nuri Zadeh about his reports in the Al Dustur newspaper involving Matthew Gannon and Charles McKee, both of whom perished at Lockerbie.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has made clear in relation to the Lockerbie case, as in any other case, it is not appropriate for the investigating or prosecuting authorities to give details of investigative steps which have been taken.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration the Crown Office has given to the advancing age of those witnesses whom the prosecution proposes to lead in court in relation to the Lockerbie case.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Crown Office has noted the passing of time.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what grounds the Crown Office has for supposing that a criminal trial in relation to Lockerbie can still be anticipated as indicated in the Lord Advocate's letter, CAD/E/MP/286/93.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A trial will take place as and when the Libyans make the two accused available for trial in Scotland or the United States as required by the resolutions of the United Nations Security Council.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the journalist, Alasdair Palmer, is employed in any capacity by Her Majesty's Government.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Alasdair Palmer is not employed in any capacity by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what knowledge he has of body DCF 12 Male, Hillside, NE of Shawhill farm found at Lockerbie by Dr. David Fieldhouse.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: At the fatal accident inquiry relating to the Lockerbie disaster, Dr. Fieldhouse gave evidence that there was no record of the body which he had labelled as DCF 12 being found by the police. Dr. Fieldhouse went on to state that the assumption was that there had been human error in recording the location of that body although he considered it to be unlikely that the error could have arisen from his involvement at that particular location. Dr. Fieldhouse went on to state that the suggested locations given by him for bodies did not match up in all cases with the police information. Having considered all the evidence, the Sheriff Principal, in his determination, concluded that Dr. Fieldhouse pronounced life extinct in 58 bodies. That accorded with the evidence of the police at the fatal accident inquiry.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library the 18 separate statements that Tony Gavci, clothing shopkeeper of Malta, gave to Scottish police.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate cannot disclose details of evidence while criminal proceedings are pending.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Scottish police have a sworn statement from Her Majesty's Customs Officer Philip Connolly.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has made clear in relation to the Lockerbie case, as in any other case, it is not appropriate for the investigating or prosecuting authorities to give details of investigative steps which have been taken.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether a British Customs officer stationed in Cyprus in 1988 has been questioned by the Scottish police about controlled drug deliveries.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has made clear in relation to the Lockerbie case, as in any other case, it is not appropriate for the investigating or prosecuting authorities to give details of investigative steps which have been taken.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the evidence presented to the Crown Office following the presentation of the petition charging named Libyan individuals to the sheriff of Dumfries was regarded by them at the time as being sufficient for them to conclude their investigations; and on what date they deemed their investigations to be concluded.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The evidence presented to the prosecuting authorities by the police was sufficient to enable the procurator fiscal to request petition warrants for the arrest of the two named accused from the sheriff at Dumfries. As has always been made clear, the investigation remains open.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what directions or instructions to investigate recent allegations of Iranian and Syrian involvement in the bombing of Pan Am flight 103, the Crown Office has given the Dumfries and Galloway police in relation to the directions and instructions of the procurator fiscal.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has made clear, in relation to the Lockerbie case, as in any other case, it is not appropriate for the investigating or prosecuting authorities to give details of investigative steps which have been taken.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Dumfries and Galloway police have interviewed (a) officials of the United States embassy who were in Nicosia in 1988 to determine what they knew of events leading up to the Lockerbie disaster and (b) the 1988 CIA station chief in Nicosia and the Drugs Enforcement Agency country attache.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has made clear, in relation to the Lockerbie case, as in any other case, it is not appropriate for the investigating or prosecuting authorities to give details of investigative steps which have been taken.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration the Crown Office has given to its legal duty in law to consider and investigate any evidence which tends to exculpate the two libyans accused of the Lockerbie crime; and if the Crown Office is complying with this legal obligation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Crown Office considers all relevant evidence and carries out such investigations as are appropriate and will continue to do so in the exercise of its duties.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what inquiries the Crown Office have made of Mr. Larry Robinson, of the United States embassy in London, on the issue of persons, in addition to two Libyans, being involved in the Lockerbie crime.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has made clear, in relation to the Lockerbie case, as in any other case, it is not appropriate for the investigating or prosecuting authorities to give details of investigative steps which have been taken.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much in (a) US dollars (b) pounds sterling and (c) other currencies was collected from the scene of the Lockerbie disaster in December 1988, other than the normal personal money of passengers and crew members of the aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No amounts of money, other than what might ordinarily be regarded as personal money, were found at the Lockerbie crash site. A cashed cheque and substantial quantities of encashed travellers cheques were recovered.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what conclusions the Crown Office has drawn from evidence presented in the court at Karlsruhe in relation to the Lockerbie bombing on 26 April 1989 as to the source of the radios; and what state of preparation they were in when bought.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate cannot disclose details of evidence while criminal proceedings are pending.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Dumfries and Galloway police were present throughout the interview with Mr. Ghadanfar in Frankfurt on 26 October 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Dumfries and Galloway constabulary had no interest in Mr. Ghadanfar in October 1988. It will be recalled that the Lockerbie bombing did not take place until 21 December 1988.

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what instructions or directions to investigate allegations of involvement of countries other than Libya, in the destruction of Pan Am 103, the Crown Office has given the Dumfries and Galloway police in relation to the instructions and directions of the procurator fiscal.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has made clear, in relation to the Lockerbie case, as in any other case, it is not appropriate for the investigating or prosecuting authorities to give details investigative steps which have been taken.

Fatal Accident Inquiries

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many deaths of hospital patients have led to fatal accident inquiries being held in (a) Renfrewshire, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland in each of the past 10 years; of these, how many were concerned with an inquiry into the death of a patient during or following surgical care; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Procurators Fiscal

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance, assistance or training is given to procurators fiscal to enable them to examine the question both death certificates and medical notes concerning hospital patients who have died either during surgical care or following such treatment; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A significant proportion of procurators fiscal will have studied forensic medicine at university. On joining the procurator fiscal service, they will receive training in relation to the procurator fiscal's role in the investigation of sudden, suspicious or unexplained deaths. In 1992–93 the Crown Office reached agreement with the departments of forensic medicine of the universities of Glasgow, Edinburgh, Dundee and Aberdeen for the departments to take an active part in the initial and in-service training of procurators fiscal through courses organised both locally and nationally. In addition, the four departments of forensic medicine are under contract to provide procurators fiscal with an advisory consultative service on medical matters. The Departments will also assist procurators fiscal in the interpretation of medical records including the records of persons who have died in hospital or following treatment in hospital.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if a procurator fiscal can issue a requirement to examine medical notes concerning a patient who has died (a) during surgery care or (b) following surgical care; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A procurator fiscal may apply to the sheriff court for a warrant to recover hospital records. In practice such records are made available on request.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if death certificates are sent by medical practitioners, to procurators fiscal, as (a) a matter of course or (b) as a legal requirement, following the deaths of hospital patients (i) during surgical care or (ii) following surgical care; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is the duty of the procurator fiscal to inquire into all sudden, suspicious, accidental, unexpected and unexplained deaths, including certain deaths associated with the provision of medical care. Instructions have been given to hospitals, nursing homes and general practitioners, that where a patient has died in certain circumstances, the procurator fiscal must be informed without delay. The responsibility for notification lies with the doctor concerned with the care of the patient or the doctor called in at the time of death. There is no requirement on medical practitioners to send a death certificate to the procurator fiscal. However, arrangements have been made between the Registrar General for Scotland and the Crown Office whereby district registrars will report to the procurator fiscal deaths falling into the categories of deaths into which procurators fiscal must inquire. The registrar will bring such deaths to the attention of the procurator fiscal by sending him an intimation of the particulars relating to the deceased. The intimation will include details of the cause of death as disclosed by the medical certificate.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Aberdeen, South, (Mr. Robertson) of 15 February, Official Report, column 697, on provision for children's evidence, if the closed circuit television equipment currently being installed in the Sheriff court, Greenock, is to be a permanent fixture in relation to the taking of evidence from vulnerable witnesses; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Since 30 September 1991, equipment has been available in the sheriffdoms of Glasgow and Strathkelvin and Lothian and borders to enable child witnesses only, in appropriate cases, to give evidence in criminal trials by way of live television link. The equipment being installed at Greenock sheriff court will be available for cases transferred from other courts in the sheriffdom of north Strathclyde. Provision in that sheriffdom to enable child witnesses to give evidence in criminal trials by closed circuit television will be reviewed no later than 1997, at which time it is expected that major building works at Paisley sheriff court will have been completed.

Secular Buildings

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money Historic Scotland is providing for the renovation and conservation of listed secular buildings in (a) Inverclyde, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole in the current financial year.

Sir Hector Monro: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by Historic Scotland. I have asked its director and chief executive, Mr. Graeme Munro, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graeme N. Munro to Dr. Godman, dated 6 March 1995:

You have tabled a Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Scotland for Written Answer on 6 March.

The question relates to operational matters undertaken by Historic Scotland and I have been asked to provide the information you are seeking. The terms of this letter will be reproduced in the Official Report and a copy of it will also be deposited in the Library of the House.

You have asked how much money Historic Scotland is providing for the renovation and conservation of listed secular buildings in (a) Inverclyde (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole in the current financial year.

The total commitment in the current financial year (that is, payments already made and payments in the pipeline which will be effected prior to 31 March 1995) on historic buildings repair grants for secular buildings in the current financial year is as follows:

(a) Inverclyde: £103,490

(b) Strathclyde: £5,028,850

(c) Scotland: £9,576,000

I hope this information is helpful.

Taxis (Wheelchair Access)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to ensure that newly licensed taxis and private hire vehicles are wheelchair accessible; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kynoch: The Government's response on 22 February to the recommendations contained in the report of the Transport Select Committee—Cm 2715—expressed support for the phasing in of the requirement that taxis should be accessible to wheelchair users. Legislation in Scotland relating to taxis and private hire cars is contained in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982. We are now considering in the context of Scottish legislation and circumstances how best to proceed in this matter.

Rail Services

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has given to the rail regulator on the need for formal consultation, prior to the withdrawal of any Anglo-Scottish rail services.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 March 1995]: None. The duties of the rail regulator, including the duty to protect rail users' interests, are defined in statute.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the speech of the hon. Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) in the Scottish Grand Committee, concerning consultation on proposed withdrawal of rail services, represents the policy of Her Majesty's Government.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 March 1995]: Yes.

Mr. John Robertson

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the public positions to which he has appointed Mr. John Robertson of the S. and J. D. Robertson Group, stating in each case the salary and expenses, the required weekly commitment of working days and Mr. Robertson's particular qualifications for the appointment.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 3 March 1995]: I have appointed Mr. Robertson to the following positions:

Organisation	Position	Salary	Weekly time commitment
Highland Health Board	Chairman	£14,835 pa	2-3 days
Highlands and Islands Enterprise	Member	£ 7,410 pa	0.5 days

In addition to salary, Mr. Robertson is re-imbursed any expenses incurred in connection with these appointments at the rate appropriate to the body concerned. Mr. Robertson's appointment as chairman of Highland health board extends until 31 March 1999 and his appointment as a member of Highlands and Islands Enterprise until 30 September 1995. Mr. Robertson has said that he does not wish to be considered for re-appointment to Highlands and Islands Enterprise.

Since 27 August 1990 Mr. Robertson has been a lay member of the national health service tribunal. This position carries no remunerative time and travelling expenses incurred in connection with the work of the tribunal. However, the tribunal has not met since Mr. Robertson's appointment.

On 6 February I announced Mr. Robertson's appointment as a chairman of the North of Scotland Water Authority. He will take up these duties later this year and they will entail an average time commitment of two and a half days per week for which he will received £40,000 per annum plus expenses. The appointment will be for four years. When he agreed to accept this appointment, Mr. Robertson told my officials that, on taking up the post, he wished to forgo the payments for his public service with the health board and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. This is in line with the action he took for several years with Orkney health board.

Mr. Robertson has a range of skills and experience built up through many years of public service and through running a property and oil distribution business. His links in the highlands and islands have made him particularly suitable for the appointments he has held and should also prove invaluable in connection with his forthcoming role as chairman of the North of Scotland Water Authority.

North of Scotland Electricity Users Consultative Committee

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce the appointment of a chairman for the north of Scotland electricity users consultative committee; and what criteria he will apply in making his decision.

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 3 March 1995]: Responsibility for the appointment of chairmen of the electricity consumers' committees lies with the Director General of Electricity Supply after consultation with the Secretary of State. It is understood that the director general intends to appoint a new chairman of the north of Scotland consumers' committee in late March.

HEALTH

Termination Payments

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what termination payments have been made to (a) chairs and (b) non-executive directors of NHS authorities and trusts; and in what circumstances such payments are made.

Mr. Malone: No such payments have been made since the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney) to my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, North-West (Mr. Stern) on 16 February 1993, column 164. Such payments may be made to the chairman of a national health service authority in exceptional circumstances by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. No such provision exists for non-executive members of authorities or for chairmen or non-executive members of NHS trusts.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the procedures adopted in relation to in-contract settlements for former NHS trust chief executives.

Mr. Malone: The Department has issued guidance—TEL(94)3—which sets out what is expected of national health service trusts in providing for contractual termination settlements in respect of chief executives and senior managers.

NHS Treatment of Prisoners

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what different arrangements exist for the billing and funding of the outside treatment of prisoners with (a) mental illness and (b) physical illness;

(2) what assessment she has made of the effectiveness of the purchaser-provider split between health authorities in respect of patients who are imprisoned; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Responsibility for meeting the costs of treatment provided to prisoners in national health service accident and emergency units is met by the district in which the hospital is located. Otherwise responsibility for outside treatment falls to the health authority in the prisoner's usual district of residence, determined by the address at which they were resident immediately before detention. Where that cannot be determined satisfactorily, responsibility falls to the district in which the offence, or alleged offence, in respect of which the prisoner is detained was committed. There is no difference between the arrangements for funding treatment of mental and physical illness.

Purchasing authorities are required in their strategic and development plans to take account of the health care needs of all those who are normally resident in their district. This will include the needs of people who are in prison and who may require care and treatment in the NHS. These arrangements are subject to the normal monitoring process undertaken by the NHS Executive.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision the NHS provides for those prisoners suffering from mental illness too severe to be dealt with in prison but not severe enough to warrant incarceration in a Rampton-level unit.

Mr. Bowis: Prisoners who are transferred to national health service hospitals under provisions of the Mental Health Act 1983 may be admitted to general psychiatric hospitals, specialist medium-secure units, or one of the three special hospitals. My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary will name the hospital on a transfer direction following recommendations made to him by two medical practitioners who will have assessed the prisoner and advised on the level of security required.

Health Care, Burton on Trent

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the improvements to health care provision in Burton on Trent and district since the introduction of the health reforms in 1991.

Mr. Sackville: I am aware of the excellent performance by national health service hospitals within the Burton on Trent area and I am sure that my hon. and learned Friend will wish to join me in congratulating them on their successes since the reforms were introduced in 1991. These include:

Burton Hospitals NHS Trust being awarded the charter mark in October 1994 by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

12 new consultants employed at Burton Hospital NHS Trust, an increase of over 25 per cent., all funded from internally generated savings.

In 1992 Premier Health NHS Trust opened a 10 place day unit for the mentally ill, the Horace Pritchard Home, in a joint project with social services.

Burton Fundholding Group set up: fourth wave consortium of 13 practices in nine funds representing 85,000 patients in the Burton area. Total budget £14.5 million.

Burton Hospitals NHS Trust continues to reduce waiting list. At the end of January 56 patients were waiting over nine months. This is expected to be nil by March.

In April Premier Health NHS Trust are expecting to open the £700,000 Margaret Stanhope Centre on the Burton district hospital site to replace the old Harry Jones in-patient psychiatric unit and Belvedere resource centre.

AIDS

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons the item concerned with fostering a climate of understanding and compassion, discouraging discrimination and safeguarding confidentiality, as set out in section D.14 of "The Health of the Nation", 1992, has been dropped from the review of "The Health of the Nation"—"One Year On", 1993; and what policy changes underlie this change.

Mr. Sackville: When the AIDS epidemic began in the United Kingdom, the Government dedicated considerable efforts to combating discrimination, not least through the general anti-discrimination legislation. The UK's record is well respected internationally on this. From the London declaration of 1988 to the Paris summit of 1994, the Government have re-emphasised their continuing commitment to discouraging discrimination on this front.

That still underlies each element of the strategy which covers prevention, diagnosis, treatment and care, monitoring surveillance and research, and international action.

Health and Inequality

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evaluation she has made of the report published by the department of social policy at the university of Newcastle on "Health and Inequality: the Northern Region 1981 to 1991".

Mr. Sackville: The issues raised in the report are under consideration by the Chief Medical Officer's sub-group looking at variations in health. The group is due to report in spring 1995 on how the Department of Health and the national health service can effectively tackle ethnic, geographical, socio-economic and gender variations in health in the five "Health of the Nation" key areas. Work is progressing in line with that timetable.

Family Networks

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what non-governmental agencies supporting family networks are funded by the Government; and what initiatives they are undertaking.

Mr. Bowis: The Government grant-aid the following voluntary organisations who support family networks:

Barnardos';
The Childrens Society;
Contact a Family;
Exploring Parenthood;
Family Centre Network;
Family Rights Group;
Family Support Network;
Family Services Units;
Family Welfare Association;
Gingerbread;
Grandparents Federation;
National Children's Homes Action For Children;
National Council for One Parent Families; Parent Line;
Parent Link; Parent Network;
Parents At Work;
Pre-school Learning Alliance
Save the Children Fund;
The National Stepfamily Association.

These organisations support self-help networks of families or parents, networks of family centres providing services to families and networks of research into family support. The Department of Health spends about £5 million annually supporting these and other family organisations which are not explicitly networks.

"Take Our Daughters to Work"

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what support (a) she and (b) the NHS is giving to "Take our Daughters to Work" campaign on 27 April.

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is participating in the "Take our Daughters to Work" campaign. She will be accompanied by a schoolgirl from her constituency on 27 April. As the largest employer of women in Europe, with good examples of women working successfully at all levels of the organisation, this initiative offers an opportunity positively to promote careers in the national health service to potential future employees and a number of NHS authorities and trust have indicated their support for the campaign.

Solvent Abuse

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have died from solvent and volatile substance abuse in each year since 1985.

Mr. Bowis: The information is shown in the table:

Years	Deaths
1985	117
1986	102
1987	115
1988	137
1989	113
1990	151
1991	122
1992	79

Prescriptions

Mr. Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the categories of illnesses currently exempt from prescription costs.

Mr. Malone: People are exempt from national health service prescription charges if they hold a valid exemption certificate issued by a family health services authority on the grounds that they have one or more of the following medical conditions–

Permanent fistula, including caecostomy, colostomy, laryngostomy, ileostomy or urostomy, requiring continuous surgical dressings or an appliance;
Forms of hypoadrenalism, including Addison's disease, for which specific substitution therapy is essential;
Diabetes insipidus and other forms of hypopituitarism;
Diabetes mellitus except where treatment is by diet alone;
Hypoparathyroidism;
Myasthenia gravis;
Myxoedema, or other conditions where supplemental thyroid hormone is necessary;
Epilepsy requiring continuous anti-convulsive therapy;
A continuing physical disability which prevents the patient from leaving home except with the help of another person.

Occupational Asthma

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate her Department has made of the cost to her Department of the treatment of occupational asthma for each year since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: None. The Department's information does not distinguish between types of asthma.

Basildon and Thurrock NHS Trust

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she received a copy of the letter from the medical director of the Basildon and Thurrock Hospital trust to all general practitioners, dated 7 February 1995, on difficulties experienced by hospitals recruiting doctors of SHO grade to staff accident and emergency departments; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not received a copy of such a letter.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the establishment of the accident and emergency department at Basildon hospital; and which of these posts are vacant.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Ian MacPherson, chairman of the Basildon and Thurrock General Hospitals National Health Service trust, for details.

Hospital Closures

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what mechanism there is within her Department centrally to collate information regarding the number of hospitals and accident and emergency departments that have been closed;

(2) how many planned closures of accident and emergency units have been rejected by community health councils since 1991; and if she will list those that have subsequently not been put into effect;

(3) how many hospital closures in England have taken place following objection to a proposed closure from a community health council since January 1993;

(4) what information is provided to her Department by district health authorities, trusts, regional health authorities and the national health service executive on accident and emergency department closures;

(5) how many accident and emergency departments are currently threatened with closure;

(6) if she will list the hospitals or trusts in respect of which she has been formally consulted about partial or complete closure in the last two years.

Mr. Sackville: The Department does not routinely collect information on hospital or accident and emergency department closures. Information is available centrally on proposals to close, or change the use of, health service facilities which are referred to Ministers for decision following objections from a community health council. A list of such proposed closures referred to Ministers in the period 1992–94 will be placed in the Library.

Capital Projects

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the capital projects in the NHS with a works cost of over £1 million that have been completed since 1992 giving a brief description of each project.

Mr. Sackville: Information will be placed in the Library recording National Health Service capital building works projects with a works cost of over £1 million which have been completed since 1992.

Formby Health Authority

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement clarifying the circumstances surrounding the resignation of Dr. McMinn from the chairmanship of Formby health authority.

Mr. Malone: The reason given to Sir Donald Wilson, chairman of North West regional health authority, by Dr. Alex McMinn for resigning as chairman of the Southport and Formby National Health Service trust was increased pressure of business commitments.

Juice Plus

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 28 February, Official Report, column 497, if either of the two letters promoting Juice Plus were sent by hon. Members; and if any of the correspondence with officials at the Medicines Control Agency came from hon. Members.

Mr. Sackville: No.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Members of Parliament

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General if the status of a victim of crime as a Member of Parliament is treated as a public interest consideration in deciding whether to bring a prosecution against the alleged offender.

The Attorney-General: Whether the fact that a victim of crime is a Member of Parliament bears upon the public interest in prosecution of the alleged offender in any particular case will depend upon all the circumstances of that case. The Crown Prosecution Service may have in mind among other factors the matters in paragraph 6.4 of the code for Crown prosecutors—namely, whether the offence was committed against a person serving the public, or whether it was motivated by any form of discrimination against the victim's political views.

TREASURY

Manufacturing Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what has been the change in the real exchange rate measured in terms of relative export unit values for manufacturing against the deutschmark since the lowest day's average in February 1993;

(2) in what periods since 1975 British manufactures have been less competitive on price against those of the EEC than in the second quarter of 1994.

Mr. Nelson: Sterling exchange rates against the currencies of the EU can be found in "Financial Statistics", published monthly by the Central Statistical Office. Unit value export prices of goods for these countries can be found in "International Financial Statistics", published monthly by the International Monetary Fund. Unit value export prices of manufactures for the main manufacturing countries, which excludes some of the EU, can be found in the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics", published monthly by the Central Statistical Office. Data on unit value export prices of manufactures for all EU countries are not readily available.

Together, these data can be used to calculate changes over time in relative export prices for goods against Germany and all other EU countries, and relative export prices for manufactures against some EU countries, including Germany.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy that the Bank of England will not intervene in the foreign exchanges to prevent the pound sterling from falling against the deutschmark.

Mr. Nelson: The valuation of the pound is determined by transactions in the foreign exchange market. Movements in the exchange rate are considered as part of the general assessment of monetary conditions in setting monetary policy. The Government recognise the value of a stable exchange rate, but they do not set target rates. For good reasons of market management, the Government do not comment on intervention in foreign exchange markets.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the effect of the Government's exchange rate policies on the rate of unemployment since 1975.

Mr. Nelson: Levels of unemployment are influenced by a wide range of factors and it is not possible to isolate the effects of any single factor. The Government's policies are designed to promote sustained economic growth, secure jobs and rising prosperity, through structural policies to improve the long-term performance of the economy and a stable macroeconomic environment.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer why the nominal rate of exchange rose against the deutschmark between February 1993 and January 1994; what was the effect on the real exchange rate measured in terms of export unit values for manufactures; and what was the effect on the convergence criteria under Maastricht.

Mr. Nelson: The sterling-deutschmark exchange rate is determined by transactions in the foreign exchange markets. Data on the nominal exchange rate can be found in "Financial Statistics" published by the Central Statistical Office. Unit value export prices for the UK and Germany can be found in "International Financial Statistics" published monthly by the International Monetary Fund. Together, these data can be used to calculate the change in the real exchange rate with Germany between January 1993 and February 1994. It is impossible to quantify the effect on the change in the exchange rate on sterling export prices, and hence on to the real exchange rate. Movements in the sterling-deutschmark exchange rate over this period have no direct consequences for the Maastricht convergence criteria.

Inflation and Growth

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has for relaxing his inflation targets to allow a faster rate of growth; and what is his estimate of the growth rate for 1995 and 1996 compatible with an inflation target of 2.5 per cent. by the end of this Parliament.

Mr. Nelson: Permanently low inflation is the best way to ensure healthy growth in the economy. The Government's inflation target is designed to achieve this, and is set out in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1995–96", together with forecasts for output and inflation.

Retail Depositors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, as a condition of the guarantee given to retail depositors, the Government will require the high street banks and other financial institutions to hive off their retail operators in such a way that they cannot be affected financially by liabilities incurred in other parts of the enterprise as at present constituted as a condition of the guarantee given to retail depositors.

Mr. Nelson: The Government do not give a guarantee to depositors. The statutory deposit protection scheme, which is financed by the banks themselves, is to compensate depositors in the event of their bank failing. The arrangements governing the supervision of banks are set out elsewhere in the Banking Act 1987.

Financial Participation Schemes

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he intends to proceed with his proposal to make it obligatory for part-time directors as well as part-time employees to be included in tax-relieved employee financial participation schemes, included approved executive share option schemes.

Sir George Young: No. After further consideration, and in the light of representations from institutional investors, my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury proposes to introduce amendments at Report stage of the Finance Bill to ensure that the new provisions about the inclusion of part-time workers in tax-relieved employee financial participation schemes will apply only to part-time employees and not to part-time directors.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Byers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what overseas visits he or his Ministers have made since 1 July 1994; and what was the duration and cost of such visits and the organisations and groups that were met during the course of such visits.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 20 February 1995]: The overseas visits made since 1 July 1994 by Treasury Ministers, and the duration and cost of such visits and the organisations and groups that were met during the course of such visits, are as follows:

Balance of Payments Deficit

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the cost to the United Kingdom economy of financing the deficit in the current account of the balance of payments since 1986; and if it is the Government's policy to move the current account back into surplus to enable the debt to be repaid.

Mr. Nelson: Figures for the current and capital accounts of the UK's balance of payments are published by the Central Statistical Office annually in the Pink Book, with quarterly data available on the CSO database. Both are available through the Library of the House. Latest figures for the third quarter 1994 show the current account in surplus, with net investment income at record levels and the UK a net creditor. The key to maintaining this good performance is for the Government to deliver permanently low inflation and companies to keep costs under control, thereby ensuring that British industry remains competitive.

TRANSPORT

Light Dues

Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on light dues.

Mr. Norris: I am pleased to announce that light dues for 1995–96 will be frozen at the levels set in April 1993 for a second year in succession. I have decided to remove the supplementary roll-on/roll-off charge levied on tonnage in excess of 1,000 tonnes for any vessel whose liability is assessed by an international tonnage convention 1969 certificate. The surcharge will remain for any vessel unable for any reason to offer such a certificate. I have concluded that all other rates should remain unchanged.

I commend the general lighthouse authorities on their continuing achievement of efficiency savings.

Fuel Duty

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effect of a rise in fuel duty of 5 per cent. per year above the rate of inflation on car use and congestion.

Mr. Norris: The strategy to raise fuel duty by a minimum of 5 per cent. per annum is an important part of the Government's climate change programme to reduce the UK's carbon dioxide emissions to 1990 levels by the year 2000.

The forecast for the growth rate of traffic up to 2000 with these increases is much the same as in the Department's current national road traffic forecasts. This reflects the fact that the real price of fuel assumed in those forecasts is similar to that now expected, as the duty increase is offset to a large degree by a lower forecast for real oil prices.

The responsiveness of road use to fuel prices is believed to be low. As well as adjusting the mileage that they drive, road users have the choice of buying smaller, more fuel-efficient vehicles, and manufacturers have an incentive to supply them.

North London Line

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what will be the effect of the postponement of the North London line modernisation project on the introduction, or operation, of passenger and freight trains from France for destinations north of London.

Mr. Watts: Railtrack advises me that there has been no postponement of work on the North London line which would affect channel tunnel services.

Railtrack is currently carrying out a study to determine which of several route options through north London will be adopted for channel tunnel services north of London.

Diesel Train Emissions

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what monitoring has taken place of emissions from diesel trains.

Mr. Watts: Under section 79 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, it is the duty of district councils and London borough councils to inspect their areas from time to time to detect any statutory nuisances, including emissions from railway engines but excluding steam locomotives.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what plans he has to curb emissions from railway diesel engines.

Mr. Watts: It is a condition of the train operator's licence to produce an environmental policy, taking account of guidance from the rail regulator which I understand is in preparation. British Rail takes active steps to control exhaust emissions in sensitive locations. In some terminal stations and depots, provision of shore-based electrical supplies has greatly reduced the need for engines to idle. For new trains, better fuel consumption control has been incorporated in design specifications, together with automatic engine shut-off after a predetermined period.

Concessionary Fares (Epileptics)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the local authorities in the United Kingdom which include people with epilepsy who cannot drive for medical reasons within their concessionary fare schemes.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is not held centrally.

Urban Congestion

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration his Department has given to measures to decrease the current level of use of private motor vehicles in cities and conurbations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Local authorities are already able to introduce a wide range of measures to reduce urban congestion which they can tailor to the particular circumstances of their areas: for example, traffic management schemes, bus priority lanes, park-and-ride schemes and parking controls, all of which are the subject of departmental advice notes.

Two years ago, we introduced the "package approach" under which local authorities, individually or collectively, can obtain funding for strategic transport plans which encompass all forms of transport. Local authorities are now invited to bid for Government funds on the basis of multi-modal transport packages which take a strategic overview of transport needs and look beyond road-based options.

Planning policy guidance note No. 13, published jointly by the Departments of the Environment and of Transport, offers advice on the role which transport and land use planning policies can jointly play in reducing the need to travel.

Radioactive Fallout, Dounreay

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in full the results of the UK Atomic Energy Authority investigation into the radioactive fallout at Dounreay on 11 February; what assessment he has made of the effect of weather conditions on the level of risk; how far away any safety official was when exposed to radioactivity above the safe working level; whether any person sent to the contamination area wore respirators instead of sealed protective clothing; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 27 February 1995]: The incident is being investigated urgently. In line with normal practice, I understand that a report on the incident will be published in the Health and Safety Executive's quarterly statement of nuclear incidents at nuclear installations.

The waste disposal authorisations granted to the Atomic Energy Authority under the Radioactive Substances Acts include limits designed to protect the public no matter what the weather conditions prevailing at the time of a discharge. Inspectors from HM industrial pollution inspectorate have carried out their initial inquiries into the circumstances leading to the incident and I understand that they are satisfied that it did not cause any of the permitted atmospheric emission limits to be exceeded.

Investigation of workers' exposure issues lies with HM nuclear installations inspectorate. Its investigation will include such issues as whether the radiation exposure of individuals exceeded relevant limits and whether appropriate personnel protection was provided.

Sponsorship of the UKAEA is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the blow-out of radioactive dust at the Dounreay reprocessing plant in February.

Mr. Kynoch: On 11 February 1995, at the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority Dounreay site, a process plant was shut down and evacuated because of abnormal concentration of radioactivity in working areas within the plant. A formal investigation has been carried out by the UKAEA. The incident is being investigated by the nuclear inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive and HM industrial pollution inspectorate.

Nuclear Waste, Torness

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the cost to (a) his Department and (b) Scottish Nuclear of all aspects of the proposal to construct a dry store for waste nuclear fuel at Torness; and if he will give separately the figures for (i) the cost of designing the proposed installation and (ii) the public inquiry into the proposal.

Mr. Kynoch: The cost to the Scottish Office of arranging and conducting the public inquiry into the application by Scottish Nuclear Ltd. to construct a dry store at Torness was approximately £28,700. The cost to the company of the dry store project, including participation in the public inquiry, is a commercial matter for Scottish Nuclear.

Natural Disasters

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how section 155 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1986 is applied in practice in Scotland; what further scope he has to take further action under the section; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kynoch: Section 155 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 allows the Secretary of State to establish a scheme to give, with Treasury consent, financial assistance to one or more local authorities which have incurred expenditure in respect of immediate action to safeguard life or property, or to prevent suffering or severe inconvenience, arising from an emergency or disaster which involves destruction of or danger to life or property.

The main application of section 155 in Scotland has been the Bellwin scheme, under which grant is payable at the rate of 85 per cent. on current expenditure above a set threshold incurred by local authorities in responding to natural emergencies.

Nature Reserve Agreement

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for what reasons the management arrangement with Farquharson of Invercauld concerning Cairn Lochan estate fell into abeyance in 1986.

Sir Hector Monro: Negotiations took place between the Nature Conservancy Council and the estate about renewal of the nature reserve agreement which expired in 1986, but renewal could not be agreed. Details of negotiations are a private matter between the two parties involved.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each management arrangement in relation to national nature reserves, the person with whom the arrangement is made, the period of the arrangement and the cost.

Sir Hector Monro: The question could be answered only at disproportionate cost.

Pay Awards

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the cost to his Department's budget and to local authorities' self-financed expenditure in 1995–96 of implementing in full the recommendations of (a) the School Teachers' Review Body, (b) the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration and (c) the Review Body on Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine, assuming no changes in staff numbers.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton [holding answer 3 March 1995]: The School Teachers' Review Body is responsible only for teachers in England and Wales. Statutory responsibility for determination of pay and conditions of service for teachers in Scotland lies with the Scottish Joint Negotiating Committee. The Government have accepted the recommendations of the Review Bodies on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration and on Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine. The 1995–96 settlement for the NHS in Scotland provides for a cash increase of £143.2 million, or 3.6 per cent. increase. The cost of pay increases will be dependent on the outcome of negotiations at local level.

Hospital External Audits

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many external audits carried out upon hospitals by the Royal College of Surgeons or a similar body in (a) Renfrewshire, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole in each of the past 10 years have led to disciplinary measures being taken by him; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many external audits have been carried out under the auspices of the Royal College of Surgeons or some similar body, upon hospitals in (a) Renfrewshire, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland in the past 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 March 1995]: The Secretary of State is not aware of any external clinical audits carried out under the auspices of the Royal College of Surgeons or a similar body in hospitals in Renfrewshire, Strathclyde or Scotland in the past 10 years. Clinical audit is an education process and there is quite a separate and distinct machinery for disciplinary procedures which are a matter for employing authorities. The Medical Royal Colleges carry out accreditation inspections of hospitals but these are solely for the purpose of approving training posts.

School Examinations

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his letter of 27 February to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, (a) what proposals he has to make changes in the system of written work in relation to physical education examinations in schools and (b) what factors led him to reject the explanation put forward in relation to the two pupils accused of cheating from a school named in correspondence with the hon. Member for Linlithgow.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 March 1995]: The Scottish Examination Board keeps all its assessment arrangements under review and has decided that revised procedures will be in place for written work in standard grade physical education assignments for 1996 onwards.

Responsibility for decisions in relation to assessment for awards under the Scottish Certificate of Education rests with the Scottish Examination Board, which carried out a thorough review of the case in question.

Ayrshire Child Abuse Case

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the cumulative cost of all legal aid to date to the families in the Ayrshire child abuse case; what is his estimate of the likely total cost; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 March 1995]: Six legal aid certificates have been granted in respect of this case. Payments to date amount to £538,000. The total costs may be subject to scrutiny by the Auditor of Court and cannot yet be accurately assessed. The Scottish Legal Aid Board has, however, estimated that they may fall in the range £1.5 million to £2 million.

Caledonian MacBrayne

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what amount of revenue deficit grant he proposes to make available to Caledonian MacBrayne in 1995–96.

Mr. Lang: Subject to approval of the estimates, I propose to make available to Caledonian MacBrayne in 1995–96 revenue deficit grant amount to £8.3 million.

The proposed amount reflects an increased requirement for grant compared with the 1994–95 level and takes into account the effect of the proposed closure of the company's Kyle of Lochalsh-Kyleakin service when the Skye bridge opens later in 1995. the costs associated with the introduction, also later in 1995, of a major new vessel on the Ullapool to Stornoway service and the costs of compliance with additional safety requirements on vessels.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 7 March.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 7 March 1995.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Innovation and Technology Transfer

Mr. Heald: To ask the Prime Minister what progress has been made with the review announced in the White Paper, "Scotland in Union", of the scope for transferring from the Department of Trade and Industry to the Scottish and Welsh Offices responsibility for measures which encourage industrial innovation and technology transfer in Scotland and Wales.

The Prime Minister: The review has been completed. It concluded that responsibility for the Smart and Spur schemes, which provide grants for the development of new products and processes and for design services in Scotland and Wales, should be transferred. In addition, it has now been agreed that responsibility for new measures to support innovation locally will be transferred to the Secretary of State for Scotland as soon as the administrative arrangements have been completed.

Civil Servants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister whether he will instruct the Civil Service Commissioners to advertise for open competition at the previous rate of remuneration the post of any permanent secretary who wishes to take advantage of the recent pay award.

The Prime Minister: No.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Conference

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if he will be attending the conference on the future of the non-proliferation treaty to be held in New York in April and May.

The Prime Minister: No. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary plans to attend on 18 April.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 1 March, Official Report, columns 580-581, if he will make a statement as to the grounds on which the charges incurred by individual airlines under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987 are treated as commercially confidential.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Administration of the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act involves the Home Office in sensitive discussions with individual carriers. These are conducted on a commercial in confidence basis. To disclose the nature of the discussions, including the level of charges, would represent a breach of that confidentiality, and could jeopardise both the carriers' commercial operations, and our own debt recovery programme.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what police records still exist in relation to the security of the Pan Am Clipper, Maid of the Seas, at Heathrow airport on 21 December 1988.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 6 March 1995]: The inquiries conducted by officers of the Metropolitan police concerning the security of the aircraft Maid of the Seas, at Heathrow airport on 21 December 1988 in relation to the Lockerbie case, and the records of those inquiries, form part of the case against the two Libyans who have been accused of this crime. It has been made clear that, as in any other case, it is not appropriate for the investigating or prosecuting authorities to give details of the evidence while criminal proceedings are pending.

Ethnic Minority Funding

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the section 11 (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful bids showing in the case of the approved figure as a percentage of the bid in each case.

Mr. Nicholas Baker [holding answer 28 February 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 22 February 1995 Official Report, columns 228-32, in which I set out the level of grant sought by each applicant under the recent section 11 bidding round, and to the reply which my right hon. and learned Friend gave to the hon. Member for Edmonton (Dr. Twinn) on 28 February 1995, Official Report, columns 541-45, in which he listed the grant budget allocation for 1995-96 for each successful applicant. Table (a) shows, in respect of each successful applicant, the level of budget allocation for 1995-96 expressed as a percentage of grant sought for that year, all on the basis of November 1994 prices which applicants were asked to use in preparing their bids, and subject in some instances to arithmetical adjustments to correct an applicant's original calculations. Table (b) lists those applicants whose bids were unsuccessful.

Protection of Animals Legislation

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letter of 19 January from the hon. Member for Ealing, North regarding Government policy towards the Protection of Animals (Amendment) Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State wrote to the hon. Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on 2 March.

Al Fayed Brothers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many items of correspondence were received from the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton) by Ministers in his Department on issues relating to the interests of the Al Fayeds; on what dates they were received; and how many were replied to.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: It is not the practice to disclose information about communications between hon. Members and Ministers.

EDUCATION

Administrative Costs

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what were the total administrative costs of her Department for 1993–94 and 1994–95.

Mr. Boswell: Total administrative costs, including capital, for the Department in 1993–94 were £88 million. The comparable forecast outturn figures for 1994–95 is £92 million.

Civil Servants

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total number of civil servants employed in her Department in 1993–94; and what is the expected figure for 1994–95.

Mr. Boswell: The actual outturn figure for 1993–94 was 2,101 full-time equivalent staff. The estimated figure for 1994–95 is 2,097.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many people were employed in the school curriculum branch of her Department in each year since 1992–93; and what were the total operating costs of the branch in each of those years.

Mr. Boswell: The school curriculum branch of the Department came into existence on 1 April 1994 as part of a wider reorganisation within the Department. For 1994–95 full-time equivalent staff in post are expected to average 81, with estimated running costs of £2.3 million. Because of the reorganisation, it is not possible to give comparable figures for earlier years.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total staff pay bill for her Department for 1993–94 and what is the expected amount for 1994–95.

Mr. Boswell: The total staff pay bill for the Department in 1993–94 was £51 million. The comparable forecast outturn figure for 1994–95 is £52 million.

Ofsted School Inspections

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the average cost of Ofsted inspections for (a) secondary, (b) primary and (c) special schools for each group size of school in 1994–95.

Mr. Forth: This is a matter for Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools, who heads the independent Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Mr. Chris Woodhead to write to the hon. Member.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Decommissioning Scheme

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has for compensating fishermen who lose their jobs when fishing vessels are decommissioned under his scheme.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 6 March, Official Report, column 34.

Milk Hygiene

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which division of his Department is responsible for the implementation of milk hygiene inspection.

Mr. Jack: ADAS, an executive agency of the Ministry and the Welsh Office, is responsible for hygiene inspections on dairy farms in England and Wales. This work is carried out under the terms of a memorandum of understanding with the Ministry's milk and milk products division and the relevant division in the Welsh Office.

Fishermen (Retirement)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will support the Commission's proposal for an early retirement scheme for fishermen at the forthcoming council meeting.

Mr. Jack: No such proposal has yet been made to the Council.

Abattoirs

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he intends to implement the two-year extension to the deadline for abattoirs to meet EU structural requirements; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: The deadline for abattoirs to meet EU structural requirements remains 31 December 1995. The December Agriculture Council agreed in principle a package of amendments to the fresh meat directive which cannot be formally adopted until the European Parliament's opinion has been delivered and considered. That package would confirm the 31 December 1995 deadline, but would allow member states to extend it in exceptional circumstances where plants which are in the process of upgrading cannot complete the work for reasons outside their control. If these provisions are adopted, the Government will therefore consider exercising a small degree of flexibility only in exceptional circumstances.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the capacities for EU certified slaughterhouses in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Browning: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 16 January 1995 to the hon. Member for North Cornwall (Mr. Tyler), Official Report, column 364.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many abattoirs there were in 1993 and 1994; and how many of these met European Community standards.

Mrs. Browning: All abattoirs are licensed in accordance with the terms of European Community directives laying down the hygiene, operation supervision and structural conditions of abattoirs, so that they all meet European Community standards.

At the end of 1993, there were 433 licensed red meat abattoirs in England of which 60 were fully approved to trade throughout the Community; 187 were full throughput premises with temporary derogations; and 186 were low throughput premises. At the end of 1994, there were 424 licensed red meat abattoirs in England of which 78 were fully approved; 154 had temporary derogations; and 192 were low throughput. Low throughput premises and premises with temporary derogations are approved to trade on the national market.

Quarantine Kennels

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration he has given to permitting the independent inspection of quarantine kennels.

Mrs. Browning: Licensed quarantine kennels, all of which are privately owned, are already inspected quarterly by MAFF veterinary officers. They may be accompanied by another party authorised by them and assisting them in their duties.

DEFENCE

Porton Down

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will outline the past and present procedures followed by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down to monitor the continued health of volunteers who have taken part in experiments;

(2) for what period of time the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down continues to monitor the health of volunteers after the end of experiments in which they were involved.

Mr. Soames: These are matters for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Derek Fatchett, dated 7 March 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Defence asking if he will outline the past and present procedures followed by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down to monitor the continued health of volunteers who have taken part in experiments and for what period of time Porton Down continues to monitor the health of volunteers after the end of studies in which they were involved, have been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the UK Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. In order to carry out this work, it is necessary to use Service volunteers to:

a. assess the ability of Service personnel to function with new equipment and procedures,

b. develop medical countermeasures to protect Service personnel, and

c. evaluate the effects of very low and medically safe concentrations of CW agents on the ability of unprotected personnel to operate normally.

The purpose of the volunteer studies programme is to ensure that any protective measure is acceptable from a military point of view and is safe before it is recommended for introduction into service. Such measures need to be evaluated first in the safety of a laboratory or hospital environment, with full medical and scientific back-up at hand.

3. The principles of how volunteer studies are to be conducted are enshrined by international agreement in the Helsinki declaration. Further detailed guidance has been issued by the Royal College of Physicians (London). Volunteer studies at CBDE Porton Down are overseen by an independent panel of experts who form the CBDE Ethics Committee. The role of the Ethics Committee is to ensure the safety of the subjects and to safeguard the scientific staff who carry out the human studies from criticism which may be informed or otherwise. They evaluate each protocol well in advance and only approve a protocol if they are satisfied that there will be no harm to the health of the volunteers. Human studies at CBDE are conducted with volunteers drawn from the three Armed Services, namely from amongst the men and women we seek to protect. The volunteers apply in response to requests officially promulgated months in advance.

4. Before any exposure of volunteers to drugs or other substances takes place, it is explicit duty of the Medical Office (MO) assigned to each study to assess risks, and recommend a study design so as to minimise them. This is done by preparing a detailed protocol which is first scrutinised by an in-house Committee, and finally by the independent CBDE Ethics Committee. Exposure of volunteers where side effects last longer than the one or two weeks stay of the volunteer on site are never acceptable.

5. Service volunteers on arrival at CBDE are first given a medical examination to determine if they are healthy and fit to take part in the study. The study is explained to them in lay terms by a military officer who is not involved in the study and it is made clear to the volunteer that they can withdraw from the study at any stage without any explanation being required. On leaving CBDE on completion of the study the volunteers are given a further medical examination.

6. Service volunteers return to their units on completion of the study, where they are, medically, the responsibility of the unit Medical Officer. There is no history of Service doctors in their units seeking advice from CBDE Porton Down on any subsequent illnesses that may have been reported by volunteers who have been exposed to agent during studies at CBDE.

7. Some volunteers have volunteered to return repeatedly to CBDE for different studies at irregular intervals. In such cases CBDE invariably refer to the volunteer's previous records. These opportunities, which are spontaneous and sporadic, to examine medically the volunteers have shown no evidence of any change to the health of the volunteers as a result of their earlier participation at CBDE, provides assurance that volunteers have not suffered any harm to their health.

8. From time to time after specific studies, those volunteers that participated in them are called back to CBDE for a further set of tests or measurements in order to check on the consistency of the method used in the tests or measurement and to demonstrate its invariance with time. As an example, in one study six volunteers were recalled twice so that the consistency of the method used in a particular study could be checked and in another study seven volunteers were recalled for the same reason. Such recalls can take place as much as one or two years after the original study. In all these cases there was no evidence that the health of the volunteers had changed or been harmed as a result of their participation in the study at CBDE Porton Down.

9. Health checks are carried out regularly on Service personnel and the frequency of such checks is determined by the age of the Serviceman or Servicewoman and if any need has arisen for more regular health review such as diagnosis of some pathological condition such as hypertension. Similarly, postings to military duties requiring a very high standard of physical and mental well-being such as tour of duty in the submarine service will necessitate further medical checks for the individual concerned. In addition, the Service medical records of some part volunteers have been scrutinised from time to time, and the conclusion drawn that their health and sickness record is in no way different from a control group.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many human volunteers have been involved in experiments at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down since 1965; if he will give the number of volunteers for each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Derek Fatchett, dated 7 March 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking how many human volunteers have been involved in experiments at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down since 1965; if he will give the number of volunteers for each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

No studies involving volunteers are carried out unless there is a clear military need and a detailed protocol has been reviewed and approved by an independent Ethics Committee in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Royal College of Physicians.

3. The number of Service volunteers who have participated in studies during the period 1965–1994 was about 5,400 and the number in each of the last five years for which figures are available were as follows:

1991: 50
1992: 112
1993: 64
1994: 104

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the type of experiments carried out on human volunteers at Porton Down in the last three years for which information is available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

No studies involving volunteers are carried out unless there is a clear military need and a detailed protocol has been reviewed and approved by an independent Ethics Committee in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Royal College of Physicians.

3. The types of studies which have been carried out over the past three years have been to assess the performance of Service personnel whilst wearing individual protective equipment (IPE), the efficacy and effectiveness of experimental IPE using simulants, and the evaluation of possible side effects on military performance from the administration of improved medical countermeasures.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the rates of payment for volunteers taking part in experiments at Porton Down in each year since 1979.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

b. develop medical countermeasures to protect Service personnel, and

c. evaluate the effects of very low and medically safe concentrations of CW agents on the ability of unprotected personnel to operate normally.

No studies involving volunteers are carried out unless there is a clear military need and a detailed protocol has been reviewed and approved by an independent Ethics Committee in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Royal College of Physicians.

3. Service volunteers receive compensation for the inconvenience associated with individual tests carried out within each study. The number of tests in any study vary between about a minimum of 100 to a maximum of 400 as studies vary between three days to four week in duration.

4. The rates of payment per test over the past five years are as follows:

1991: £1.50
1992: £1.60
1993: £1.62
1994: £1.66

The current rate of payment per test is £1.70. The total amount of compensation ranges from about £170 to £500 and is subject to tax.

5. Our records are not maintained in such a way as to easily provide the rates of payment for volunteers who have taken part in studies at Porton Down in each year since 1979 and to seek this information would involve disproportionate effort and cost.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many deaths have been recorded as a direct result of experiments carried out on volunteers at Porton Down.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Derek Fatchett, dated 7 March 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him how many deaths have been recorded as a direct result of experiments carried out on volunteers at Porton Down, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the UK Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. In order to carry out this work, it is necessary to use Service volunteers to:

a. assess the ability of Service personnel to function with new equipment and procedures,

b. develop medical countermeasures to protect Service personnel, and

c. evaluate the effects of very low and medically safe concentrations of CW agents on the ability of unprotected personnel to operate normally.

No studies involving volunteers are carried out unless there is a clear military need and a detailed protocol has been reviewed and approved by an independent Ethics Committee in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Royal College of Physicians.

3. Since the start of the Service Volunteer programme in the 1920s, there has been a single fatality in 1953 as reported in the Official Report (9 June 1953, Volume 516, Col 7-8 and 22 June 1953, Volume 516, Col 105) when Leading Aircraftsman Ronald Maddison died from the effects of asphyxia after taking part in a trial at the then Chemical Defence Experimental Establishment at Porton Down. A detailed inquiry was held into the circumstances and following this inquiry which was carried out by eminent independent scientists, new guidelines were laid down to ensure the safety of Service volunteers. In the subsequent 40 years, there has been no fatality nor has there been any evidence that any Service volunteers have suffered any deterioration in their health as a result of participating in studies at Porton Down.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received regarding people who have suffered ill health subsequent to taking part in experiments at Porton Down in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Derek Fatchett, dated 7 March 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what representations he has received regarding people who have suffered ill health subsequent to taking part in experiments at Porton Down in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. In order to carry out this work, it is necessary to use Service volunteers to:

a. assess the ability of Service personnel to function with new equipment and procedures,

b. develop medical countermeasures to protect Service personnel, and

c. evaluate the effects of very low and medically safe concentrations of CW agents on the ability of unprotected personnel to operate normally.

No studies involving volunteers are carried out unless there is a clear military need and a detailed protocol has been reviewed and approved by an independent Ethics Committee in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Royal College of Physicians.

We have received enquiries from a variety of sources over the past year relating to the studies in which volunteers participated. We have received and responded to 13 Parliamentary Enquiries, 2 enquiries from General Practitioners, 10 from the War Pensions Agency and 9 direct from volunteers.

There is no evidence over the past 40 years to suggest that Service volunteers who have participated in studies at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down have suffered any harm to their health. Indeed, some volunteers have volunteered to participate in studies at CBDE on more than one occasion and some have also been recalled so that measurements could be checked. volunteers are medically examined on arrival at CBDE Porton Down and are informed that they may leave the study at any stage without giving any explanation. They are also medically examined at the end of their stay at CBDE Porton Down to ensure that they are fit before they return to their units. In addition, there is no history of service doctors in their units seeking advice from CBDE Porton Down on any subsequent illnesses that may have been reported by volunteers who have been exposed to agent. There is therefore no reason to suggest that volunteers have suffered any harm to their health.

5. The medical records of the Servicemen are provided on request to their General Practitioner as is information from CBDE Porton Down on the studies in which they participated. This information is provided to the medical practitioners as they are best placed to judge if any of the experience throughout the Service career of the individual has any relevance to their current medical conditions.

6. It is important to recognise that the human body is remarkably effective in dealing with toxic pollutants to which we are exposed in our daily lives and the participation in a study at CBDE Porton Down involving a short exposure to chemical warfare agent has to be considered in the context of whole life exposures to other toxic pollutants.

7. Finally, the Ministry of Defence is very grateful to all Service personnel who have served as volunteers in studies at CBDE Porton Down as their participation has been vital to ensuring that the members of the UK Armed Forces are provided with the most effective protective measures possible against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. Such studies are vital to the defence of the realm and we are very grateful to the Servicemen who have helped achieve the high standards of protection that are available for the members of the UK Armed Forces.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of state for Defence how many (a) prisoners of war, (b) physically disabled people, (c) people with learning difficulties and (d) people with a mental illness have been used in experiments at (i) Porton Down or (ii) other MOD establishments since 1965; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Derek Fatchett, dated 7 March 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking how many (a) prisoners of war, (b) physically disabled people, (c) people with learning difficulties, and (d) people with a mental illness have been used in experiments at: (i) Porton Down, or (ii) other MOD establishments since 1965; and if he will make a statement, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the UK Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. In order to carry out this work, it is necessary to use Service volunteers to:

(a) assess the ability of Service personnel to function with new equipment and procedures,

(b) develop medical countermeasures to protect Service personnel, and

(c) evaluate the effects of very low and medically safe concentrations of CW agents on the ability of unprotected personnel to operate normally.

No studies involving volunteers are carried out unless there is a clear military need and a detailed protocol has been reviewed and approved by an independent Ethics Committee in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Royal College of Physicians.

3. Human studies at CBDE are conducted with volunteers drawn from the three Armed Services, namely from amongst the men and women we seek to protect. No prisoners of war, physically disabled volunteers, volunteers with learning difficulties or volunteers with a mental illness has participated in studies by the Ministry of Defence.

4. In addition, to ensure that individual Service personnel are both physically and mentally fit before they participate in the human volunteer programme at Porton Down, their Service medical documents are reviewed at CBDE before the volunteers attend for studies. No volunteer is accepted for studies at CBDE with a medical history which indicates a physical disability, a mental illness or a learning difficulty. Finally, all volunteers on arrival at CBDE Porton

Down are given an initial medical examination to ensure that they are fit before they participate in the study.

Boarding School Allowance

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the cost of private education for children of service men funded by his Ministry for each year since 1979.

Mr. Soames: The total cost of boarding school allowance paid by my Department in each year since 1979 is as follows:

Date	Amount £
1979–80	31,010,000
1980–81	47,240,000
1981–82	59,960,000
1982–83	66,380,000
1983–84	72,650,000
1984–85	77,870,000
1985–86	85,000,000
1986–87	93,600,000
1987–88	106,580,000
1988–89	107,100,000
1989–90	104,510,000
1990–91	105,610,000
1991–92	115,350,000
1992–93	116,720,000
1993–94	113,610,000

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost limit for each pupil cost per annum in respect of private education of children of servicemen funded by his Ministry.

Mr. Soames: Boarding school allowance is paid up to a maximum annual limit, and service parents in receipt are expected to make a contribution of 10 per cent. to the fees. The maximum annual limits admissible for 1994–1995 are as follows:

Rate	Per annum £
Junior	5,358
Senior	6,579
SENA[1]	8,772

[1] Special Educational Needs Allowance

Where fees are higher than these maximum rates of boarding school allowance, parents are expected to make up any shortfall themselves.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) the schools and (b) the number of pupils at each for whom his Department has paid fees for each year since 1990, and if he will give the total number of pupils thus funded in each year since 1990.

Mr. Soames: A copy of the most recently complied list of schools which are admissible for parents of service children to claim boarding school allowance was placed in the Library of the House on 16 January 1995. This list includes information on the number of service children attending each school in June 1994. This information is not collected annually, and is therefore not held in this format for each year since 1990. The only additional data available pertains to 1992 and the accuracy of this information can no longer be validated. The total number of pupils for whom boarding school allowance was claimed in each year since 1990 is as follows:

1991–1992: 16,208
1992–1993: 15,120
1993–1994; 12,567

Abortion

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what grounds for termination of pregnancy were assumed to exist when a service woman was told by the Army that this was one of three options open to her under which her pregnancy need not have required her to be discharged.

Mr. Soames: The provisions of the Abortion Act 1967 apply to service women as well as to their civilian counterparts; and grounds for termination of pregnancy must be within those specified under the Act, as certified by two medical practitioners in accordance with the procedures laid down under the Act. Before the services introduced maternity leave, a pregnant service woman would have had three options other than seeking termination of pregnancy. These were (a) choosing to leave the service on pregnancy, without returning in the near future; (b) seeking re-enlistment after giving birth, having made arrangements as a working mother for the care of her child; (c) seeking re-enlistment after giving birth, having had the child adopted.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Career Breaks

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many (a) men and (b) women applied for career breaks in his Department or its agencies; and how many have had their employment terminated in the last five years.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department of National Heritage was created only in April 1992 and the Royal Parks agency in April 1993. The Historic Royal Palaces agency was created in October 1989. Within these time frames, the latest available figures show that seven staff employed by my Department and its two agencies have applied for career breaks. All of those who applied were women and none have had their employment terminated.

Tourism

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how he proposes to encourage the extension of tourism to areas of England which have not significantly benefited from it in the past.

Mr. Dorrell: The English tourist board will allocate £7 million in this financial year to the regional tourist boards, which are responsible for the promotion of tourism in their areas.

Tourism projects are also eligible for support from the European regional development fund in selected areas and from the single regeneration budget.

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the average annual rate of growth in expenditure on tourism in each of the member states of the European Union between 1980 and the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: The available figures for the average annual growth of international tourism receipts in member states of the European Union between 1980 and 1992 is as follows:

	Percentage
Austria	7.2
Denmark	9.1
Finland	5.3
France	9.7
Germany	4.4
Greece	5.4
Ireland	10.8
Italy	8.4
Netherlands	9.6
Portugal	10.3
Spain	10.1
Sweden	10.2
United Kingdom	5.9
Belgium and Luxembourg	7.0

Separate figures for Belgium and Luxembourg are not available.

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he expects the publication of the European Union Green Paper on tourism.

Mr. Dorrell: My Department has been informed that the European Commission plans to approve the text of the Green Paper during March. No publication date has yet been set.

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the potential of the Internet to promote international awareness of United Kingdom tourism.

Mr. Dorrell: My Department provides funding to the British Tourist Authority which is responsible for promoting international awareness of the United Kingdom as a tourist destination. The BTA undertakes detailed assessments of marketing opportunities abroad. That work has not as yet included an assessment of the potential of Internet.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment his Department has made of the loss to the tourism industry within Great Britain of the withdrawal of all Motorail trains and the loss of sleeping car services between London, Carlisle and Fort William, and between Plymouth and Glasgow.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 3 March 1995]: My Department has not made such an assessment. However, the Director of Passenger Rail Franchising will take into account representations on the economic benefits of all ScotRail services in his consultations on the passenger service requirement for ScotRail later this year.

Digital Television

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he intends to set out the framework for the operation of digital television services; and if he will list those representations that he has received on this matter since 14 July 1994.

Mr. Dorrell: We hope to set out later this year the framework that we propose for the operation of digital television services. I have received no representations, but my officials are in touch with the major broadcasters and others who have expressed an interest.

Independent National Radio Services

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how he plans to ensure quality in independent national radio from 2000 onwards, when the three existing licences will be re-awarded; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Under the Broadcasting Act 1990, the licensing of independent national radio services is a matter for the Radio Authority, which is required, with respect to the licensing of independent radio services, to facilitate the provision of licensed services, which taken as a whole are of high quality.

Mr. Roy Tutty

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what salary Mr. Roy Tutty will receive for his secondment to the tourism division of the Department; and what will be the cost to the Exchequer of this appointment.

Mr. Dorrell: Mr Tutty's salary is a matter for Forte plc and Mr. Tutty to determine. My Department will make a contribution to his salary equivalent to the amount paid to a civil servant in the grade 5 pay range.

Television Licences

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the total revenue from television licences in 1994 in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Scotland.

Mr. Dorrell: Total television licence revenue in the United Kingdom for the financial year 1993–94 was £1,640 million, of which an estimated £144 million was collected in Scotland.

Children's Play

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has for his Department to fund directly the National Voluntary Council for Children's Play.

Mr. Dorrell: My Department currently has no budget for children's play. I understand that the NVCCP has submitted an application to the Sports Council trust company for an extension of its present grant in to 1995–96. In relation to funding for children's play from October 1995, I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) on 2 March 1995, Official Report, column 640.

Budget Accommodation

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the progress of his study of budget accommodation.

Mr. Dorrell: My Department is drawing up plans for a benchmarking initiative, the objective of which is to help accommodation providers to raise both profitability and standards of service. We are working in close co-operation with the Confederation of British Industry on this project. The first step will be to discuss the outline plans with a number of industry representatives, following which I hope to be able to make an early announcement of the full details, including the timetable and methodology.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Grameen Trust

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for funding the Grameen trust training programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We are currently considering the Grameen trust's request for funding for its training programme.

World Bank

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further measures his Department has taken to ensure that the World bank abides by its own operational guidelines.

Mr. Baldry: We expect the World bank to maintain effective control systems—including internal review, internal audit, evaluation and the inspection panel—to ensure adherence to operational policies; and will continue to keep under review the scope for improvements in these systems.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the review of the World bank's revised disclosure of information policy took place as planned; what further improvements the review indicated were necessary; and what measures he is taking to implement improvements.

Mr. Baldry: A report reviewing the World bank's experience in implementing its revised information disclosure policy was completed in January 1995. The report concludes that the bank has made substantial progress, and notes that it is continuing to intensify its efforts in two areas in particular: (i) staff training; and (ii) ensuring that available information is accessible to people in borrowing countries, especially those in project areas. We shall monitor the bank's efforts and make suggestions for improvements as necessary. We welcome the fact that the bank is also drawing on the views of non-governmental organisations to help identify problem areas and possible solutions. The report "Disclosure policy retrospective" is available through the bank's public information centre.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what occasions the Government have withheld funds from any part of the World bank because agreed conditions for disbursal had not been met; if he will give details; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Circumstances have not arisen in which we deemed it necessary to withhold funds on those grounds.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further steps the World bank is taking to evaluate the effectiveness of its poverty alleviation activities; whether the recommendations of previous evaluations have been implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The World bank prepares an annual report on progress in implementing its poverty reduction strategy. The most recent report—"Poverty reduction and the World Bank: progress in Fiscal 1994", which is available through the bank's public information centre—summarises a wide range of activities designed to help the poor, based on the poverty reduction strategy outlined in the World Development Report 1990. The report notes that lack of effective poverty monitoring remains an issue, and outlines efforts under way to address this. It also acknowledges that slippage in the preparation of country poverty assessments needs to be reduced, without sacrificing quality or ownership by borrowers. We shall be reviewing proposals to strengthen the International Development Association's performance in these areas during the 11th replenishment negotiations.

International Development Association

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to attach binding conditions for effectiveness in poverty alleviation to any future funding of the International Development Association.

Mr. Baldry: We shall be working closely with other donors during discussions on the 11th replenishment of the International Development Association to agree measures which will enhance IDA's effectiveness and strengthen its focus on poverty reduction, sound economic management and environmentally sustainable development.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evaluation has been made by his Department of the effectiveness of the conditions attached to (a) the ninth and (b) the 10th replenishment of the International Development Association.

Mr. Baldry: The World bank prepared annual reports on progress in implementing IDA-9 objectives. It is doing the same for IDA-10, and the first year's review, "The first year of IDA-10: review of the FY94 programme" is available through the bank's public information centre. We consider these reports present a fair assessment of results achieved. They also note where performance has been mixed, for example, preparation of national environmental action plans and poverty assessments and effective poverty monitoring. We continue to work with other donors for more effective implementation by IDA of its policies.

Nepal (Hydro Project)

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further assessment he has made of the World bank's appraisal of the Arun III hydro power project, including the economic analysis and justification; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Before completing our assessment, including reviewing the outcome of the inspection panel's investigation, we need to await a decision by the new Nepalese Government on whether they wish to request International Development Association financing of the project.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will instruct the United Kingdom executive director of the World bank to press for the inspection panel consideration of Arun III to be extended to include proper consideration of alternative schemes.

Mr. Baldry: The World bank board has authorised investigation of the three areas recommended by the inspection panel, namely whether the International Development Association policies and procedures have been observed with respect to environmental assessment, indigenous peoples and involuntary resettlement. The panel did not recommend investigation of IDA's compliance with policies for the analysis of alternatives to Arun III. In the circumstances, we see no case for re-opening the board's decision.

Multilateral Development Banks

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the task force on multilateral development banks was scheduled to start its work; when work started; what has been the ODA's contribution to the work of the task force; what has been achieved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: At its meeting on 26 April 1994, the development committee decided to set up a task force to review the development role being played by the multilateral development banks. These are the World bank, the Asian development bank, the African development bank, the Inter-American development bank and the European bank for reconstruction and development. Achieving international agreement on the composition and other aspects of the task force took longer than anticipated. The first meeting was held on 6 to 7 December 1994 when a work programme was agreed. The task force will meet a number of times during 1995 and expects to produce its final report about 12 months from now. An interim report will be available to the development committee at its autumn 1995 meeting. The UK representative is a senior ODA official.

Angola

Mr. Wilshire (Spelthorne): To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to provide additional humanitarian aid to the people of Angola.

Mr. Baldry: We have pledged £5 million for humanitarian assistance to Angola in response to the United Nations 1995 appeal.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he is giving to the statement by the second international affairs conference against the embargo on Iraq on 18 and 19 February, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The contents of the statement by the international affairs conference have been noted.

Our position on sanctions is well known; we believe that there should be no question of lifting sanctions against Iraq until Iraq complies fully with its international obligations under all relevant Security Council resolutions.

We will continue to press Iraq to put an end to its cynical exploitation of the suffering of its people by accepting UN offers of oil sales to finance the purchase of humanitarian supplies.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he has taken to reinforce the peace process in Sri Lanka; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: All parties to the conflict in Sri Lanka are well aware of our continued support for a negotiated settlement. We welcome the on-going peace process and stand ready to contribute to the reconstruction of the areas affected by the fighting.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, if he will make a statement on forthcoming business in the Council of the European Union.

Mr. David Davis: The following meetings are planned:

March 6–7: Foreign Affairs Council
March 9: Justice/Interior Council, Environment Council
March 10: Justice/Interior Council, Research Council
March 13–14: Transport Council

March 20: ECOFIN

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council on 6 to 7 February.

Mr. David Davis: The Council unanimously agreed the mandate to enable the Commission to open GATT article XXIV.6 negotiations with interested GATT contracting parties on compensation for tariff increases in Austria, Sweden and Finland following their accession to the European Union. No vote was taken. On EU-US relations, M. Juppe reported briefly on his recent visit with Sir Leon Brittan to the US.

The Presidency and the Commission updated Ministers on preparations for the concluding conference to adopt the stability pact in Paris on 20 to 21 March.

The Council agreed, without a vote, an EC position on trade policy measures for the mid-term review of the fourth Lomé convention, to present to the African, Caribbean and Pacific side in preparation for the EU-ACP ministerial meeting on 16 to 17 February. The Council also discussed the eighth European development fund, which will finance the second half of the Convention. The Presidency called a special meeting of the Foreign Affairs Council on 15 February, the eve of the EU-ACP ministerial meeting to discuss the size of the EU offer for EDF VIII.

The Council discussed current issues in the WTO, and possible new issues for WTO consideration. There was agreement on the importance of ensuring that the WTO was able to function effectively; and that outstanding sectoral negotiations were completed within the timetable agreed at the end of the Uruguay round. The Council asked the article 113 Committee and COREPER to prepare negotiating directives for the outstanding services negotiations for the Council to consider on 6 March. On new issues, the Presidency requested the Commission, in liaison with the Article 113 Committee, to produce discussion documents on the various subjects suggested for WTO consideration at the April 1994 Marrakesh meeting.

The Council agreed on the need for the early appointment of the WTO Director-General, and decided to make further efforts to promote the candidature of Mr. Ruggiero.

There was no substantive discussion on rum. The Commission proposals were referred to the working group for further discussion, before returning to the 6 March FAC. Lady Chalker restated UK support for the total abolition of all quotas on ACP and OCT rum by 1 January 1996.

The Council discussed developments in Chechnya and issued a statement

The Council discussed the implementation of the G7 action plan on nuclear safety to Ukraine.

On the Mediterranean, the Commission reported on progress in the negotiations for new agreements with Israel, Morocco and Tunisia.

The Council discussed the terms for customs union with Turkey and the forthcoming review of the Cypriot application for the EU membership.

The Council reiterated support for a peaceful resolution of conflict in the former Yugoslavia. They stressed the importance of recognition between the states which emerged from the former Yugoslavia.

On Croatia, the Council recalled its support for the international conference on the former Yugoslavia's plan for a political solution and called upon the parties to begin negotiations. It reaffirmed its support for the presence of UNPROFOR in Croatia.

The Council reached a political agreement on the data protection directive and accompanying minutes statements. The UK indicated that it would abstain when the directive came as an A point to a future Council.

On relations with central and eastern Europe, the presidency outlined its plans for implementing the pre-accession strategy for central European associates agreed at the Essen European Council. There were linguistic scrutiny reserves from Finland and Sweden.

The Council agreed the following unanimously as A points: a partnership agreement with Kyrgyzstan; negotiating positions in the WTO on non-preferential rules of origin; a decision giving continued support to the European Union Administration of the town of Mostar; amendments to the Council's rules of procedure following enlargement; Council regulations on certain imported wines and amendments to regulations on the important of wines, grape juice and grape must.

Gibraltar Airport

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the British Government's policy as to the future of Gibraltar's airport.

Mr. Norris: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 22 November 1994, Official Report Column 108 by my hon. friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

HIV/AIDS

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the improvement likely to result from the new united secretariat of the WHO global programme on AIDS; and if he will make it his policy to keep the matter under review.

Mr. Baldry: The new joint and co-sponsored United Nations programme on HIV/AIDS—due to start in January 1996—will develop common policies and strategies to combat the HIV/AIDS pandemic for the six co-sponsoring agencies: World Health Organisation, United Nations Children's Fund, United Nations Development Programme, United Nations Population Fund, United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation, and the World bank. The programme aims to improve co-ordination of UN agency support for HIV/AIDS action at country level, to lead to more effective prevention of HIV infection, and better care for those infected. The progress of the new programme in meeting its objectives will be closely monitored.

Nigeria

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what monitoring is undertaken of the human rights situation in Nigeria by the British high commission in Lagos; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 6 March 1995]: Our high commission follows developments in the human rights situation closely. We have regular contacts with a wide range of Nigerian human rights organisations and other groups, and have made our concerns clear to the Nigerian Government.

Zaire (Rwandan Refugees)

Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Government's policy on the UN decision to request units of the army of Zaire to police camps for displaced Rwandese in Zaire; what operational resources the UN has put in place to ensure that the Zairean military authorities comply with international standards, including the protection of the rights of refugees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom has contributed £0.5 million towards the UNHCR's costs for the 50-man international camp security liaison group being set up to monitor the operation and liaise with the Zaire authorities under the agreement on camp security signed between the UNHCR and Zaire.

EMPLOYMENT

Non-wage Labour Costs

13. Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the effect of high non-wage labour costs on employment prospects.

Mr. Portillo: Non-wage labour costs are lower in the United Kingdom than in most countries of the European Union. Higher burdens imposed on employers make it more difficult for them to create jobs.

Labour Statistics

14. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of two-adult households have (a) two earners or (b) no earners.

Mr. Oppenheim: Latest estimates from the summer 1994 labour force survey show that, of two-adult households in which at least one person is of working age, 13 per cent. have neither adult in employment, while 56 per cent. have both adults in employment.

Child Care

15. Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has for improving child care to assist women into employment.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Wallasey (Ms Eagle).

Wilton Carpet Workers

16. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what financial or other assistance he will make available to carpet workers in Wilton who may be offered alternative jobs in Bradford in the wake of the closure of the Wilton royal carpet factory.

Mr. Paice: It would be inappropriate for the Government to intervene in an individual's decision to relocate to another part of the country. For those members of staff who decide that they are unable to relocate, the Employment Service and Wiltshire training and enterprise council have set up a range of initiatives designed to help them secure alternative employment.

Unemployment

17. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest figures for unemployment; and what were the equivalent figures in June 1979.

Mr. Portillo: On the seasonally adjusted basis there were 2,389,700 people claiming unemployment-related benefits in January 1995 compared with 1,067,400 in June 1979.

23. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what further measures he proposes to reduce unemployment in the next two years.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government will continue with the policies which created 266,000 new jobs last year, and reduced unemployment by 582,000 since December 1992, and will resist measures which destroy jobs, such as the social chapter, the national minimum wage and a training levy.

Industrial Relations

18. Mr. Reddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is (a) the United Kingdom current strike record and (b) that in Germany; and what were the figures in 1979.

Mr. Oppenheim: In 1993, the United Kingdom and Germany each lost 600,000 days to labour disputes. In 1979, the United Kingdom lost 29.5 million days, over 50 times West Germany's total of 500,000 million.

Youth Employment

19. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met his fellow EU Employment Ministers to discuss youth employment.

Mr. Paice: Employment matters naturally feature prominently in the discussions my right hon. and hon. Friends have had with their ministerial counterparts. I am pleased to say that, at 14 per cent., youth unemployment in the United Kingdom is much lower than the Community average of 19.6 per cent. This shows the benefits to young people of the Government's policy of promoting flexibility in the labour market.

Workplace Nurseries

21. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many workplace nurseries are presently in operation.

Miss Widdecombe: We do not have the precise figures requested. However, in the 1990 British social attitudes survey, 5 per cent. of employees interviewed said they had an employer's nursery available to them.

Redundancies, Merseyside

22. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many redundancies have been notified on Merseyside in the past 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Oppenheim: According to the summer 1994 labour force survey, 22,000 people in the north-west had been made redundant in the three months prior to interview. Information is not available for Merseyside.

Single Employment Market

24. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if there is a single employment market in the European Union.

Mr. Portillo: In practice, there is a range of largely separate labour markets within the European Union and its member states.

Part-time Jobs

25. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of part-time jobs are taken by women with an earning partner.

Mr. Oppenheim: Latest estimates from the summer 1994 labour force survey show that 59 per cent. of people whose main job was part time were women with a partner in employment.

Training and Enterprise Councils

26. Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received about the targets proposed for training and enterprise councils in 1995–96.

Mr. Paice: Negotiations are currently taking place between the Department and individual training and enterprise councils about contracts for 1995–96. Discussions about targets form part of those negotiations.

Women

27. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to improve the training opportunities available to women.

Mr. Paice: Women returners and lone parents may enter training for work without having to be registered as unemployed. They may train on a part-time basis and receive child care support. The Department is also promoting women's training and employment opportunities in England through the fair play initiative.

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the Government's policies for improving women's opportunities in the labour market and beyond.

Miss Widdecombe: By promoting a competitive, efficient and flexible labour market, the Government have widened choice and opportunities for everyone, men and women.

There are 12.1 million women economically active, and women make up 45 per cent. of the work force in employment. Since 1984, there has been a 14 per cent. increase in women working full time and a 19 per cent. increase in women working part time.

The number of self-employed women has risen by 80 per cent. since 1981. The proportion of women in management and professional jobs increased from 25 per cent. in 1984 to 30 per cent. in 1994.

The pay gap between men and women continues to narrow and now stands at approximately 20 per cent.—the lowest it has ever been.

In 1992, the latest year for which data are available, the UK had the second highest female labour market participation rate in the European Union, as then constituted, after Denmark.

In the EU, only the UK has a lower unemployment rate for women than men.

To help this process of improvement, the Government have introduced specific policies and programmes. For example, workplace nurseries have been exempted from income tax since 1990.

The Employment Department is channelling £45 million through training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies to help create up to 50,000 new out-of-school child care places for the over-fives.

From October 1994, help with child care charges is available to families receiving family credit, disability working allowance, housing benefit and council tax benefit. Child care charges of up to £40 are offset against earning when benefit entitlement is calculated. In the longer term, an estimated 150,000 families are expected to benefit from this new measure, including 50,000 families who are expected to take up work as a direct result of this change.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education is consulting on ways to achieve my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's target to provide, over time, a pre-school place for all four-year-olds whose parents wish to take it up.

In addition, "Fair Play for Women"—a joint Government/Equal Opportunities Commission partnership—was launched in April 1994 to tackle the barriers facing women in economic and social life. Regional consortia have been established in each of the 10 Government office regions in England and each consortium is developing and implementing an "Agenda for Action" based on local priorities. Chwarae Teg, set up in south Wales in 1992, now covers the whole of Wales in a programme to expand women's participation in the work force at all levels.

In December 1994, the Government established a development unit on women in science, engineering and technology—SET—to promote the role of women in SET.

In other fields, there has also been much progress. The proportion of public appointments held by women increased from 23 per cent. in 1990 to 30 per cent. in September 1994.

In health, the NHS is now screening over 80 per cent. of eligible women nationally for cervical cancer.

In 1992, more than two thirds of breast cancer screening programmes exceeded the 70 per cent. screening uptake target.

On domestic violence, the Government have set up interdepartmental groups at official and ministerial level to co-ordinate Government action to tackle this serious issue. Government-funded publicity campaigns have been mounted in England, Scotland and Wales to increase awareness of domestic violence. In Northern Ireland a publicity campaign, jointly funded by the Northern Ireland Office, the Department of Health and Social Services and the Northern Ireland Women's Aid Federation is due to be launched very shortly.

Long-term Unemployed

28. Mr. Merchant: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the extent to which the Government's policies are helping long-term unemployed people to find jobs.

Mr. Portillo: I believe that Government policies, to improve the operation of the labour market and to help the unemployed into jobs, have contributed to the fall in the number of long-term unemployed.

Training

29. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what further discussions he has had with the Confederation of British Industry and the Trades Union Congress about provisions for training.

Mr. Paice: My colleagues and I regularly meet the CBI and the TUC to discuss employment and training issues.

Labour Market Reforms

30. Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the impact of the Government's labour market reforms on levels of unemployment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Oppenheim: Claimant unemployment in the United Kingdom has fallen by 582,000 since its peak in December 1992 and is now well below the EC average. I believe that Government policies to improve the operation of the labour market have been an important factor.

Social Chapter

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met other EU Employment Ministers to discuss the social chapter; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: We have not discussed the matter directly in the Social Affairs Council, but the Government have reaffirmed that they will not accept the draft social chapter which my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister refused to agree at Maastricht.

Part-time Study

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the basis and source for the estimate that some 80,000 unemployed people are currently studying under the 21-hour rule; and how he intends to monitor the impact that the reduction to guided learning hours will have after April 1996; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The basis for the estimate that about 80,000 people are currently studying part-time while claiming unemployment benefits is information from claims and the labour force survey. The figure includes those studying under the 21-hour rule.

This is not a reduction. Courses of up to 16 guided learning hours may, of course, be supplemented by private study as long as this does not affect the individual's availability for, or efforts to find work.

Surveys will continue to be used to monitor the number of people studying part time while looking for work. We do not expect any change in the numbers of claimants helped or in the costs of the scheme.

South Thames Training and Enterprise Council

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much money was not drawn by the South Thames training and enterprise council from his Department in respect of activity undertaken before period 9 in the year 1994–95.

Mr. Paice: South Thames training and enterprise council was given a budget by the Employment Department for the whole of 1994–95 to cover training and business support programmes. I expect that this budget will be totally drawn down by the end of the financial year.

Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what funds (a) from his Department, and (b) from European sources which were available to South Thames TEC prior to the appointment of receivers, had not been claimed at the time by the TEC.

Mr. Paice: South Thames training and enterprise council was given budgets for the whole of 1994–95 to fund Employment Department training and business support programmes and European social fund programmes. I expect that these budgets will be totally drawn down by the end of the financial year.

Disabled People

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many disabled people were employed in (a) Remploy, (b) local authority workshops, (c) voluntary run workshops, (d) local authority sheltered placements and (e) voluntary organisation sheltered placements in each of the last five years.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M.E.G. Fogden to Mr. Peter Thurnham, dated 7 March 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the number of disabled people who were employed on the Supported (formerly Sheltered) Employment scheme during the last five years. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

I hope this is helpful.

Remploy	8,738	8,630	8,591	8,576	8,654
Local Authority Workshops	4,276	4,132	3,905	3,639	3,544
Voluntary Workshops	1,200	1,177	1,155	1,199	1,164
Local Authority Placements	3,010	3,338	3,438	3,502	3,602
Voluntary Placements	3,426	3,500	3,548	3,708	3,859

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from employers and business organisations calling for firms employing fewer than 20 people to be exempted from a legislative requirement not to discriminate against disabled people; and if he will place such representations in the Library.

Miss Widdecombe: Seventy-two employers or employer associations responded to the Government consultative document "A Consultation on Government Measures to Tackle Discrimination Against Disabled People" on the issue of whether small firms should be excluded from the proposed employment right for disabled people. Of those that expressed a clear preference, six employer associations and one employer were in favour of exempting small firms and three employer associations and 10 employers were against.

It is not our policy to publish particular responses to the consultation, but a copy of the analysis of responses has been placed in the Library.

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many people who have a physical or mental impairment which has a substantial and long-term adverse effect on their ability to carry out normal day-to-day activities would be considered as (a) unsuitable for employment, (b) less suitable for employment than other people and (c) significantly impeded from performing their employment duties.

(2) what estimate he has made of the number of people, (a) by type of disability and (b) by age who have a progressive condition which will lead to them (i) registering as disabled or (ii) having a physical or mental impairment which will have a substantial and long-term adverse effect on their ability to carry out normal day-to-day activities.

Miss Widdecombe: The labour force survey provides information about people who have a disability or health problem which they expect to last over 12 months and which affects the type of work that they can do. The available information from the summer 1994 LFS is shown in the following table.

It is not possible to say how many people with a physical or mental impairment which has a substantial and long-term effect on their ability to carry out normal day-to-day activities would be considered unsuitable for employment, or less suitable for employment than other people. This would depend on the particular circumstances of the individual, and the nature of the employment in question. Nor is it possible to estimate by type of disability and age the number of people who have a progressive condition and age the number of people who have a progressive condition which would lead them to registering as disabled. Registration under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1994 is voluntary and only a minority of disabled people choose to register.

Statistics are not available on people who have a progressive condition which will lead to them having a physical or mental impairment which will have a substantial and long-term adverse effect on their ability to carry out normal day-to-day activities.

Numbers of people of working age who have a health problem or disability which limits the kind of paid work they can do, and which they expect to last more than 12 months by type of disability and age

Labour Force Survey

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people registered under section 6 of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 are (a) below pension age, (b) pension age to 74, (c) 75 to 84 and (d) 85 years and older, by type of disability and sex.

Miss Widdecombe: The register of disabled people established by the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 is kept locally, by the Employment Services's placing assessment and counselling teams. The number of names in the register is counted annually, in April. On 18 April 1994, there were 374,182 registered disabled people: of these, 277,294 were male and 96,888 were female.

I regret that information is not collected centrally on the numbers of registered disabled people by type of disability, or by age band. There is no upper age limit for registration. Disabled people who intend to remain in the labour market after reaching pension age may continue to be registered as disabled if they meet the eligibility criteria. However, the majority of registered disabled people are likely to be below pension age.

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in the register of disabled persons maintained under section 6 of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 would be considered to be (a) unsuitable for employment, (b) less suitable for employment than other people and (c) significantly impeded from performing their employment duties.

Miss Widdecombe: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. The eligibility criteria for registration as disabled under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Acts include being capable of some form of employment, under either open or supported conditions. However, the register does not classify registered disabled people in terms of their relative suitability for employment or the extent to which they may be impeded in performing particular employment duties.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for employment what role will be played by adjudication officers in deciding whether a claimant's application to undertake guided learning in further education complies with clause 7(8) of the proposed jobseeker's agreement.

Miss Widdecombe: The jobseeker and the employment officer will seek to draw up a jobseeker's agreement. If they are unable to agree, either party can refer the proposed terms and conditions of the jobseeker's agreement to an adjudication officer.

The adjudication officer will determine if the proposed terms and conditions of the agreement—including any part-time study—would allow the jobseeker, if he complied with them, to meet the conditions of jobseeker's allowance. In making his determination, the adjudication officer will expect to have regard to the legislation and any relevant case law. He will also be assisted by any guidance issued by the chief adjudication officer.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how employment officers will evaluate whether or not private study periods undertaken by claimants within their jobseeker's contract in support of part-time guided learning interferes with attempts to seek employment.

Miss Widdecombe: The jobseeker will be asked to provide the employment officer with evidence that he is available for, and actively seeking, employment. This will normally happen when the jobseeker attends the jobcentre for an interview. If, in the employment officer's opinion, the evidence is insufficient, he will refer the matter to an independent adjudication officer for a determination.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to encourage employment officers to build in literacy training into the jobseeker's contract in cases where it is evident the claimant of benefit has fared poorly in genuine attempts to secure employment due to illiteracy or poor literacy.

Miss Widdecombe: The jobseeker's agreement will record the steps that a jobseeker will take to get back to work. It is not a contract. If the employment officer and the jobseeker identify that a jobseeker's jobsearch would benefit from help with his reading or writing, this can be noted on the agreement and appropriate action taken. Help can be provided, if appropriate, through supportive job clubs, special restart courses and training for work.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for employment, pursuant to his letter of 16 February to all hon. Members, what evaluations were made using what database and what projections, in coming to the conclusion that there would be no reduction in the number of benefit claimants entitled to benefit under the new proposals for people enroling on part-time courses while claiming jobseeker's allowance.

Miss Widdecombe: Calculations were based largely on the results of a survey carried out by the Further Education Funding Council in 1993–94. This provided separate details of the distribution of student's guided learning hours for students on courses classified as full time and part time. Currently, students pursuing full-time courses cannot qualify for social security benefits, while those studying part time may do so, subject to meeting the other benefit conditions.

From these data, it is possible to deduce the number of students on courses classified as full time whose weekly guided learning hours were up to 16, relative to the number formerly classified as part time whose weekly hours were more than 16. The new threshold, based on this information, is designed to allow the same number of people to study while receiving benefit as do so currently.

"Breathe Freely" Campaign

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans his Department has to evaluate the effectiveness of the Health and Safety Executive "Breathe Freely" awareness campaign of occupational asthma; what consideration he has given to extending it beyond April 1995; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Oppenheim: In May 1995, the Health and Safety Executive will be launching a major new three to four-year campaign to help improve employers' management of health risks. The first year will include a major emphasis on respiratory sensitisers. This campaign will therefore build on work of the "Breathe Freely" campaign.

During the autumn, the HSE intends to commission an independent evaluation of the impact of the "Breathe Freely" campaign. In the longer term, the HSE will continue to monitor the incidence of occupational asthma to determine the effectiveness of the campaigns.

Occupational Asthma

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate his Department has made of the total cost to industry of occupational asthma.

Mr. Oppenheim: In 1992, the Health and Safety Executive estimated that occupational asthma accounted for £53 million annually in lost output.

Hazardous Substances

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employers have been prosecuted for failing to protect workers from exposure to hazardous substances that include respiratory sensitisers under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1994.

Mr. Oppenheim: None. The Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1994 came only into force on 16 January 1995. Under the COSHH Regulations 1988, from October 1989 until December 1994 there were a total of 282 prosecutions of which 103 were under regulation 7 of COSHH, which specifically requires employers to prevent or control exposure to substances hazardous to health.

Coal Mine Accidents

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many accidents have occurred in coal mines (a) in each month of 1994 and (b) since the beginning of 1995; and how many of them in each period have resulted in serious injury or death.

Mr. Oppenheim: The information is not yet available for the whole period.

However, information is available for the period January to March 1994 and is shown in the following table.

	Total accidents	Fatalities	Major injuries
January	75	0	24
February	61	0	19
March	57	0	8

Figures for the year April 1994 to March 1995 have not been validated and will not be confirmed until the Health and Safety Commission's annual report is published in November 1995.

The statistics will be available by month from that date.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Defence Exports

Mrs. Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what special facilities are available from the Export Credits Guarantee Department to British exporters of defence equipment over and above the support granted to British exporters of other goods and services.

Mr. Needham: None.

Coal Subsidies

Mr. Stern: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the subsidy outlined in the White Paper "Prospects for Coal", Cm 2235, will end; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Page: Since the coal subsidy was announced in March 1993, 10 offers have been made. To date, £9,053,711 has been paid in respect of almost 800,000 tonnes of coal delivered since April 1993. The majority of offers have been to the private sector, most helping to sustain new production from pits where British Coal had ceased operations.

It was envisaged at the time of the White Paper that the subsidy would only be temporary. The Government indicated then that the scheme would finish at about the time of privatisation. The "Guidelines for Applicants" explain that the subsidy is available only for the period up to the end of March 1995. Only deliveries made before then could be eligible for subsidy. Any applications which remain outstanding should be submitted to my Department no later than 31 March 1995.

Information Technology

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will identify the key issues arising out of the G7 conference on the information society; and what steps his Department will be taking to address them.

Mr. Ian Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw) on 2 March 1995, Official Report, columns 715–16. The main area of follow-up to arise from the G7 conference will be the implementation of the 11 collaborative pilot projects which were launched by the G7 Ministers to demonstrate the potential of the information society. The UK will be playing an active role in the implementation of these projects. I shall be asking the multi-media industry advisory group—which I established to advise me on multi-media and information highways—to advise on how best to take this work forward. I am also in contact with other Government Departments.

The DTI will be looking in more detail at standards, interconnection and intellectual property issues raised at the conference.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the aggregate payments made to the Ministry of Defence, Defence Export Services Organisation or IMS Ltd. in each year since 1979 in respect of claims arising from contracts with ECGD support.

Mr. Needham: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to disclose information about the commercial relations between the ECGD and individual third parties unless the relevant parities have agreed to this. I can, however, inform the hon. Member that the ECGD has made no payments to the Ministry of Defence, of which DESO forms a part, in respect of claims on ECGD-supported contracts.

Konver

Mr. Dover: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the spending to date on Konver I funding within the United Kingdom with particular reference to the possibility of reallocating unspent funding to other UK regions.

Mr. Eggar: Konver I projects are, generally, progressing well. Some underspends have been identified, as is normal with such programmes, and where possible recommitment of grant will be made. The Konver monitoring committee will consider the position at its next meeting.

EU Funding

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in respect of the information about European regional development fund and European social fund contained in the Official Report, 19 January, columns 593–94, if he will break down the figures for each local authority in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Page: The information requested is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Manufactures

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the change in the volume of United Kingdom exports of manufactures (a) to third countries and (b) to the EEC in each year between 1989 and 1992 when the deutschmark appreciated against non-ERM currencies.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows.

Change in volume of United Kingdom exports of manufactures

Year	(a) to countries outside the EU Per cent.	(b) to EU countries Per cent.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the value, volume and unit value of imports and exports of manufacturers in each of the main manufacturing countries.

Mr. Needham: The information on the main manufacturing countries' value of trade in manufactures is given in the table. Information on the volume of imports and exports of manufactures for the UK, Germany, Sweden, and Japan is regularly published in "OECD Monthly Statistics of Foreign Trade", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. Corresponding information for the other main manufacturing countries is not readily available and could be produced only at disproportionate cost. Unit value indices for exports of manufactures for the main manufacturing countries are regularly published by the Central Statistical Office in "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. Corresponding information on import unit values of manufactures is not readily available, and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance his Department gives to businesses developing closed circuit television and other kinds of support for disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The normal range of industry support schemes is available to firms developing products for this market. The Department does not keep statistics in a form which would indicate the numbers of firms which may have benefited from assistance with projects involving products for the disabled.

Brewing Industry

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to receive the report of the Director of Fair Trading on the brewing industry.

Mr. Jonathan Evans [holding answer 3 March 1995]: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade expects to receive the report when the inquiry has been completed to the satisfaction of the Director General of Fair Trading. When announcing the inquiry on 7 February, the Office of Fair Trading indicated that it expected it to last three months, although this is dependent on receiving the full co-operation of the industry.

Coal Privatisation

Mr. Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the consultants retained by his Department in connection with the sale of British Coal giving in each case the fees paid.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms Walley) on 21 July 1994, Official Report, columns 522–23.

WALES

Career Breaks

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) men and (b) women applied for career breaks in his Department or its agencies; and how many have had their employment terminated in the last five years.

Mr. Redwood: Eighty-five women and no men in my Department—including Cadw—have applied for career breaks in the last five years. None of these has had her employment terminated.

Community Areas and Councils

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each county and district council area in Wales and for Wales as a whole the number of (a) community areas, (b) community and town councils and (c) community or town councils which have (i) ceased to exist or (ii) been established during each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones [pursuant to his reply, 16 February 1995, c.763–64.]: Unfortunately, some district councils have provided inaccurate information. The correct figures are set out in the following table:

Industrial Output

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the estimate total output of production industries in Wales at (a) factor cost and (b) current prices for (i) 1993, (ii) 1990 and (iii) 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Total output of production industries in Wales at factor cost and current prices if estimated by the Central Statistical Office to have been (i) £7,111 million in 1993, (ii) £6,702 million in 1990 and (iii) £5,420 million 1987.

Minority Languages Charter

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects Her Majesty's Government to signify their approval of the Council for Europe charter of minority languages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Government Departments with an interest in the European charter for regional or minority languages are still considering its implication for the United Kingdom. The decision on whether to sign the charter must take into account the situation of each of the indigenous minority languages spoken within the United Kingdom.

Llanrwst Bypass

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which figures are being used by his Department for the cost-benefit analysis for the proposed Llanrwst bypass; if he will recalculate the cost-benefit analysis using the current figures submitted by a local group to his Department on 8 December 1994, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The cost-benefit analysis displayed at the 1993 public consultation on the proposed A470 Llanrwst bypass was based on a 1988 traffic survey. A further traffic survey is to be undertaken shortly and the results of that survey will be used in any recalculation of the analysis. The traffic information supplied by the local group is not statistically robust enough to be used in that way.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations have taken place with local authorities in Wales on their opinion on the proposals contained in paragraph 128 and 129 of the Government consultation paper on radioactive waste policy.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: These proposals were included in the Government's recent consultation document "Review of Radioactive Waste Management Policy—Preliminary Conclusions". It was sent to all local authorities in Wales and representations were received from South Glamorgan and Gwynedd county councils and Ynys Môn borough council.

NHS Administrative Costs

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the administrative costs of the NHS in Wales for each year since 1979 in (a) cash prices and (b) current prices.

Mr. Redwood: The information is not available in cash terms. The following table shows the reported costs in column 1 and those amounts converted to 1993–94 prices in column 2.

Administrative costs of the NHS in Wales

	(1) £000	(2) £000
1991–92	67,495	72,330
1992–93	68,298	70,388
1993–94	65,579	65,579

Annual accounts of district health authorities, Welsh Health Common Services Authority, Family health services authorities, NHS trusts and Health Promotion Wales.

Notes:

1. The figure for the cost of administration is taken to be that covering authority administration and purchasing expenses. This represents the total revenue expenditure on the pay and accommodation costs of staff of all disciplines and their support staff employed at headquarters levels together with the costs of the purchaser function. They exclude administration support in hospital departments and at other local levels which is regarded as operational expenditure.

2. 1993–94 figures are provisional and the latest available. It is not possible to provide information on a consistent basis for the years prior to 1991–92 because of changes to the format of accounts as a consequence of the NHS reforms.

Local Environment Charter

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the response he has received from county and district councils to the model charter, "Your Council and the Environment", issued on 25 November 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales sent copies of the local environment charter to all the county and district councils in Wales at the end of November 1993. Feedback received suggests that the document was generally well received; and many councils in Wales have developed their own environmental charters.

Training for Work

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what is the expected outturn for each training and enterprise council in Wales for training for work with respect to training weeks used by those training after finding work.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested is provided in the following table:

Number of employed status training weeks expected to be delivered in 1994–95

	Number
Gwent	10,285
Mid-Glamorgan	11,435
North-East Wales	11,058

NORTHERN IRELAND

Rateable Values

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to carry out a general revaluation of rateable values in Northern Ireland.

Sir John Wheeler: The current valuation list was published on 31 December 1975 and came into effect on 1 April 1976. Since that time, major shifts in rental patterns have taken place in Northern Ireland and these are not reflected in the net annual values appearing in the list. The relative antiquity of the present list has given rise to many anomalies between different areas and between different classes of property, particularly in the non-domestic sector. A revaluation of the whole of the non-domestic sector will, therefore, be undertaken by the Valuation and Lands Agency and work on this will commence immediately. The domestic sector is not being reviewed at this time but the situation will be kept under review.

The new valuation list will be published on or before 31 December 1996 and will come into effect on 1 April 1997. Any ratepayer who is aggrieved by his or her valuation will have a statutory right of appeal.

Turf Lodge Area, Belfast

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many people in the Turf Lodge area of west Belfast are currently receiving social security benefits of any kind;

(2) how many people in the Turf Lodge area applied for (a) disability living allowance and (b) attendance allowance in each of the last three years up to the end of 1994.

Mr. Moss: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in the Turf Lodge area have been unemployed for longer than three years.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is not available. However, the Turf Lodge area falls within the boundaries of the Upper Springfield ward and at January 1995, the latest date for which information is available, 355 people in this ward had been unemployed for longer than three years.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in the Turf Lodge area are currently in receipt of (a) disability living allowance, (b) attendance allowance and (c) housing benefit.

Mr. Moss: Statistics on social security benefits administered by the Social Security Agency cannot be broken down into small geographic areas without incurring disproportionate costs.

The number of people in the rented sector in the Turf Lodge area who are currently in receipt of housing benefit is 586. The number of owner-occupiers in the area in receipt of housing benefit cannot be provided as this information is only kept at district council level.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people from the Turf Lodge area are currently employed on action for community employment schemes.

Mr. Ancram: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Ian Walters. I have asked him for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Walters to Dr. Joe Hendron, dated 3 March 1995:

Your recent parliamentary question to the Secretary of State regarding the number of people from the Turf Lodge area currently employed under ACE has been passed to me for reply.

In the absence of statistical information specifically relating to the Turf Lodge area, this response is based on ACE participants resident in the BT11 postal code area which, as your know, encompasses Turf Lodge. On 1st March 1995, 433 persons from the BT11 area were employed by 46 separate ACE Sponsors. Of course ACE Sponsors are not restricted to geographical areas from which they may recruit and it is therefore difficult to provide data which relates strictly to Turf Lodge.

You will be interested to know also that one of the organisations funded by the Agency under ACE is Turf Lodge Enterprise Scheme Ltd which primarily serves the Turf Lodge area. Although its employees are not recruited exclusively from the Turf Lodge area, the company currently receives funding to employ 70 people and can attract annual funding of more than £376,000.

I hope you find this information helpful.

Career Breaks

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) men and (b) women applied for career breaks in his Department or its agencies; and how many have had their employment terminated in the last five years.

Sir John Wheeler: In the last five years, 338 males and 773 females in the Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office have applied for career breaks. Eleven of those individuals have had their employment terminated.

Framework Document

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he is yet in a position to announce the result of his Department's inquiry into who was responsible for leaking parts of the framework document to The Times; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: A senior member of the Northern Ireland Office who has had no previous involvement in the work of the joint framework document is conducting an inquiry into the source of the leak. A confidential report will be sent to the permanent under-secretary at the Northern Ireland Office upon completion of the inquiry and further action will be taken as necessary.

Punishment Beatings

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many punishment beatings have been recorded since the announcements of the ceasefires in 1994.

Sir John Wheeler: Since 31 August 1994 to 26 February 1995 there have been 88 punishment beatings recorded.

Prior Options Studies

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has for a further programme of prior options studies to be undertaken by Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office.

Sir John Wheeler: I have decided, following an examination of the remaining executive activities being undertaken within the Northern Ireland civil service and the Northern Ireland Office, that prior options studies would be appropriate for each of the areas listed. These studies will determine for each area whether agency status or other options would be appropriate. Comments from interested parties will be welcome when commencement of the prior options studies is announced.

	Area	Study completion date
DANI	Forestry Service	December 1995
DANI	Agricultural Colleges	June 1996
DANI	Agricultural Development Service	June 1996
DANI	Veterinary Service	December 1996
DFP	Government Purchasing Service	May 1995
DFP	Recruitment	June 1995

In addition, the study previously announced of possible agency status for the superannuation branches of the Department of Finance and Personnel and the Department of Health and Social Services will now be extended to embrace the teachers' superannuation branch of the Department of Education of Northern Ireland. The proposed completion date for this enlarged study is June 1995. A prior options study of the urban affairs area in the Department of the Environment was completed in December and is under consideration, and a prior options study of the Department of Economic Development's companies registry has been similarly completed. These two studies are in addition to those included in the announcement made on 18 January 1994, Official Report, columns 521–22.

ENVIRONMENT

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list each site of special scientific interest for which development permission has been given (a) by a local authority and (b) by his Department

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department maintains no central record of planning permissions in sites of special scientific interest.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many times development permission on a site of special scientific interest has been refused by (a) local authorities and (b) his Department, for each year since 1979.

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department maintains no central record of planning permissions refused in sites of special scientific interest.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many development plans on sites of special scientific interest have been refused by local authorities and consequently given permission on appeal to his Department, for each year since 1979.

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department maintains no central record of planning permissions given on appeal in sites of special scientific interest.

Local Government Finance

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list in rank order the metropolitan councils outside London showing the totals held in reserves at the latest available date;

(2) if he will list in rank order the London boroughs showing the totals held in reserves at the latest available date.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The latest available estimates of the level of reserves as at 1 April 1994 are given below. The authorities are ranked by order of reserves excluding those held by schools, non-LMS; schools' reserves are shown separately, LMS. The first column, "Non-LMS reserves", includes funds, which may be substantial, held for specified purposes which may not be available to the council for general use—for example, funds to finance capital projects to which the authority is committed; and insurance funds where the authority is bearing its own insurance risk. These estimates are subject to amendment as authorities finalise their accounts. Compatible data on the use of balances in 1994–95 which would be needed to derive an estimate of the level of reserves at 1 April 1995 are not yet available.

Level of reserves (outturn) at 1/4/93 +/- appropriations to/withdrawals from reserves 1993–94 (RS return for 1993–94).

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to relax constraints on spending for local authorities and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Secretary of State announced his provisional capping criteria for local authorities on 1 February. He will announce his final criteria once authorities have set their budget requirements for 1995–96.

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the value of reserves for the core cities of Birmingham, Liverpool, Newcastle, Sheffield, Manchester and Leeds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the Under-Secretary, the hon. Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones) to my hon. Friend, the Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) earlier today. This provided data on the level of reserves held by each metropolitan district.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what extra finance would be available to local authorities in 1995–96 if the capping level for all local authorities was set at 3.2 per cent. above their 1994–95 budgets.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: If the capping limits for 1995–96 were set at 3.2 per cent. above local authorities' 1994–95 budgets—net of a local precepts and adjusted for various changes of function, boundary and financing—they would claw a little under £600 million of additional public expenditure compared to the cap limits implied by the current provisional capping criteria.

Government Cars (Palace of Westminster)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take to stop Government drivers within the Government car pool parking their vehicles with their engines running within the precincts of the Palace of Westminster.

Sir Paul Beresford: Government car service drivers are under clear instructions while parked within the precincts of the Palace of Westminster to keep their vehicles engines to a minimum consistent with passenger and security requirements. That instruction has been re-inforced recently by GCS management.

Coalfields Communities Campaign

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration was given to the attendance of his Ministers at the launch by the Coalfields Communities Campaign of its campaign on pollution of rivers by water from abandoned mine workings.

Mr. Atkins: The invitation to attend was given the usual careful consideration. We were aware of the views of the Coalfields Communities Campaign in its response to the consultation paper "Paying for our Past" and in subsequent correspondence.

Council House Sales, Westminster

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses were sold in each of the wards within the borough of Westminster in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Tables showing the available information on total council house sales for each English local authority for every financial year since 1979–80 and a cumulative total to March 1994 are in the Library.

Information about disposals at ward level is not collected by the Department.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he had made to the district auditor's interim report on Westminster city council's designated sales policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: No response has been made. This is a matter for the local authority and its appointed auditor.

Ferro-Alloys Chimney (Emissions)

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what have been the results of the monitoring that has been carried out by his Department of the emissions from the Ferro-Alloys chimney in Glossop, Derbyshire for the last 12 months for which figures are available, giving the average and maximum levels for each month.

Mr. Atkins: My Department has not carried out any monitoring itself. However, the company has supplied information about sulphur dioxide releases over the 12-month period to the end of February 1995. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is writing to the company to seek its consent to release this information, and I will be writing to the hon. Member.

Single-tier Local Authorities

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many single-tier local authorities have formally merged their housing and social services departments.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: This information is not collected centrally.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the single regeneration budget has a designated fund for promoting the development of electronic village halls and cyber skills by local councils.

Mr. Curry: No.

Ms Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the ratio of the single regeneration budget to the housing association-approved development programme in (a) the west Midlands and (b) London; and what considerations underlie the variation between (a) and (b).

Mr. Curry: Planned single regeneration budget expenditure for 1994–95 is some £175 million in the west midlands and £374 million in London. Allocations made at the start of 1994–95 from the Housing Corporation's approved development programme were some £126 million and £465 million respectively.

The ratios sought are thus (a) 1.4:1 and (b) 0.8:1. As the two programmes have different objectives, outputs and areas of operation there is no reason why there should be any relationship between these ratios.

Non-hazardous Waste

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) for what reason the planned European Commission timetable for the development of the proposed draft directive on the incineration of non-hazardous waste has been delayed beyond that originally proposed by Directorate General XI;

(2) what is the current status of the proposed draft EU directive on the incineration of non-hazardous waste; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what representations have been made by his Department regarding the lack of cost-benefit analysis contained in the draft EU proposal for a directive on the incineration of non-hazardous waste.

Mr. Atkins: The Commission tabled a first draft of this proposed directive in April 1994 and a second draft in August 1994. Three meetings of Government experts have been held, two of which included representatives of trade associations and environmental bodies, and there has also been a meeting of a technical sub-group. I believe that the Commission is currently considering the proposal in the light of the adoption last December of the hazardous waste incineration directive—94/67/EC—and the proposal for a directive on integrated pollution prevention and control.

My Department has made a number of written and verbal representations concerning the importance of assessing both costs and benefits in coming forward with proposals for new standards for non-hazardous waste incineration.

Housing Stock Transfers

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment pursuant to his answer of 7 February, Official Report, column 132–36, if he will publish a list showing the date on which each local authority conducted a ballot on proposed large-scale voluntary transfer of their housing stock.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The 64 local authorities which have balloted tenants on proposed large-scale voluntary transfers are listed below, together with the month and the year in which each ballot took place.

Government Environmental Policy

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what role the meetings of all Green Ministers play in the integration of environmental considerations into all aspects of Government policy.

Mr. Atkins: Meetings of Green Ministers provide a valuable opportunity to discuss collectively aspects of environmental integration of common interest, such as energy conservation, environmental management and the forthcoming Environment White Paper. The meetings do not replace the individual responsibility of each Green Minister to ensure that environmental considerations are integrated into the strategies and policies of his or her Department.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response was received to the consultation paper on arrangements for local taxation appeals and disputes in the event of a structural or boundary change in respect of any local government area in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The list of responses received has been placed in the Library of the House; copies of individual responses may be obtained through the Library. Regulations will be introduced shortly to give effect to the following measures to be applied in respect of all local taxation appeals and disputes in the event of a structural or boundary change:

if an authority has been abolished, and the corresponding listing officer, valuation officer or valuation tribunal ceases to exist, the case is to be handled by the successor bodies;

if the case has been listed for hearing by a valuation tribunal, and notice of the hearing has been served, or it has been agreed that it should be disposed of on the basis of written representations and notice thereof has been served, there is to be no change in arrangements; in all other circumstances, the acquiring authority, listing officer, valuation officer and valuation tribunal, as the case may be, is to assume responsibility for the case; and if the case relates in part to the period before the structural or boundary change, the relinquishing billing authority (if it elects to do so), listing officer and valuation officer should be a party to the proceedings.

Bathing Water Monitoring

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of recent incidents at Oxwich bay, Wales; and what plans he has to increase the monitoring of viruses in bathing water as a result.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 6 March 1995]: An investigation, carried out by the West Glamorgan health authority, and published 28 February, concluded that there was no evidence of a link between illnesses and bathing or visiting Oxwich bay. I have no present plans to require increased monitoring of viruses in bathing waters.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment what monitoring of viruses in Britain's bathing water is currently carried out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 6 March 1995]: Monitoring for viruses in United Kingdom bathing waters is carried out in accordance with the EC bathing water directive. UK monitoring is the most extensive of any member state.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effect of viruses in sewage and chemical discharges on (a) human health and (b) bathing water quality.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 6 March 1995]: In January 1994, I announced and placed in the Library the results of a four-year study, funded by the Department of the Environment, the Department of Health, the Welsh Office and the National Rivers Authority, into health and bathing water quality. A detailed summary of the results of UK bathing water quality monitoring is placed in the Library each year. The results for 1994 were placed on 20 January 1995.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in how many instances water-borne viruses have been thought to be the cause of illness contracted by bathers in British waters in each of the last five years.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 6 March 1995]: I understand from the Department of Health that there is no conclusive evidence that any serious illness has been contracted by bathers in UK bathing waters during this period. The four-year study to assess the health risks of sea bathing published last year suggested that there is only a minimal risk of illness from British bathing waters.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest figure for reported benefit savings accrued by the Child Support Agency, giving in each case (a) the amount represented by pre-existing maintenance arrangements carried over by the Child Support Agency, (b) the amount represented by cases in which benefit ceased following action by the agency, (c) the amount represented by cases in which maintenance exceeds the amount of benefit payable and (d) the amount represented by consequential savings in council tax benefit and housing benefit.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 6 March 1995:

I am replying to your recent Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the benefit savings scored by the Child Support Agency.

Benefit savings by category

	£ million
	1994–95
Existing maintenance agreements before CSA assessments
Paid direct by absent parent to parent with care—existing	101.65
Paid through pre-Agency collection service—existing	6.96
Sub total	108.61
New maintenance as a result of CSA assessments
Paid direct by absent parent to parent with care—new	10.48
Paid through Agency collection service to Secretary of State—new	32.45
Absent parent—Income Support deductions	1.55
Sub total	44.48
Benefit ceases following action by the Agency
Non-maintenance cessations	165.95
Maintenance cessations	20.43
Sub total	186.38
Total	339.48

Savings arising from maintenance paid in Family Credit/DWA cases, and the consequential savings arising in Council Tax Benefit and Housing Benefit from cases where benefit has ceased are scored retrospectively after the end of the financial year, and figures are not currently available.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many parents with care at each Child Support Agency reporting centre have ceased to receive income support after receiving payments of child maintenance; and how many have ceased to receive income support and are receiving family credit after receiving child maintenance.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 7 March 1995:

I am replying to your recent Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of parents with care (PWCs) who have ceased to claim income support (IS); or who have ceased to claim IS, but are receiving family credit (FC) after receiving child maintenance.

Agency centre	[1] [2] PWCs no longer receiving is
Belfast	1,688

Dudley	1,176
Falkirk	1,186
Hastings	1,182
Plymouth	1,31[illegible]

[1] Year to date from April 1994 to January 1995.

[2] Child maintenance may not have been the only income received. Information is not available on the number of clients who have ceased to claim IS, but are receiving FC.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently employed by the Child Support Agency; and what was the figure in April 1993.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 7 March 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of staff employed by the Child Support Agency.

In April 1993, there were 2,937 established staff in the Agency. In addition there were 160 Northern Ireland civil servants based at the Child Support Agency Centre in Belfast who were engaged in work relating to parents with care who live in Great Britain.

In January 1995 there were 5,799 established staff in the Agency, and 645 Northern Ireland civil servants engaged in work relating to parents with care who live in Great Britain.

This increase in staffing reflects both the anticipated build up in staff, and the additional staff deployed as part of the recovery plan.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the basis for his estimate of the cost of taking account of travel-to-work costs in the child support formula.

Mr. Burt: The costs of the proposed allowance were estimated using data from the 1991 census about the distribution of distances travelled to work.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the cost of each of the proposed changes to the Child Support Agency referred to in his oral statement of 23 January 1995, Official Report, columns 19–21.

Mr. Burt: The cost, in terms of reduction in anticipated savings in benefit expenditure, of each of the proposed changes is estimated as follows:

	1995–96 £ million	1996–97 £ million	1997–98 £ million
Formula changes
Property/capital settlements	5	10	10
Travel to work costs	10	15	20
Provision for full housing costs	5	10	10
Deferral of liability by eight weeks	10	10	10
30 per cent. cap on payments	10	10	10
Changes requiring primary legislation
Departure orders	—	10	10
Maintenance credit	—	—	15
Totals	40	65	85

Note:
All figures in £ million, rounded to nearest £5 million.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects the Child Support Agency to deal with all cases involving child maintenance; and if he will set out the Government's revised programme for the phased take-on of cases.

Mr. Burt: It was never the intention that the Child Support Agency would deal with all cases of child maintenance. Where there is a maintenance order in force with which both parents are content, and no benefit is being paid to the parent with care, the agency will not become involved.

Where such an order is currently in force, but one party is dissatisfied, the courts will continue to exercise jurisdiction until such time as the Child Support Agency takes over jurisdiction. This was intended to be in 1996, but the Government have announced plans to defer this date until the agency is in a position to take on the cases efficiently and to a high standard.

The agency expects to resume the take-on of those cases deferred as a result of the measures announced on 20 December 1994 by the end of 1995.

Lone Parents

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the Government's policy on encouraging all lone parents into employment and on providing incentives to that end; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: It is our policy to encourage lone parents to take up and stay in work. Improving work incentives is the most effective way of ensuring that lone parents leave benefit dependency; this offers the best long-term prospects for the families involved and produces savings for the public purse. Research indicates that most lone parents want to work. We have been very successful in encouraging lone parents to move from dependency on income support to work supplemented by family credit. In 1988, there was one working lone parent on family credit for every 10 on income support; by 1994, the proportion was almost one for every four.

In April 1992, we changed the qualifying hours of work for family credit from 24 hours to 16 hours a week. Currently, 120,000 lone parents work between 16 and 24 hours a week and receive family credit; many of these had previously been dependent on income support. Last October, we introduced the child care disregard to remove a stumbling block preventing some parents returning to work. This is worth up to £28 a week extra in family credit. In the long term, we expect that 150,000 families, mostly lone parents, will benefit from this change. The work incentives package announced last November includes measures to help people returning to work, such as the four-week extension of housing benefit, the national insurance contribution holiday for employers, and the back to work bonus. All of these will apply to lone parents and unemployed people. In January 1995, the child support White Paper announced a new scheme giving a credit for maintenance received by parents with care on income support. This scheme—the child maintenance bonus—will provide further help on returning to work through a lump sum of up to £1,000.

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone mothers receive means-tested benefits; and what proportion of these are (a) never married, (b) separated wives, (c) divorced women and (d) widows and wives of pensioners.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the tables:

Table 1: Numbers of lone mothers in receipt of family credit, disability working allowance or income support in May 1993

Numbers in receipt of	Total
Family credit	200,000
Disability working allowance	—
Income support with no family credit or disability working allowance	987,000

Table 2: Numbers of lone parents in receipt of housing benefit/council tax benefit but not in receipt of family credit, disability working allowance or income support, in May 1993

Numbers in receipt of	Total
Housing benefit	46,000
Council tax benefit	44,000

Notes:
1. The figures refer to Great Britain and have been rounded to the nearest thousand.
2. There will be considerable overlap in table 2 as many cases receive both HB and CTB, but due to the collection procedure these cannot be identified.
3. For HB and CTB it is not possible to distinguish lone mothers from lone fathers. This information refers to lone parent rather than lone mother.

The marital status breakdown is only available for the income support data and is shown in the following table:

Marital status	Total
(a) never married	463,000
(b) separated	313,000
(c) divorced	192,000
(d) widowed	16,000

Habitual Residence Test

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones), of 19 December 1994 Official Report, column 930, if he will consider making some assessment of the ethnic origin of claimants who have failed the habitual residence test to check whether particular ethnic groups are disproportionately affected by the test.

Mr. Roger Evans: We have no plans to do so.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if a claimant can appeal against a Benefits Agency medical services doctor's failure to provide (i) a certificate under regulation 10(2)(e) and (ii) an opinion under regulation 27 of the Social Security (Incapacity For Work) (General) Regulations 1995.

Mr. Hague: A claimant cannot appeal against a Benefits Agency medical services doctor's failure to provide a certificate or opinion. He can appeal against an adjudication officer's decision on capacity for work. That decision will take into account whether the claimant is certified as being in an exempt category under regulation 10(2)(e), whether he has satisfied the all work test and whether any of the prescribed exceptional circumstances apply under regulation 27.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security at what intervals and on what basis a claimant of incapacity benefit will be re-tested after April 1995.

Mr. Hague: After the initial application of the all work test, a Benefits Agency medical services doctor will provide advice to the adjudication officer as to whether and, if so, at what interval, the question of the claimant's capacity should be reviewed. The interval will depend on the individual circumstances of each case.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people he estimates will sign on as available for work pending an appeal against a decision that they are capable of work; and how many will claim income support.

Mr. Hague: No estimate has been made of the number of people who will choose to make themselves available for work pending an appeal. Estimated numbers expected to claim income support are not broken down between those appealing against a decision and those not making an appeal.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest estimate of the number of people who will move from incapacity benefit and sign on as unemployed in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1996–97; (iii) 1997–98.

Mr. Hague: The estimated number of people who will move from incapacity benefit, including new claimants after April 1995, and sign on as unemployed earlier than would otherwise have been the case, as a result of the new medical test, is as follows: 160,000 in 1995–96, 120,000 in 1996–97 and 60,000 in 1997–98. It is estimated that the average increase in the unemployment count as a result of the reform of incapacity benefit provision will be 90,000 in 1995–96, 195,000 in 1996–97 and 200,000 in 1997–98. These figures include people joining the unemployment count who will previously have been receiving income support with disability premium as well as those who will have been receiving incapacity benefit.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people who are expected to leave incapacity benefit in 1995–96 to sign on as unemployed he estimates will be aged (a) under 45 years, (b) between 45 and 54 years old, (c) 55 years or over; and how many in each category are estimated to receive an occupational or private pension amounting to (i) less than £35 per week, (ii) between £35 and £50 per week and (iii) between £50 and £75 per week;

(2) how many people who are expected to leave incapacity benefit in 1996–97 to sign on as unemployed he estimates will be aged (a) under 45 years, (b) between 45 and 54 years and, (c) 55 years or over; and how many in each category are estimated to receive an occupational or private pension amounting to (i) less than £35 per week, (ii) between £35 and £50 per week and (iii) between £50 and £75 per week.

Mr. Hague: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of new claimants of both (a) incapacity benefit and (b) severe disablement allowance who will (i) be found capable of work under the all work test and (ii) how many and what proportion he expects will lodge an appeal against this decision.

Mr. Hague: It is estimated that in 1995–96, approximately 45,000 and in subsequent years 55,000 new incapacity benefit claimants will be found capable of work earlier than would otherwise have been the case, as a result of the new medical test. It is estimated that 60 per cent. of these claimants will appeal against the decision of capacity for work. No estimates have been made of the number of new severe disablement allowance claimants expected to be found capable of work.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the number and proportion of appeals against a decision of capacity for work which are frivolous.

Mr. Hague: None.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he consulted (i) the Independent Tribunal Service, (ii) the Council on Tribunals and (iii) the Social Security Advisory Committee about the benefit reduction for people appealing against a decision that they are capable of work.

Mr. Roger Evans: The Secretary of State referred the proposed income support regulations to the Social Security Advisory Committee under section 172(1) of the Social Security Administration Act 1992 on 3 and 16 February 1995. The Social Security Advisory Committee agreed on 16 February 1995, under section 173(1)(b) of the same Act, that the regulations need not be formally referred to it.

There is no statutory requirement in these circumstances to consult either the Independent Tribunal Service or the Council on Tribunals.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Howarth) on 30 January 1995 Official Report, column 520, if the normal control dates based on form MF213 will be the basis for reviewing the estimated 220,000 people who will fail the new incapacity test.

Mr. Hague: Under the existing invalidity benefit system, when a claim is considered by the Benefits Agency medical services—the doctor gives advice on if and when the case should be reviewed. In cases with a review date, the new all-work test will be applied for the purpose of the first planned review after 13 April this year. We expect that all such cases will be reviewed in the first two years of the new benefit. The remaining cases will then also be reviewed under the new test.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average number of weeks between the date an appeal was lodged against a decision that a person is capable of work to the date of the hearing.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the average clearance time for all invalidity benefit appeals in the quarter ending June 1994 was 26.6 weeks.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of housing benefit claimants are currently in receipt of additional help with rent under regulation 11(3) of the Housing Benefit General Regulations.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not held centrally.

National Insurance Credits

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if people claiming income support pending an appeal against a decision that they are capable of work will be credited for national insurance purposes for the period between lodging an appeal and the hearing.

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ensure that credits are available for the period pending an appeal against a decision that a person is capable of work, he should register as available for employment. If he fails to do this, incapacity credits will be awarded only for the period if his appeal succeeds.

Registering as available for employment will not prejudice the outcome of his appeal.

Mortgage Interest

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (i) what assessment his Department has made of the implications for income support claimants of the changes to income support mortgage interest to be implemented in October 1995;

(2) what assessment the Government have made of the impact on the rate of repossession of the changes to income support for mortgage interest to be implemented in October 1995;

(3) what estimate he has made of the number of (a) monthly and (b) annual repossessions that will arise from October 1995 as a result of the Government's reduction in help for unemployed home owners.

Mr. Roger Evans: We believe that our proposals will result in the development of comprehensive quality insurance and will provide better protection for all home owners, not just those who currently get help from income support mortgage interest.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the estimated additional housing costs (a) to local authorities in England and Wales and (b) to housing associations in England and Wales of the changes to income support for mortgage interest to be implemented in October 1995.

Mr. Roger Evans: There should not be any additional housing costs of this nature.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants in receipt of income support for mortgage interest payments had their homes repossessed in (a) 1993–94 and (b) each of the five preceding years.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the percentage of private rented sector tenants who are currently in receipt of housing benefit in each local authority in England and Wales.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information requested is not available. It is estimated that the proportion of tenants of private landlords who receive housing benefit in England is 49 per cent. and 61 per cent. in Wales.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 8 March 1995

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Permanent Secretaries

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which permanent secretaries have left his Department's employment in the last five years, and which public positions they have been appointed to subsequently.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No permanent secretary has left the Lord Chancellor's Department's employment in the last five years.

Career Breaks

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many men and women applied for career breaks in his Department; and how many have had their employment terminated in the last five years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Details of how many men and women applied for a career break within the last five years were not recorded centrally until July 1994. Since then 20 applications have been made, two of which were refused. None of the 20 have had their employment terminated.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Civil Service (Market Testing)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what evidence he has in support of the conclusion of the White Paper on the future of the civil service that market testing has created savings.

Mr. Horam: The evidence can be found in the "Market Testing Bulletin Special Report", published in January, which is available in the Library. The report includes full details of the results of the "Competing for Quality" programme—including market testing—to September 1994 and shows that Departments have now identified annual cost savings of over £400 million from a programme covering over £2 billion of Government services.

Permanent Secretaries

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which permanent secretaries have left his Department's employment in the last five years; and which public positions they have been appointed to subsequently.

Mr. David Hunt: In the five years from 1 March 1990, Sir Peter Kemp KCB, has left this Department's employment as a permanent secretary, and Sir Peter Graham KCB QC and Sir Constant Henry de Waal, KCB, QC have left as first parliamentary counsels.

Sir Peter Kemp has been subsequently appointed as a part-time commissioner with the Audit Commission.

Women's Unit

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many staff are employed in the development unit for women in science and engineering located within the office of Science and Technology; what are its aims and objectives; and for how many years its funding is guaranteed.

Mr. Horam: The development unit on women in science, engineering and technology has a staff of two plus administrative support; its aims and objectives are outlined in the Government's response to the "Rising Tide" report; and its future will be reviewed after an initial period of two years.

Technology Foresight

30. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what practical benefits to British industry have arisen from the technology foresight initiative.

Mr. David Hunt: Many—in particular in the medium to longer term.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

BBC

Mr. Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the current calculation of the amount of money that the BBC will reallocate to the regions and what percentage that will be of the present level of spending on network productions.

Mr. Dorrell: The BBC last year published plans for a gradual reallocation of expenditure on network production to regions outside London and south east England. This will be worth an additional £75 million a year by 1997–98, and represents an increase of 48 per cent. over 1993-94 expenditure of £155 million.

Historic Government Buildings

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps he is taking to improve the care of historic Government buildings.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government committed themselves in 1992 to a nine-point plan for the care of historic buildings on their own estate. This provides for regular inspection and maintenance of these buildings and an annual report by my Department's conservation unit on their condition. I am today publishing, for the first time, the conservation unit's report.

I am also issuing today new guidance to Departments on the disposal of surplus historic buildings. This follows from the "Efficiency Scrutiny of the Management of the Government Estate," published last year, which identified the need for guidance on the particular considerations arising in respect of the disposal of historic properties, over and above those applying to disposals generally. The main emphasis of the guidance is that "best price" should not be the overriding concern when considering the disposal of a building. Rather, Departments should aim to obtain the best return for the taxpayer that is consistent with Government policies for the protection of historic buildings and areas.

I am placing copies of both documents in the Library.

Pink Pound

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the significance of the pink pound to Britain's tourism and leisure industry.

Mr. Dorrell: None.

Permanent Secretaries

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage which permanent secretaries have left his Department's employment in the last three years; and which public positions they have been appointed to subsequently.

Mr. Dorrell: Mr. Hayden Phillips was appointed as permanent secretary to my Department when it was created in April 1992. Mr. Phillips is still in post.

ITV Companies

Mr. Graham Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what information he collects on the amounts ITV companies are spending on new British programmes and on dividends to shareholders.

Mr. Dorrell: Such information is not collected by Government. These are commercial matters for ITV companies, acting within the terms of their licences.

Planning and Management Systems

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what system of planning and management information systems is currently in place in his Department; and what documents pertaining to it are available to (a) hon. Members and (b) the public.

Mr. Dorrell: My Department prepares internal business and forward management plans, and the many bodies which my Department funds produce business and strategic plans, some of which are published. The DNH annual report, containing the Department's expenditure plans, is prepared each year as part of the series of departmental reports presented to Parliament. It is published and available to the public through HMSO bookshops.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what changes he is making to his Department's planning and management information systems in the light of the fundamental expenditure review of the Department and the recommendations of the multi-departmental efficiency scrutiny of such systems.

Mr. Dorrell: Neither of these reviews has yet reported. I will consider any action I wish to take when they do so.

Children's Play

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he intends to announce plans for a national framework for children's play.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend, the Member for Eltham, (Mr. Bottomley) on 2 March, Official Report, column 640.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has to fund the National Voluntary Council for Children's Play in 1995–96.

Mr. Dorrell: My Department currently has no budget for children's play. I understand that the NVCCP has submitted an application to the Sports Council's Trust Company for an extension of its present grant into the 1995–96. In relation to funding for children's play from October 1995, I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to my hon. Friend, the Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) on 2 March, Official Report, column 640.

National Lottery

Ms Lynne : To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much money will be made available from national lottery funds to sports clubs, including football clubs.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 7 March 1995]: Twenty per cent. of the net proceeds from the national lottery will be made available to sport and distributed through the four national sports councils. This amount currently stands at around £48 million. It will be for the sports councils themselves to decide which projects should receive funding, based on the applications they receive.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage which listed buildings in (a) Inverclyde, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland are deemed eligible for financial assistance towards the cost of renovation by Historic Scotland from moneys obtained from the national lottery; what criteria are used to assess such applications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 6 March 1995]: Repairs to historic buildings throughout the United Kingdom are eligible for lottery funding directly from the National Heritage Memorial fund—NHMF—if they fulfil the criteria set down within the "Guidelines for Applicants to the Heritage Lottery Fund" published by the trustees of the NHMF, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. Repairs to historic buildings within the care of Historic Scotland itself are similarly eligible for lottery funding from the NHMF.

Scratch Lottery

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made on the impact of the income of football pools and society lotteries on the introduction by Camelot of a scratch lottery.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 7 March 1995]: National lottery instant win games have not yet been introduced. It will be for the football pools companies and the promoters of society lotteries, in the first instance, to assess any impact which the introduction of such games may have on their income.

Ian Greer Associates

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what items of correspondence were received by Ministers in his Department from Messrs Ian Greer Associates in the last month.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 28 February 1995]: In the last month Ministers in my Department have received one such item of correspondence.

Works of Art

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the items for which the issuing of export licences was withheld on the recommendation of the reviewing committee on the export of works of art during the half year ended 31 December, specifying in each case the valuation and whether any item was exported or retained, with particulars in the latter event of the acquiring institution; and if he will list any items for which licences have been withheld but the final disposal of which is not yet decided, specifying in each case (a) the valuation and (b) the relevant time limit.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 19 January 1995]: The information is as follows:-

Description of item	Valuation £	Outcome
A drawing 'Two Horsemen Fighting' dated 1620-30 by Giovanni Francesco Barbieri, called Il Guercino	147,807	Export licence granted.
The Narcissus Washstand designed by William Burges c. 1865–67	250,000	Acquired by the Cecil Higgins Trust.
An autograph working manuscript of 21 keyboard pieces, by Henry Purcell, c. 1680–1690	281,137.50	Acquired by the Trustees of the British Library.
A ceremonial bronze dirk, middle Bonze Age 1500–1350 BC, from Oxborough, Norfolk	52,050	Acquired by the Trustees of the British Museum.
A carved Narwhal ivory horn from the mid 12th century	448,762.50	Decision further deferred until after 18 March 1995.
A painting, 'The Painter's Room', by Lucien Freud, dated 1943	515,812.50	Decision deferred until after 1 April 1995.
An arithmetical Rotula	46,462.50	Under consideration by the Secretary of State.
The Stanhope Calculator	247,612.50	Under consideration by the Secretary of State.
Materials relating to Stanhope's Demonstrator	46,462.50	Under consideration by the Secretary of State.
A sculpture by Henry Moore, 'Head and Shoulders' (1927–28)	475,000	Decision deferred until after 6 April 1995.
A bust of Thomas Hollis by Joseph Wilton, c. 1700	400,000	Export licence granted.
A painting, 'Daniel and Cyrus before the Idol Bel' by Rembrandt, dated 1633	4,800,000	Export licence granted.
A drawing, 'Samson and Delilah' by Giovanni Francesco Barbieri, called Il Guercino	76,425.82	Export licence granted.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Permanent Secretaries

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which permanent secretaries have left his Department's employment in the last five years; and which public positions they have been appointed to subsequently.

Mr. Howard: Sir Clive Whitmore retired from the Home Office as permanent secretary within the period covered by the question. He has not been appointed to any position by Ministers.

Mr. John Shaw

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to respond to Mr. John Shaw of 33 Bellpit close, Worsley in the matter of pension entitlement from Crown service overseas.

Mr. Howard: It has not been possible to trace any correspondence from Mr. John Shaw on the matter of pension entitlement from Crown service overseas. I have asked my officials to write to Mr. Shaw asking him to write in again, or to send a copy of his original letter, and the matter will then receive early attention.

Offenders in the Community

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to publish the 1995 "National Standards for the Supervision of Offenders in the Community".

Mr. Howard: I shall publish tomorrow the 1995 "National Standards for the Supervision of Offenders in the Community" jointly with my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Health and the Secretary of State for Wales and simultaneously will place copies in the Library.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total annual cost to public funds of housing in detention all those seeking asylum.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The available information does not identify separately those costs which relate to asylum seekers.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the cost per detainee per year for each of the establishments in which those who are seeking asylum in the United Kingdom are detained.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The overall cost of detaining a person in detention accommodation for which the Immigration Service is responsible is currently estimated at £540 per week including full Immigration Service staffing costs. This would equate to £28,080 in a year but detention for this period would be most unusual. Figures for individual centres are not kept separately. Some people are detained under powers in the Immigration Act 1971 in Prison Service establishments, where the average cost per place in 1993–94 was £411 per week—£21,372 per year—but these figures exclude headquarters staffing costs.

Ethnic Minorities (Police)

Mr. Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the relationship between black people and the police; and what plans he has to improve it.

Mr. Maclean: The police service and the Government are committed to developing positive relationships between the police and all sections of the community, including minority ethnic groups. Measures taken to meet the needs of these communities include a statutory requirement for consultation with the community; the introduction of ethnic monitoring of police activity; the establishment of the inter-departmental racial attacks group and other activities in police forces to deal with racial violence; provision of a range of training in community and race relations; force recruitment campaigns aimed at encouraging ethnic minority candidates to apply to join the police; and improved grievance procedures against allegations of discrimination within police forces.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many court reports were completed by the north east London probation service during 1992 and 1993;

(2) how many offenders were supervised by the north east London probation service on 30 June 1994.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-East (Mr. Timms) on 28 February 1995 (column 539).

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff are employed and at what grade by the north east London probation service on 30 June 1992, 30 June 1993 and 30 June 1994.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question by the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Gerrard) on 6 March 1995 at column 31.

Combat 18

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what evidence he has of the activities of Combat 18 amongst supporters of Chelsea football club;

(2) what assessment he has made of the role of the British National party and Combat 18 in the disturbances in Bruges on 27 and 28 February.

Mr. Maclean: Responsibility for gathering information about extremist organisations and their members, and for the investigation of specific criminal offences, rests with the police. I understand from the police that there is no evidence that Combat 18 is itself involved amongst the supporters of Chelsea football club, although some of those who associate with the supporters may have sympathies with this group. Neither is there evidence to suggest that the BNP or Combat 18 were involved in the disturbances in Bruges on 27 and 28 February.

Dangerous Dogs Act

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The Dangerous Dogs Act is kept under continuing review in the light of how it works, including consideration of the points made in the private Peer's Bill currently before another place.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the section 11 allocations made for each local authority in 1994–95.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Allocations to individual authorities are subject to adjustment from time to time in the light of a change in circumstances—for example, when a school or college opts to set up a separate project. The following table shows the current allocations for the 1994–95 financial year.

Intoxicating Substances

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been brought in each year since the passing of the Intoxicating Substances Supply Act 1985; and how many have been successful.

Mr. Maclean: Information for 1985 to 1993 is given in the table. 1994 data will not be available until the autumn 1995.

Data Protection

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish the compliance cost assessment for the draft data protection directive as it applies to the United Kingdom (a) as regards the 1992 draft and (b) the draft agreed at the latest Council of Minsters meeting;

(2) if he will state the categories of paper records to which the draft data protection directive now applies; and what estimate he has made of the costs which this provision will impose on British businesses.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: A paper showing the results of a survey of the estimated cost of implementing the 1992 draft of the directive in the United Kingdom has been made publicly available. A copy of this paper was placed in the Library of the House last year. We have as yet made no estimate of the cost of implementing the present draft of the directive, although the improvements made to the directive, as set out in my reply to my hon. Friend on 23 February at column 332, mean that the costs involved are now likely to be significantly lower.

In its application to paper records, the draft directive covers personal data which form or are intended to form part of a filing system. Within certain parameters, it is for member states to decide what constitutes a filing system for the purposes of applying the directive. Determining the precise definition to use, in consultation with business and other interests which will be affected, will be an important part of the process of implementing the directive.

Closed Circuit Television

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the good practice guidelines to local authorities and police authorities on the use of closed circuit television in public places.

Mr. Maclean: A copy of the Home Office publication "CCTV—Looking Out for You" has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the home Department if he will list (a) all local authorities and (b) all police authorities, indicating joint ventures, operating closed circuit television schemes in public places and give the total capital cost per scheme and annual operating cost per scheme.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not collected centrally. A list of some towns believed to be operating CCTV schemes is included at appendix 2 to the Home Office guidance booklet "CCTV—Looking Out for You", but it is not necessarily comprehensive. Costs are a matter for the individual operators. I have arranged for a copy of the booklet to be sent to the hon. Member.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of all Home Office research projects examining the effectiveness of CCTV in public places in reducing crime levels indicating the institution, research body or individual responsible for the project, the cost per project and date of completion or expected date of completion.

Mr. Maclean: The information is contained in the following table.

Research Project/Publication	Institution/Research body/Author	Cost	Date of completion
The Impact of Closed Circuit Television on Crime in the London Underground—Home Office Research Study No. 49	Home Office; Research and Planning Unit	Not available	1978

Effectiveness of CCTV security systems	Home Office Police Scientific Development Branch	£200,000 over 5 years	April 1997

Overseas Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions take place when an overseas prisoner sentenced for crimes committed in the United Kingdom is returned to his country of origin to complete the remainder of his sentence as to the date of the release of such a person from prison.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 8 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the consultation that takes place concerning prisoners' release dates when prisoners are returned to their country of origin to complete their sentences.

The transfer of prisoners between the United Kingdom and other jurisdictions is governed by the Repatriation of Prisoners Act 1984 and international agreements. These require that both jurisdictions concerned and the prisoner seeking repatriation, consent to any transfer. In considering repatriation requests made by prisoners here, the foreign jurisdiction is required to provide information as to how the remaining balance of a prisoner's sentence would be administered and release determined following transfer. If both jurisdictions then consent to the prisoner's transfer, this information is communicated to the prisoner in seeking his or her consent. A prisoner transferred to a foreign jurisdiction receives full credit for all time spent in custody here relating to completion of sentence prior to the transfer, including any remand time. Following transfer, the remaining balance of time to serve attracts the early release arrangements of the foreign jurisdiction.

Videos

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the sale of videos giving instructions on the use of explosives and on techniques for killing humans; and what response he has given.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend has received three letters from Members of Parliament and two letters from the public in the last 12 months about the supply of instructional videos that show the use of explosives and criminal techniques. Under the Video Recordings Act 1984 these works were exempt from classification by the British Board of Film Classification—BBFC—and their unclassified supply was not therefore unlawful. We have, however, taken action in the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 to ensure that all video works which depict techniques likely to be useful in the commission of offences or, which to any significant extent, depict criminal activity which is likely to any significant extent to stimulate or encourage the commission of offences, are subject to classification by the BBFC. The BBFC may of course withhold a classification certificate should it consider it appropriate to do so, particularly bearing in mind the statutory criteria set out in the Act which the board has to take into account when classifying works. Once the relevant provisions come into force anyone supplying a work in respect of which a certificate has been refused would be liable to prosecution.

Private Clegg

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 22 February, Official Report, column 223, if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which a journalist interviewed Private Clegg at Wakefield prison using an assumed name; and what actions he is taking to prevent such incidents taking place.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 8 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking what action has been taken following the interview of Private Lee Clegg at Wakefield prison by a journalist.

Mr. Clegg's visitors are now required to produce satisfactory evidence of their identity before they are allowed to visit him.

Market Testing

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of the market testing exercise in connection with his Department's data processing work.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The estimated cost of conducting the market test of the Home Office's administrative information technology services division was £1,565,000. Estimated average annual savings arising from this market test are about £4.8 million or a saving of about 30 per cent. of the cost of comparable IT services under the former arrangements.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to privatise the police national computer; if he will list those bodies with whom he has recently discussed this topic; and what assessment he has made of (a) the advantages and (b) the disadvantages of privatising the computer.

Mr. Maclean: There are no plans for the privatisation of the police national computer—PNC2—which is housed at the Hendon data centre. But the Government continue to believe that it will in the longer term be beneficial to market test the operation of the police national computer service, with a view to contracting out its delivery while maintaining the ownership, control, and use of the records it contains in the hands of the police service. For the reasons given in my reply to a question by my right hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) on 8 February at columns 254–55, the current market test of the Hendon data centre will not proceed to competitive tendering at present. The position will be reviewed in about 18 months' time, when the requirement for the third generation computer—PNC3—which will eventually replace the current installation, becomes clearer.

Recent discussions on these matters have been held with the Association of Chief Police Officers, the Association of Chief Police Officers (Scotland), and the local authority associations under the aegis of the tripartite Police Information Services Board, which is the management board for the police national computer; and further discussions with the Hendon data centre trade union side have been arranged.

Data Processing

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the ongoing cost to his Department of monitoring the current costs relating to the contract for his Department's data processing work.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The total costs of managing the contract for information technology services provided by Sema Group plc are about £420,000 a year. They reflect the separation of purchaser and provider roles in the Department and would have been incurred whoever had won the market test for information technology services. Estimated average annual savings arising from this market test are about £4.8 million or a saving of about 30 per cent. of the cost of comparable IT services under the former arrangements.

Warwickshire Police Authority

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria were used by him to assess the suitability of members of the new Warwickshire police authority when he considered the deletion of names from the list supplied to him.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 27 February 1995]: I exercised my judgment as to who were the best candidates for appointment using the criteria of the qualities listed in the information for applicants for these appointments: good communication and financial skills; the ability to challenge accepted views in a constructive way; the ability to represent a wide range of people in the community and have an understanding of their policing needs and the pressure and challenges which face the police themselves; and possession of skills and experience which would broaden the expertise available to the police authority.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many names he himself deleted from the list supplied by the local nominating panel for the new Warwickshire police authority.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 27 February 1995]: Ten.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department with whom he consulted about deleting any of the names supplied by the nominating panel for the new Warwickshire police authority; and with which hon. Members he held discussions about the nominations to the Warwickshire police authority.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 27 February 1995]: The Home Office Whip was consulted. Ministers did not hold discussions with any hon. Members.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many names were supplied to him by the nominating panel for the new Warwickshire police authority; and how many he deleted from the list.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 27 February 1995]: The selection panel for Warwickshire police authority supplied 20 names to me, which I reduced to ten for further consideration by the councillor and magistrate members of the authority.

Police Statistics

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) police officers and (b) civilians are currently serving in constabularies in (i) England and Wales and (ii) each constabulary in the east midlands; and how many were serving in 1979.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 7 March 1995]: Information on those police forces in which I understand the hon. Member is interested is set out in the table. Information on England and Wales was given in the reply to his question on 1 March at column 575.

ENVIRONMENT

Birds

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the number of applications his Department received for the sale of birds listed in appendix 1 of CITES and appendix C1 of EC regulation 3626/82, and how many such birds were sold in the last year for which figures are available;

(2) what estimate his Department has made of the number of bird species and the number of individual birds currently held in captivity in the United Kingdom which are listed in appendix I of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species, and appendix C1 of EC regulation 3626/82.

Sir Paul Beresford: In 1994 my Department received 1,276 individual applications to sell specimens of bird species listed on appendix I of CITES, or annex C1 of EC regulation 3626/82. Exemptions were subsequently issued permitting the sale of 1,958 birds. My Department has no estimate of the number of species or specimens in this category which are currently held in captivity.

Westminster City Council

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he last met the officers and the councillors of Westminster city council to discuss the district auditor's interim report.

(2) when he or any of his predecessors have met the hon. member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) and the right hon. member for City of London and Westminster, South (Mr. Brooke) to discuss (a) Westminster city council's designated sales policy and (b) the district auditor's report on the designated sales policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: So far as I am aware, no such meetings have taken place. These are matters for the local authority and their appointed auditor.

Stellar's Sea Eagle

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the number of licences his Department has issued in each of the past two years for the importation of Stellar's sea eagle; if he will indicate the countries of origin and whether the birds were captive-bred; and if he will list the criteria that have to be met before a licence can be issued for the importation of Stellar's sea eagle.

Sir Paul Beresford: In the last two years my Department has issued one permit allowing the import of two specimens of Stellar's sea eagle. The birds were taken from the wild in Russia.

The criteria that have to be satisfied before an import permit can be issued are set out in article III of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species and are that:

the import will be for purposes which are not detrimental to the survival of the species involved;

the proposed recipient of a living specimen is suitably equipped to house and care for it; and the specimen is not to be used for primarily commercial purposes.

Local Government Commission

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he expects the case of Southport to be referred to and considered by the Local Government Commission;

(2) when he expects those metropolitan areas which have expressed a strong desire for a change in the structure of local government to be referred to and considered by the Local Government Commission.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We intend to consider directing the commission to conduct boundary reviews of metropolitan areas alongside, and in the light of, any individual district structure reviews that may be required following my right hon. Friend's announcement on 2 March, Official Report, col. 1183.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money was allocated to the educational components of the single regeneration budget in the successful local authority bids; and what he estimates to be the change in level of funding for section type projects transferred to the single regeneration budget.

Mr. Curry: Some 135 of the 201 approved bids from successful single regeneration budget partnerships are expected to include educational components. The SRB provides flexible financial support towards the overall cost of approved schemes. The amount of money likely to be spent on particular components, of what are generally multi-faceted bids, is therefore not available.

The Government are providing £83 million in 1995–96 across the country for new and existing schemes under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 which assist minority ethnic communities overcome linguistic and cultural barriers. All the projects transferred to the single regeneration budget will continue to be funded for their planned lifetimes.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make an announcement about the spending plans of his Department, Ordnance Survey and the Office of Water Services for the years 1995–96 to 1997–98.

Mr. Gummer: Yes. I have today published the Department of the Environment's annual report for 1995. This sets out in detail the outcome of the public expenditure survey announced in the November 1994 Budget Statement as it affects the areas of my responsibility. The report provides an overview of how my Department, Ordnance Survey and Ofwat have discharged their functions over the past year. It provides background to each spending programme and sets out our plans for the future.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will set out the amounts of the council tax which are currently owing to the Harrogate borough council and each of the other district councils in North Yorkshire.

(2) if he will set out the amounts of community charge which are currently owing to the Harrogate borough council and each of the other district councils in North Yorkshire.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Information on uncollected community charge and council tax for each local authority is not available centrally. However, the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy regularly publish estimates for individual authorities: figures for 31 March 1994 are available in its "Revenue Collection Statistics 1993–94" publication and are as follows:

	Community charge arrears (£000)	Council tax arrears (£000)
Craven	752	302
Hambleton	618	467
Harrogate	4,288	1,261
Richmondshire	1,234	254
Ryedale	671	413
Scarborough	2,144	2,811
Selby	n/a	n/a
York	2,783	866

The figures for Selby were not published by CIPFA.

Mr. Rendell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the assumed rate of interest for 1995–96 in respect of local authorities' assumed interest receipts; and what were the corresponding figures for 1993–94 and 1994–95;

(2) what is the control total for the interest receipts element of the standard spending assessments for 1995–96;

(3) what is the assumed amount of interest receipts for each county council for 1995–96; and what were the corresponding figures for 1993–94 and 1994–95.

Mr. Robert B. Jones [holding answer 6 March 1995]: Interest receipts appear in both the all other services and the capital financing SSA elements. The former element includes allowance for interest which local authorities might earn on cash balances, reserves and usable receipts; the latter an allowance for interest which could be earned on reserved receipts—the portion of a capital receipt which has to be set aside as provision for credit liabilities.

Table 1 shows the interest rates used for each SSA element for 1993–94, 1994–95 and 1995–96, together with the national control totals. Table 2 shows the assumed amounts for each county council.

Table 1—Interest rates and control totals

	Interest receipts element in the All Other Services block		Interest receipts element in the Capital Financing block
	Notional interest rate Per cent.	National control total £ million	Notional interest rate Per cent.	National control total £ million

1995–96	5.4	–351.0	9.1	–237.0

The interest rate used for the interest receipts element in the all other services block is the average LIBOR short-term interest rate. The rate used for the capital financing element is an average of short and long-term interest rates.

The 1995–96 figures do not include interest receipts in respect of shire police authorities. However, the figures for 1993–94 and 1994–95 for all shire countries, except Northumberland, contain an element in respect of police services since the SSA elements for police-related expenditure formed part of the county council SSA in those years.

The figures for the Isle of Wight Council cover the whole Isle of Wight area.

The interest receipts element in the capital financing block assumes that all reserved receipts are set aside to repay debt, ie no part of such receipts is used to repay debt early.

Climate Change Programme

Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the implications of the Department of Trade and Industry's new energy projections for the United Kingdom climate change programme.

Mr. Gummer: The new projections, announced today by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry and Energy, show that we can be confident of meeting our commitment under the climate change convention and that we now expect to exceed it, with emissions of carbon dioxide by the year 2001 significantly below 1990 levels.

This achievement reflects the impact of the United Kingdom climate change programme which was published in January last year.

In some areas we have exceeded our earlier expectations. In particular there has been a significant reduction in the carbon intensity of fuels used for electricity generation, through increased investment in combined cycle gas turbines and through improved performance of nuclear generation. This reflects the success of our policies of privatisation and continuing deregulation of the electricity and gas industries.

Some parts of the programme are not now expected to deliver as much as originally envisaged. In part this reflects the lower carbon intensity of the electricity displaced by some energy saving measures as a result of the success of the supply side changes. On VAT on domestic fuel and power, the 8 per cent. rate is now expected to contribute about 0.4 million tonnes of carbon—MtC—compared with the original estimate of 1.5MtC at the full rate of VAT. In addition, the Energy Saving Trust is currently reviewing its plans. It estimates that the programme of activities already established and financed and will save about 0.3MtC. This compares with an assumption in the new projections that the EST would deliver 1.6MtC by 2000, based on full delivery of the original target of 2.5MtC, adjusted for changes in carbon intensity of electricity displaced. The trust's further schemes will make additional contributions to the programme but are not yet established.

Overall, it would be reasonable to adjust the projections by about 1 MtC to reflect these changes in the trust's plans, suggesting that carbon dioxide emissions will be 6–13 MtC below 1990 levels by 2000. This represents savings of 16–24 MtC against the projections of which the climate change programme was based.

While there have been some changes in the relative contributions expected from the various elements of the programme, the Government continue to be fully committed to the package of measures set out in the UK climate change programme, and will continue to seek further cost effective ways of reducing carbon emissions. My Department will publish an update to the CO2 chapter of the climate change programme as soon as possible, reporting progress on each of the measures.

Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new commitments on greenhouse gas emissions for the period beyond 2000 he will be proposing at the first conference of parties to the climate change convention.

Mr. Gummer: In our national programme under the climate change convention we made clear the need to begin now to look beyond 2000 at further steps which may need to be taken to combat the risk of climate change. We held a national conference last year to discuss the way ahead. This will be an important issue at the first conference of the parties to the convention, which takes place in Berlin at the end of this month.

The countries of the European Union have led the way in calling for a decision at Berlin to begin negotiations on new commitments beyond 2000. We have said that Berlin should set in hand the negotiation of a protocol which should strengthen and extend the existing commitments.

The EU has called on all developed country parties to take measures aimed at stabilising CO2 emissions at 1990 levels by the year 2000 and to work towards further steps to limit and reduce emissions of all greenhouse gases.

At Berlin I shall therefore be calling on all OECD countries to accept this challenge recognising that, in order to encourage others to demonstrate their commitment to the convention, these countries must continue to take the lead. We cannot wait until the end of the century before deciding what to do next. Negotiations must start in Berlin towards agreeing new commitments which, using a comprehensive or "basket" approach, would aim at beginning to reduce total greenhouse gas emissions in developed countries below 1990 levels.

The Government believe that developed countries should agree a new objective for the year 2010 to guide their commitment to adopt appropriate policies and measures. Agreement on a figure for total greenhouse gas emissions reductions in the range of 5 to 10 per cent. below 1990 levels would seem to be a credible and achievable next step for these countries to take, within the framework of the convention.

This would represent a challenge set against the projections of likely growth in our economies over the next 15 years. But the UK would undertake to set in hand work on implementing policies and measures needed to achieve such an objective, assuming others could agree to do the same. The prompt and successful implementation of our existing commitments, and the continuing effects of the measures we have already taken, will put us in an excellent position to do so.

Water and Sewerage Companies

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had with the director of the Office of Water Services about the pay and perks of directors and executives of the North West, Severn Trent and Yorkshire water and sewerage companies.

Mr. Atkins: None.

Housing

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the sums (a) pledged to and (b) provided for housing associations to build new homes for rent in each local authority area in Yorkshire and Humberside in the latest available year, together with the number of such homes which will be built in 1995–96 and the number of applications on current housing lists in each area.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Allocations made to housing associations from the Housing Corporation's approved development programme at the start of 1994–95, and those for 1995–96, to build new homes for rent in Yorkshire and Humberside are as listed by local authority area.

The number of households on local authority housing waiting lists in Yorkshire and Humberside on 1 April 1994 is given in section B of the "1994 HIP1 All Items Print", a copy of which is in the Library. Data on housing associations waiting lists are not collected centrally.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish the names of the authorities to be included in the programme for housing transfers by councils in 1995–96; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I am today announcing the names of the 11 authorities who will be able to proceed, on a voluntary basis and subject to the approval of their tenants, with proposals to transfers their housing stock to housing associations in 1995–96.

I am pleased that it has been possible to include 11 authorities on the 1995—96 programme of large scale voluntary transfers which comprises nearly 47,000 dwellings valued at over £500 million.

This is part of the Government's commitment to a continuing programme of transfers as means of generating private finance to repair and improve the condition of social housing and to increase the diversity and choice for tenants.

The 11 authorities which have successfully gained a place on the 1995–96 programme, together with 12 recipient housing associations, are as follows:

East Hampshire District Council (4,300 dwellings) to East Hampshire Housing Association;

Eastleigh District Council (4,682 dwellings) to Eastleigh Housing Association;

Hastings Borough Council (4,662 dwellings) to the Hastings and St Leonards Housing Associations;

Kennet District Council (4,996 dwellings) to Sarsen Housing Association;

Manchester City Council (1,460 dwellings) to Manchester and District Housing Association;

North Wiltshire District Council (6,300 dwellings) to the North Wiltshire Housing Association;

Purbeck District Council (1,860 dwellings) to Purbeck Housing Association;

Rushmoor District Council (5,000 dwellings) to Rushmoor Housing Association;

Spelthorne District Council (4,291 dwellings) to Spelthorne Housing Association;

The Royal Borough of Windsor and Maidenhead (3,236 dwellings) to Windsor and District Housing Association.

The Royal Borough of Windsor and Maidenhead (2,981 dwellings) to Maidenhead and District Housing Association; Wyre Borough Council (3,036 dwellings) to Wyre Housing Association.

To date, 37 authorities have disposed of all or part of their stock to new landlords and three more are due to do so by the end of this financial year. I know that, in addition to the 11 authorities listed, other authorities are working up proposals to transfer. There will be opportunities to add these authorities to the 1995–96 programme if they make good progress with their proposals in the coming months.

The Government's policy is that transfers should be housing associations which are registered with the Housing Corporation and which are independent of the council. Authorities owning more than 5,000 dwellings will normally be required to split these between two or more new landlords. Transfers are to be wholly funded by private sector sources and the Secretary of State will consent to transfers only where the majority of tenants are not opposed to the idea.

Permanent Secretaries

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which permanent secretaries have left his Department's employment in the last five years; and which public positions they have been appointed to subsequently.

Sir Paul Beresford: Sir Terry Heiser and Sir Geoffrey Chipperfield have retired as permanent secretaries in this Department in the five years from 1 March 1990. Ministers have appointed them to the following positions:

Sir Terry Heiser to the trustees of the Victoria and Albert Museum; Sir Geoffrey Chipperfield to continue as chairman of the sponsoring committee for the construction of the international cross channel gas interconnector. Sir Geoffrey has also carried out two internal management reviews; of the senior staffing of the Health and Safety Executive and of finance, planning and policy arrangements of the Royal Fine Arts Commission.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution the United Kingdom Government intend to make to the prevention of the proliferation of nuclear weapons.

Mr. David Davis: The nuclear non-proliferation treaty is the cornerstone of the nuclear non-proliferation regime. It has established an international norm against the spread of nuclear weapons and provides for effective International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards to verify compliance. We are working hard to secure the treaty's indefinite and unconditional extension at he review and extension conference in April and May.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the achievement of an international agreement to eliminate all nuclear weapons is an objective of the United Kingdom Government.

Mr. David Davis: We are committed to article VI of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, whereby we undertake to pursue negotiations in good faith on effective measures relating to cessation of the nuclear arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament and on a treaty on general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control.

For our part, we have made a number of important changes to our nuclear forces: we have announced the elimination of our land and surface maritime tactical nuclear capability; we have substantially reduced the number of nuclear bombs carried by our aircraft; and we have decided that Trident will carry fewer warheads than originally envisaged. The overall effect of these changes will be that, when Trident is fully in service, the explosive power of the United Kingdom's entire operational nuclear inventory will have been reduced by more than 25 per cent. since 1990.

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Indonesia about the arrest and subsequent treatment of East Timorese leader Xanana Gusmao; and when he next intends to raise this case with the Government of Indonesia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: With our EU partners, we made representations to the Government of Indonesia during the course of Xanana Gusmao's trial in 1993. We have urged the Indonesian Government to allow representatives of the International Committee of the Red Cross regular access to him, and will continue to monitor developments in his case.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Indonesia about the arrest and subsequent treatment of Mr. Muchtar Pakpahan and Amosi Telaumbanua, of the Indonesian Welfare Labour Union; and when he next intends to raise these cases with the Government of Indonesia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The European Union expressed concern in a public statement on 22 November 1994 about Mr. Pakpahan's conviction and sentencing on 13 February 1995 about the increased sentences given to him and Mr. Telaumbanua on appeal. With other EU embassies in Jakarta, we will continue to monitor their situation.

Harjit Singh

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the report of the hearing on 28 January into the case of Harjit Singh has now been prepared by his officers in the high commission in New Delhi.

Mr. Baldry: At the 28 January hearing in the Harjit Singh case, a deputy superintendent of the Punjab police gave evidence. A senior police superintendent has since given evidence at hearings on 10 February and 3 March. The next hearing is due to take place on 11 March, when the police lawyer will give evidence. The case continues.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will press for restrictions on the international transportation of nuclear waste in discussions on the future of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. David Davis: No. The international transport of nuclear waste resulting from civil nuclear activities is a matter for the commercial utilities. Provided that strict adherence is paid to international regulations governing safety of material and transportation, we would not interfere.

East Timor

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 6 December 1994, Official Report, column 172, what were the exact dates that staff attached to the Jakarta embassy visited East Timor in November 1991.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The dates were 14 to 19 November.

Vietnamese Refugees

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many refugees from Vietnam are still in Hong Kong.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are currently 1,696 refugees from Vietnam in Hong Kong, as well as 21,802 Vietnamese migrants who have been screened out as non-refugees, and 120 Vietnamese migrants awaiting screening.

Fee-paying Schools

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many officials in his Department have (a) children in fee-paying schools for whom Her Majesty's Government meet the bill because the officials are posted abroad and (b) children in fee-paying schools for whom Her Majesty's Government meet the bill after the officials have returned because their children remain in the school; and if he will detail the cost for the last three years for each of these two categories.

Mr. Baldry: In 1994–95 (a) 278 officers serving overseas and (b) 184 officers serving in the United Kingdom, have children at fee-paying schools in the United Kingdom. Costs in these categories are as follows:

	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94
a)	3.97	3.95	4.13
b)	3.76	3.93	4.04

The FCO does not meet the whole bill for each child. It makes a contribution towards basic fees but up to a ceiling based on the average fees of schools in the headmasters' conference.

Permanent Secretaries

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which permanent secretaries have left his Department's employment in the last five years; and which public positions they have been appointed to subsequently.

Mr. Baldry: Lord Wright, Sir David Gillmore and Tim Lankester—ODA—have left this Department in the last five years from 1 March 1990. Ministers have not offered them any public appointments.

Mr. Nick Leeson

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the German authorities in respect of denying access by the media to Mr. Nick Leeson.

Mr. Baldry: None. The German authorities have not denied access to Mr. Leeson by the media. Access is a matter for Mr. Leeson, his lawyer and the German police authorities.

Western Sahara

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent actions have been taken to promote the referendum on the future of the Western Sahara.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 6 March 1995]: The United Nations' identification commission is continuing the work of drawing up the voting list for the referendum in Western Sahara. UN Security Council resolution 973, adopted on 13 January this year, provided for an increase in the size of the identification commission. The UN sent a multi-disciplinary technical team to the area in February to plan the return of refugees, as provided for under the UN's settlement plan.

Mexico

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings are held between representatives of Her Majesty's Government and different political parties in Mexico; and what monitoring is undertaken of human rights in the Chiapas region.

Mr. David Davis [holding answer 6 March 1995]: Our embassy in Mexico City maintains close contact with the ruling political party and the main opposition parties of Mexico. They monitor human rights observance in the whole country, with particular attention to Chiapas at present.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are currently on invalidity benefit in Northern Ireland; what percentage of the population this represents; what the figures were in (a) 1979, (b) 1983 and (c) 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moss: The information requested is as follows:

Invalidity Benefit Statistics

Year	Recipients	Percentage of Population
1979	29,330	1.9
1983	33,935	2.2
1987	40,840	2.6
1994	71,275	4.4

Mobility Allowance

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to introduce mobility allowance for those under the age of five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moss: On 1 April 1992 mobility allowance was replaced by the mobility component of disability living allowance. There are no plans to extend the payment to children under five at present.

Permanent Secretaries

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which permanent secretaries have left his Department's employment in the last five years; and which public positions they have been appointed to subsequently.

Sir John Wheeler: Sir John Blelloch and Sir Kenneth Bloomfield have retired as permanent secretaries in the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments in the five years from 1 March 1990. Ministers have subsequently appointed them to the following positions:

Sir John Blelloch

Chairman of the Committee for Monitoring Tobacco Advertising and Sponsoring

Chairman of the GB Committee of the NI Partnership.

Member of the Prime Minister's Advisory Committee on Business Appointments.

Member of the Lord Chancellor's Advisory Committee on Public Records.

Trustee of the RAF Museum.

Sir Kenneth Bloomfield

Member of Queen's University Senate.

Member of the Law Reform Advisory Committee for NI.

Non-Executive Director of Green Park Health and Social Services Trust.

Chairman of NI Higher Education Council.

Social Fund

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what further adjustments he will make to the discretionary social fund budget in the current financial year.

Mr. Moss: The Northern Ireland social fund discretionary budget for 1994–95 will be increased as a result of continuing better than expected loan recoveries by the Social Security Agency and adjustments will be made to take account of pressures and easements in the budgets of a number of the agency's 11 districts.

The overall budget for loans will be increased by £230,000 while the budget for grants will be increased by £20,000, increasing the original allocations to £20,693,600 and £9,756,400 respectively. There will also be a small internal adjustment to the grants budgets for several districts to reflect variations in demand for assistance from the fund at local level.

Details of the revised budgets have been placed in the Library.

TRANSPORT

Departmental Property

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many domestic properties are currently owned (a) by his Department, (b) by his Department's agencies and (c) by contractors working under his Department's directions; and what is the estimated value of this stock.

Mr. Watts: All domestic properties acquired in connection with my Department's activities are owned in the name of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport.

Day-to-day responsibility for properties purchased in connection with the trunk roads programme rests with the chief executive of the Highways Agency. At 1 March 1995 there were 4,038 such properties. The stock of properties held by the HA is being revalued on 1 April 1995 and I will write to my hon. Friend with this information as soon as it is available.

A further eight domestic properties are held, in the name of the Secretary of State, by the Coastguard Agency. These properties are currently being valued as part of an overall asset valuation being undertaken by the agency and expected to be concluded in April.

No properties are purchased by contractors on behalf of the Secretary of State.

Driving Licences

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when and what measures he intends to introduce to give effect to the Council directive—91/439/EEC—on driving licences adopted in July 1991 to give effect to a separate theory testing as part of the driving test.

Mr. Norris: We shall be making an announcement shortly.

Light Goods Vehicles

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the LGV accident record on the Isle of Man following the introduction of the new law for instructors three years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: None.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies his Department has carried out in the last five years into the relationship between the HGV accident rate and the number of hours driven immediately before an accident.

Mr. Norris: My Department has commissioned research from the Transport Research Laboratory on sleep and driving. A composite report covering the accident involvement of heavy goods vehicle drivers in relation to sleep, together with sleepiness among male car drivers, is expected to be published by late May.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to reduce the limit on the maximum length of working day permitted for HGV drivers.

Mr. Norris: European Community regulations set limits on HGV driving time and minimum requirements for daily and weekly rest periods which effectively limit the length of the driver's working day. Currently, we do not anticipate further changes.

Permanent Secretaries

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which permanent secretaries have left his Department's employment in the last five years; and which public positions they have been appointed to subsequently.

Mr. Norris: Sir Alan Bailey retired as permanent secretary in this Department on 25 June 1991. He was appointed as a part-time member of the London Transport Board in December 1991.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish his consultation document on the future of the proposed east London river crossing.

Mr. Norris: Soon after Easter.

Road Construction

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all major road construction projects carried out by (a) local authorities and (b) his Department in each year since 1979, giving their costs at 1995 prices.

Mr. Watts: My Department does not hold information requested on major road construction undertaken by local authorities.

Details of all national road programme schemes completed since 1979 by the Department and the Highways Agency, are contained in roads White Papers and departmental reports which are held in the Library. Costs are quoted as estimated outturn prices and could be updated to 1995 prices only at disproportionate cost.

Career Breaks

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) men and (b) women applied for career breaks in his Department or its agencies; and how many have had their employment terminated in the last five years.

Mr. Norris: The Department does not keep a central record of applications for career breaks, but the Department's personnel information system records that in the last five years, 67 men and 716 women were given discretionary special leave with or without pay. This does not include those taking statutory maternity leave or staff on long-term sick leave, but does include those suspended. Of these, six have had their appointment terminated while on special leave.

Trans-European Road Network

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport with which bodies he consulted in drawing up the UK master plan on (a) the trans-European road network and (b) the trans-European rail and combined transport network.

Mr. Watts: Consultations took place with:

a) Local authority associations in England and the Secretaries of State for Northern Ireland, for Scotland and for Wales about the trans-European road network.

b) British Rail, European Passenger Services, Railtrack and Northern Ireland Railways on railways.

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what environmental and economic criteria he used to select schemes for inclusion in the trans-European road network.

Mr. Watts: The United Kingdom routes that the Government proposed for inclusion in the trans-European road network were put forward on the basis of their contribution to meeting the aims set out for trans-European networks in the treaty on European Union.

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average net present value for schemes designated part of the United Kingdom trans-European road network.

Mr. Watts: It is not possible to provide an average net present value.

Net present values are calculated separately for each scheme and are normally published when individual schemes reach the public consultation stage. Not all schemes on TERN routes have reached this stage.

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies his Department has conducted into the indirect economic benefits to the United Kingdom of the UK section of the trans-European road network.

Mr. Watts: The trans-European transport network plans are still in draft form pending adoption by the Council and the European Parliament.

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what estimates his Department has made of the cost of implementing the UK sections of (a) the trans-European road network, (b) the trans-European high-speed rail network, (c) the trans-European conventional rail network and (d) the trans-European combined transport network.

Mr. Watts: None. The network plans are still in draft form pending adoption by the Council and the European Parliament. The networks will, in any case, be indicative and place no obligation on member states to commit expenditure.

Railtrack Access Changes

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what change he has made in the authorised charges to be made by Railtrack to train operating companies; what sums were previously expected to be received in total income and what sums are not expected; and what will be the effect of the difference in rail improvements and maintenance.

Mr. Watts: The Rail Regulator is responsible for approving the access charges levied by Railtrack. The regulator recently announced, following a review of Railtrack's access charges, that charges in 1995–96 should be, on average, 8 per cent. lower in real terms than their level in 1994–95. Thereafter, they will be reduced in real terms by 2 per cent. per annum. The regulator has stated that he considers that this level of income will generate sufficient cash flow to enable Railtrack to finance the investment programme needed to maintain a safe, effective and efficient network.

Total access charges levied by Railtrack on franchised passenger train operators in 1994–95 were £2,065 million.

Drive Programme

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to work with the EU in relation to its new Drive programme to develop an integrated road transport environment in the UK and Europe.

Mr. Watts: The Department of Transport has worked closely with the European Commission to design, build and manage both the previous phases of the Drive programme. We have helped the Commission to put together the work plan for the next programme; where appropriate, we are supporting and joining consortia bidding to undertake the work; we are offering to help the Commission in its evaluation process; and we intend to participate fully in the arrangements that the Commission is making to monitor and manage the new programme itself.

Chideock-Morcombe Lake Bypass

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he expects to announce his decision on the A35 Chideock-Morcombe lake bypass; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he expects to receive the inspector's report into the public inquiry on the A35 Chideock-Morcombe lake bypass.

Mr. Watts: The timing of an announcement will be subject to the receipt of the inspector's report, and the need for the Secretaries of State to give careful consideration to the inspector's conclusions and recommendations.

I understand that the inspector expects to be able to submit his report to the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Transport by the middle of the year.

Road Pricing

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent research his Department has undertaken into the concept of road pricing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: A major research project into the implications of introducing congestion charging in London is nearing completion. The findings will be made public later this year. My Department has also provided some financial support for research by local authorities outside London.

Particulate Pollution

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the Department of Health concerning the number of early deaths from particulate pollution.

Mr. Norris: Particulate emissions are currently being considered by a sub-group of the Department of Health's Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants which was set up to advise Government on the effects on health of air pollutants both in outdoor and indoor air. My officials are fully involved with COMEAP.

PRIME MINISTER

National Service

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister what estimate he has made of the number of people who have performed national service (a) in each of the armed services, (b) in the Merchant Navy and (c) comparable service for the National Coal Board.

The Prime Minister: The information requested is not available.

Internet

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards encouraging party political debate on the Internet.

The Prime Minister: Her Majesty's Government are all in favour of a full and frank political debate on the Internet or in any other forum.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister if he will dismiss the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, the hon. Member for Croydon, Central (Sir P. Beresford); and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement regarding manufacturing employment.

The Prime Minister: In the quarter to December 1994, employment in manufacturing industry rose by 37,000 the largest rise since quarterly records began.

EMPLOYMENT

Training

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what legislative measures he will introduce to increase the number of unemployed young people who enter training programmes.

Mr. Paice: There are no legislative measures planned for this purpose. The Government are committed to increasing the range of options in education and training available to young people and increasing the level of advice and guidance provided by the Careers Service.

EU Directives

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will instigate a publicity campaign giving advanced warning to employers of the retrospective application of the workplace, signs and construction products directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Oppenheim: Whenever European Community directives are implemented, appropriate publicity is given to the relevant implementing regulations. The workplace directive, safety signs directive and construction products directive are at different stages of implementation. In no case do the regulations apply retrospectively.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the impact on small businesses of the workplace, signs and construction products directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Oppenheim: A cost benefit analysis or compliance cost assessment is prepared in respect of all new regulations implementing European Community directives. The workplace directive, safety signs directive and construction products directive are at different stages of implementation. In each case assessments have been made of the likely costs of the relevant regulations.

Permanent Secretaries

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which permanent secretaries have left his Department's employment in the last five years; and which public positions they have been appointed to subsequently.

Miss Widdecombe: Sir Geoffrey Holland transferred from the Employment Department to the Department for Education on 13 January 1993.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Ian Greer Associates

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what items of correspondence were received by Ministers in the Overseas Development Administration from Messrs Ian Greer Associates in the last month.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 28 February 1995]: One invitation to meet business men was received and accepted.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Permanent Secretaries

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Attorney General which permanent secretaries have left his Department's employment in the last five years; and which public positions they have been appointed to subsequently.

The Attorney-General: Sir James Nursaw KCB, QC retired as Treasury Solicitor in October 1992. He was part-time legal adviser to the Broadcasting Complaints Commission during 1992–93 and is currently part-time counsel to the Chairman of Committees (House of Lords).

Sir Allan Green QC resigned as Director of Public Prosecutions in October 1991. He has not been appointed to any public positions.

EDUCATION

Permanent Secretaries

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which permanent secretaries have left her Department's employment in the last five years; and which public positions they have been appointed to subsequently.

Mr. Boswell: In the five years from 1 March 1990, Sir John Caines KCB and Sir Geoffrey Holland KCB have left the Department for Education. Sir John Caines has since been appointed as an advisor to the National Heritage memorial fund and a council member of the Open university. Sir Geoffrey Holland has not been appointed by Ministers to any public positions.

School Funding

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to her answer of 3 March, Official Report, column 775, concerning priorities in educational expenditure, if she will publish the text of the letters she has sent to her hon. Friends on this topic.

Mr. Forth: No.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what were the average sizes of single teacher classes in each year since 1979–80 in maintained (a) primary schools, (b) secondary schools and (c) overall.

Mr. Robin Squire: The average sizes of single teacher classes in maintained primary and secondary schools in England between 1980 and 1994, the latest date for which information is available, are shown in the table.

Overseas Students

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will announce the Government's decision on the proposal to amend the Education (Fees and Awards) Regulations 1994 to allow institutions to charge overseas students on part-time courses higher fees; and further, whether she will publish the responses to the consultation exercise engaged in by her Department.

Mr. Boswell: The Government have carefully considered the responses to the consultation exercise announced last September. In the light of the general support for the proposal shown by the responses to the exercise from institutions, the Government have decided to lay before Parliament an amendment to the Education (Fees and Awards) Regulations 1994 to allow higher and further education institutions to charge all students on part-time courses a higher fee, representing the full cost of their course, where they do not meet the three-year residency requirement and are not excepted.

The amendment will not alter, in any way, institutions' present discretion to set their own fee levels or to waive or reduce fees for asylum seekers if they choose.

In line with the code of practice on access to Government information, a summary of the responses to the consultation exercise will be provided by the Department from today. A copy will be placed in the Library. Copies of individual responses will be made available in the public enquiry room of the Department, unless the respondent has specifically requested confidentiality.

Community Facilities

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what advice her Department gives to local education authorities regarding the provision of community or adult education facilities financed by local education authorities; and what advice her Department gives to the Department of the Environment regarding the provision of finance for such facilities and courses.

Mr. Boswell: It is for individual local education authorities to secure the adequate provision for their areas of certain types of further education for adults, as defined by the Further and Higher Education Act 1992. The Department does not issue any advice to local education authorities on this matter.

The Department keeps the Department of the Environment abreast of spending needs in this area, and discusses with them and the local authority associations the provision of funding to local education authorities.

Discretionary Awards

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many students are in receipt of discretionary grants for the latest year for which figures are available; and what are the main subjects or courses being studied.

Mr. Boswell: Local authority returns show that my Department in 1992–93, the latest year for which data are available, there were 220,000 discretionary awards. A total of 24,000 awards were for courses of higher education of which 3,000 were for postgraduate courses; and 196,000 awards were for further education courses. Information on the subjects studied by award holders is not collected centrally.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what advice her Department gives to local education authorities regarding the financing of student courses on a discretionary basis; and what advice her Department gives to the Department of the Environment regarding the provision of finance for discretionary grants.

Mr. Boswell: It is for individual local education authorities to determine their own discretionary awards policies in the light of local needs and priorities. The Department does not produce any central guidance on this issue.

The Department keeps the Department of the Environment abreast of spending needs in this area, and discusses with them and the local authority associations the provision of funding to local education authorities.

Further Education (Funding)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement on the demarcation between (a) community and adult education courses funded by local education authorities, (b) courses of further and higher education funded by Higher Education Funding Council and (c) courses for which training and enterprise councils are responsible.

Mr. Boswell: Under the Further and Higher Education Act 1992, the further education funding councils and local education authorities are jointly responsible for securing the adequate provision for their areas of all kinds of further education for adults. The FEFCs are responsible for securing the provision of the type of further education defined in schedule 2 to the Act—mainly vocational, academic, access and basic skills courses. LEAs have responsibility for securing the provision of all other kinds of further education—mainly leisure and recreational courses.

The Higher Education Funding Council for England funds HE institutions for non-vocational community education through its funding methodology for part-time teaching, and for continuing vocational education where the institutions apply successfully for development funding.

Training and enterprise councils are responsible generally for co-ordinating the training needs of their areas and specifically for delivering the youth training programme for young people and the training for work programme for adults.

Special Needs

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the allocation for each local education authority for special educational needs support in 1994–95 and 1995–96, broken down into the categories (a) training, (b) school policies and (c) parent partnership schemes in each year.

Mr. Forth: The allocations to each local education authority for these grants, made under the grants for edcuation support and training programme, are shown in the table.

Support and Training

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the full bids for grants for education support and training for the 1995 assessment and testing arrangements for each local education authority.

Mr. Forth: The grants for education support and training allocations for the implementation of national curriculum assessment arrangements, which totalled £23.3 million in 1995–96, were distributed among local education authorities according to a formula, rather than requiring bids from LEAs.

However, 34 of the 109 LEAs did indicate the level of support they were seeking. This information is shown in the table

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Fire Safety

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee on what occasions over the past five years combined familiarisation drills and exercises have been held between the Palace of Westminster fire section, other security staff and the London fire brigade as part of incident pre-planning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ray Powell: Detailed records of familiarisation visits by London fire brigade crews prior to 1993 are not held. Since January 1993 16 familiarisation visits have taken place. Large scale exercises involving the extensive deployment of crews, including a fire boat crew on one occasion, have taken place as follows:

2 October 1990

1 May 1993

1 May 1994

A further large scale exercise with the London brigade is planned for 14 May 1995.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what lessons have been drawn from the fires at Hampton Court palace, Windsor castle and Stormont in relation to minimising fire risk at (a) the Palace of Westminster and (b) other buildings in the parliamentary estate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ray Powell: Following the publication of the guide to the protection of historic buildings "Heritage Under Fire" in 1990, which drew on the experience of a number of fires including the one at Hampton Court, a fire safety manager was appointed in 1992 to advise on all aspects of fire precautions and means of escape. The publication of a fire safety strategy for the Palace of Westminster and parliamentary outbuildings in 1993 and the establishment of a fire safety committee to review fire risk management and ensure the fire safety strategy is implemented are both in line with the recommendations of the report by Sir Alan Bailey, "Fire Protection Measures for the Royal Palaces", published in May 1993, following the fire at Windsor castle. It is understood that the report into the fire at Parliament buildings, Stormont, will be published in due course.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee (1) if (a) the Palace of Westminster and (b) other buildings in the parliamentary estate reach the standard of fire safety which would be required for the issue of a fire certificate;

(2) if he will make an assessment of the fire risk of (a) the Palace of Westminster and (b) other buildings in the parliamentary estate.

Mr. Ray Powell: Home Office fire inspectors have recently assessed the fire risk of the Palace of Westminster and have recommended further measures to be taken. These are being progressed and it is expected that a fire certificate will be issued later this year. The fire risks of the parliamentary outbuildings have also been assessed and fire certificates have already been issued for Norman Shaw North, Norman Shaw South, 1 Canon row and 2 the Abbey garden. A fire certificate for 3 Dean's yard is expected shortly. Some additional works are being carried out in 7 Millbank and the phase 1 building and it is expected that fire certificates will be issued later this year.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what difficulties of access exist for the fire brigade and other emergency services in the event of fire in relation to (a) the Press Gallery area and (b) other areas presenting access difficulties.

Mr. Ray Powell: Vehicular access for fire brigade appliances into Speaker's Court and the inner courtyards has to be carefully managed because of the size of the archways. This has been tested on exercises held with the London fire brigade. There are no particular difficulties of access for fire brigade and emergency service personnel to the Press Gallery or other areas of the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission (1) what changes in the number of fire officers within the Palace of Westminster's fire section were contained in the recommendation of the Metropolitan police internal reports into fire prevention that were prepared in February 1985 and December 1987.

(2) how many additional fire officer posts within the Palace of Westminster's fire section were recommended by the fire safety manager in 1992; what were the reasons or basis for his recommendations; and how many additional officers were subsequently appointed.

(3) if he will list the establishment of the Palace of Westminster's fire section for the last 10 years, indicating at each appropriate stage the size of the parliamentary estate over which their responsibility extended.

(4) what changes to the establishment, watch rotas, pay and conditions of service of the Palace of Westminster fire section are (a) under consideration or (b) subject to consultation with trade unions; and if he will make a statement.

(5) if he will make a statement about the role and functions of the members of the Palace of Westminster's fire section in the initial stages of any fire incident being reported.

Mr. Beith: Members of the Palace of Westminster fire section are civilian employees of the Metropolitan police subject to Metropolitan police terms and conditions of service. The role and responsibilities of the fire section are specified in the fire strategy for the Palace of Westminster and parliamentary outbuildings, which was approved by the relevant Committees of both Houses in 1993. A review of the fire section has recently been carried out by the staff inspector in conjunction with the staff inspector of the House of Lords and I have asked the Serjeant at Arms to write to the hon. Member about their recommendations.

Motor Vehicles

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he will have notices placed around the precincts of the Houses of Parliament ordering drivers of all motor vehicles to turn their motor engines off when their vehicle is stationary or parked; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: No. In my reply to my hon. Friend on 17 February 1994, Official Report, column 938, I stated that this was a matter for the Serjeant at Arms. I understand that instructions have since been given to members of the security force to caution drivers who leave their engines running unnecessarily.

TREASURY

Charges and Salaries

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what new measures he proposes to combat the impact of charges he assessed to be unfair, dividends he has assessed to be excessive and top salaries he has assessed to be contrary to (a) the consumers' interests and (b) the wider national interest.

Sir George Young: These are primarily matters for the companies concerned, within the framework of competition law, the Companies Act and any special regulatory regime prescribed by Parliament. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's remarks to the House on 28 February about board remuneration set out the Government's position.

Civil Service

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, how many new positions are needed to run the new delegated pay systems which the Government has introduced for each department in the civil service.

Sir George Young: Responsibility for the pay and grading of almost two thirds of civil servants is delegated to Departments. "The Civil Service—Taking Forward Continuity and Change" (CM2748) confirmed the Government's intention that all Departments will become responsible for their own pay and grading arrangements below senior levels from 1 April 1996.

It is not possible to give an assessment of the administrative implications of the changes. However, the Government believe that there is considerable potential in the civil service for further improvement both in quality of service, within what can be afforded, and in efficiency. Greater delegation of decisions will enable local needs and circumstances to be taken more fully into account in devising pay and grading systems, will allow Departments to manage and motivate their staff more effectively, and will further strengthen links between reward and performance.

Performance-related Pay

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reasons he has introduced performance-related pay into the public service.

Sir George Young: Performance-related pay helps to support the Government's citizens charter objective to establish a regular and direct link between the contribution made by individuals to the standards of service provided, and their reward. First, it is fair, because it rewards those who have made the greatest contributions. Secondly, more flexible pay systems help to achieve a more effective distribution of resources. Thirdly, performance-related pay focuses effort on the delivery of key objectives by reinforcing an organisation's performance management system.

Tobacco

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what United Kingdom laws govern the distance selling of tobacco products to United Kingdom citizens on mail order from European countries with lower excise duties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The United Kingdom law governing the distance selling arrangements for excise goods is the Excise Goods (Holding, Movement, Warehousing and REDS) Regulations 1992. Under these regulations the vendor of the goods in the other member state is liable to pay the UK excise duty.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate what effect distance selling of tobacco products has on the legal trade in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Distance selling is a recognised legitimate activity for which provision has been made in EC legislation, which is implemented in United Kingdom legislation in the Excise Goods (Holding, Movement, Warehousing and REDS) Regulations 1992. Such transactions attract payment of UK duty. Accordingly, no separate assessment has been made on the effect that they have on UK trade.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was (a) the number of new residential lettings created under the business expansion scheme in Scotland for each of the years 1988–89 to 1992–93 inclusive and (b) the cost per dwelling in Scotland of new residential lettings under business expansion scheme in terms of both income tax relief and exemption from capital gains tax.

Sir George Young: Available estimates for Scotland are in the table. It is not possible to give a reliable estimate of the cost of exempting gains arising from disposals of BES shares from capital gains tax.

Year	Number of BES new lettings	Average cost of income tax relief per new letting (£)
1988–89	800	17,000
1989–90	400	21,000
1990–91	100	22,000
1991–92	100	10,000
1992–93[1]	600	20,000

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the members of the committee which he has appointed to review the common fisheries policy.

Mr. Jack: I shall reply to the hon. Member when I have made the appointments concerned.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of outstanding second-tier reviews of child support cases carried out under section 18 of the Child Support Act 1991; and what steps he has taken to clear the backlog.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 8 March 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of outstanding requests for reviews to be carried out under Section 18 of the Child Support Act.

At the end of January 1995, 8,099 such requests were outstanding, compared to 10,766 outstanding at the end of July 1994. This reduction reflects the increased emphasis which has been given to this type of work over recent months. I anticipate that the backlog will be cleared by 31 March 1995.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what amount of new maintenance has been collected by the Child Support Agency in each year of its operation to the latest available date.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 8 March 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the new maintenance collected by the Child Support Agency.

Figures for the whole of 1993/94 and from April 1994 to the end of January 1995 are shown in the table. I have included maintenance paid direct by absent parents (APs) to parents with care (PWCs) in income support (IS) cases. However, I have not included maintenance paid direct between parents who do not use the Agency's collection service in family credit (FC) cases, or cases where benefit is not in payment. This is because your Question seems to be directed specifically at those areas in which the Agency is most closely involved.

	1993–94	1994–95[1]
Paid direct by Absent Parents to Parents with Care on IS	1	10
Paid through Agency collection service in IS, FC and DWA cases and offsets benefit spending[2]	10	32

	1993–94	1994–95[1]
Paid through Agency collection service in IS, FC and DWA cases in excess of benefit paid, and to non benefit cases[3]	3	19
Total	[4]15	62

[1] 1994–95 figures cover April 1994 to January 1995.

[2] Maintenance paid through the Agency collection service that offsets benefit spending and therefore leads to benefit savings.

[3] Maintenance paid through the Agency collection service that is passed on to parents with care.

[4] Includes a small element relating to PWCs who used the collection service and were receiving either FC; disability working allowance (DWA), or who were not receiving benefit.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total number of (a) cases take on by the Child Support Agency since April 1993, (b) interim maintenance assessments made, (c) full maintenance assessments made, (d) cases cleared without an assessment being made, (e) cases deferred because an effective application has not been made by an income support claimant, (f) outstanding case involving a paternity dispute and (g) other outstanding cases awaiting assessment.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss. Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 8 March 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of cases taken on and assessment made by the Child Support Agency.

Between April 1993 and the end of January 1995, the Agency issued 1,190,200 maintenance application forms (on some forms more than one absent parent may be involved); completed 129,000 interim maintenance assessments and 299,100 full maintenance assessments. 403,000 cases were cleared without an assessment being made.

As at the end of January 1995, 432,000 cases were on hand awaiting a maintenance assessment, including 6,800 in which paternity was being disputed. Given the volume of cases dealt with by the Agency we would expect to have around 250,000 cases on hand at any one time.

You also ask about cases deferred because an effective application had not been made by a client receiving income support. I have taken this to refer to those cases deferred as a one off exercise as part of the measures announced on 20 December 1994. This exercise was only completed last week so the full details will not be available until later this month; but by the end of January, there were 2,700 cases where IS applications had been deferred.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many maintenance enquiry forms have been issued to absent parents since the Child Support Agency commenced operation in April 1993;

(2) how many maintenance application forms have been issued since the Child Support Agency commenced operation in April 1993; and what proportion have been issued to parents not already receiving maintenance.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 8 March 1995:

I am replying to recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security abut the number of maintenance enquiry forms (MEFs) and maintenance application forms (MAFs) that have been issued by the Child Support Agency.

From April 1993 to the end of January 1995, 692,900 MEFs were issued to absent parents.

In the same period 1,190,200 MAFs were issued, of which we estimate that 77 per cent. were issued to parents not already receiving maintenance.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many requests for a review of a child support assessment have been made, and what proportion of these has resulted in an application for an appeal to a child support appeal tribunal.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 8 March 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about reviews and appeals.

From April 1993 to the end of January 1995 the Child Support Agency had received 47,100 requests for review under Section 18 of the Child Support Act.

In the same period 6,800 applications for appeal were made. As not all applications for appeal arise from Section 18 reviews, it is not appropriate to express this figure as a proportion of the total number of Section 18 reviews requested.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of outstanding child maintenance applications are over (a) 13 weeks, (b) 26 weeks and (c) 52 weeks old.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 8 March 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of state for Social Security about the proportion of outstanding child maintenance applications that are over 13, 26 and 52 weeks old.

The table shows the proportion of cases within these age bands as a percentage of the caseload as at the end of January 1995.

	Percentage of caseload
Cases over 13 weeks old	83
Cases over 26 weeks old	69
Cases over 52 weeks old	48

A significant number of the cases over 26 weeks old will be deferred as part of the measures announced on 20 December 1994.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the total payments being made to the Child Support Agency by absent parents in respect of children whose parents with care were in receipt of relevant state benefits before April 1993 and whose assessment has been completed by the Child Support Agency; and what is the total number of these cases.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Social Fund

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give (a) the figure of the amount lent in Wales under the social fund scheme, (b) the amount currently outstanding and (c) the numbers of those currently liable.

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Mr. Michael Bichard to Mr. Ron Davies, dated 7 March 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question requesting the figure for the amount lent in Wales under the Social Fund scheme, the amount currently outstanding and the numbers of those currently liable.

You ask for the figure of the amount lent in Wales under the Social Fund scheme. You are probably aware that the Fund has two distinct parts—regulated and discretionary. Social Fund Budgeting Loans and Crisis Loans are part of the discretionary part of the scheme.

The amount of loans expenditure in Wales for the period 1 April 1994 to 31 January 1995 is £12,143,769.41. The amount currently outstanding (unspent) in Wales for loans in the current financial year is £2,823,256.00. I am also able to tell you that as at 31 January 1995 £13,597.79, in total, was owed by applicants in the Benefits Agency Districts in Wales. This figure will include amounts outstanding on loans currently being repaid and for loans where recovery has been interrupted or deferred.

I am unable to supply the numbers of those currently liable as the Social Fund Computer System does not count the number of individual customers. However, the number of awards made in Wales for loans for the period 1 April 1994 to 31 January 1995 is 77,417. As a customer may have more than one loan outstanding, and many customers will have repaid their loan(s) within this period, this figure may be greater than the number of those currently liable.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Compensation Recovery Unit

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list the number of cases in which funds have been recovered by the Compensation Recovery Unit during the last year for which figures are available; what were the administrative and other costs of the unit during that period; and what was the gross and net sum ingathered after allowing for those costs;

(2) how many staff are presently employed in the Compensation Recovery Unit.

Mr. Roger Evans: These are matters for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Mr. Michael Bichard to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 7 March 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about the number of staff currently employed in the Compensation Recovery Unit; the administrative and other costs of the unit; the number of cases handled by it and the gross and net sums ingathered after allowing for these costs during the last year for which figures are available.

The total number of people employed in the Compensation Recovery Unit at the present time is 196; this includes 46 part time staff.

During the period from 1 April 1994 to 28 February 1995, the number of cases in which sums have been recovered amounts to 60,821 and the sum recouped was £91,750,000. After taking into account costs of £4,070,000, the net amount recovered equates to £87,680,000.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Income Support

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of those who have been granted exceptional leave to remain are in receipt of income support.

Mr. Roger Evans: People who have been granted exceptional leave to remain are not separately identified within the income support scheme.

Chronic Bronchitis and Emphysema

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many PDD12 claimants have appealed against category O X-ray evidence since September 1993.

Mr. Hague: The information requested is available only to 2 October 1994 when the total number of appeals received against the category O X-ray was 3,416.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many posthumous PDD12 claims there have been to date; and how many have received an award;

(2) how many PDD12 claimants rejected for an award when they were living because the X-ray evidence was category O have been made a posthumous award after death based on the findings of the pathologist's report;

(3) how many PDD12 appellants have been referred for fresh X-rays because the ones on which the original diagnosis was made were unsuitable.

Mr. Hague: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Benefit Payment Card

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for City of Durham (Mr. Steinberg) of 26 January, Official Report, column 320, if he will name the five potential suppliers of a benefit payment card.

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North-West (Mr. Bellingham) on 9 December, Official Report, column 385.

Pneumoconiosis

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants to whom an award was made for pneumoconiosis in (a) 1980, (b) 1986 and (c) 1993 had it increased because the disease worsened an attendant condition.

Mr. Hague: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many awards for pneumoconiosis were made in each of the coalfield areas in (a) 1980, (b) 1986 and (c) 1993.

Mr. Hague: The information requested is not available by coalfield areas. New awards for pneumoconiosis in the coal mining industry, analysed by disability benefit centre, are in the table.

Housing Benefit

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was (a) the total cost of housing benefit in Scotland for (i) tenants of new towns, Scottish Homes and local authorities, (ii) tenants of housing associations and (iii) tenants of private landlords and (b) the total number of households in Scotland receiving housing benefit in respect of (1) Scottish Homes, local authorities and new towns, (2) housing associations and co-operatives and (3) the private rented sector for each year since 1982–83.

Mr. Roger Evans: The available information is set out in the table.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 1 March, c. 623-24, how many of the asylum seekers in receipt of income support are (a) awaiting an initial decision on their application and (b) appealing against it.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Habitual Residence

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons from the Republic of Ireland not habitually resident in the United Kingdom at the time of their claim have been in receipt of (a) income support, (b) housing benefit and (c) council tax benefit schemes since 1 August 1994, giving the sums paid under each heading.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Residential Care and Nursing Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of residents of care or nursing homes whose total entitlement to care funding does not meet their fees for each year since 1979.

Mr. Roger Evans: Reliable information is not available before November 1992.

The number of residents with preserved rights to the higher limits of income support whose total entitlement to social security benefits does not meet the fees is:

	Number
November 1992	91,500
November 1993	85,000
February 1994	78,500

Source:

Some of these residents may have disregarded benefits, income or capital which could be used to meet any shortfalls.

Permanent Secretaries

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which permanent secretaries have left his Department's employment in the last five years; and which public positions they have been appointed to subsequently.

Mr. Hague: None.

SCOTLAND

Anti-Social Neighbours

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what powers are available to (a) local authority housing departments, (b) Scottish Homes, (c) housing associations, (d) housing co-operatives, (e) private sector landlords and (f) owner-occupiers to deal with anti-social behaviour by neighbours; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In many cases, anti-social behaviour by neighbours will amount to nuisance. Local authorities, Scottish Homes, housing associations and housing co-operatives have powers under section 47 of, and part I of schedule 3 to, the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 to raise proceedings for the recovery of possession of one of their houses including where a tenant, or any one of joint tenants, or any person residing or lodging with him or any sub-tenant of his has been guilty of conduct in, or in the vicinity of, the house which is a nuisance or causing an annoyance to others. Recovery of possession can also be granted where a tenant has been convicted of using the house, or allowing it to be used, for immoral or illegal purposes.

Local authorities also have powers under section 58 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 to deal with noise from premises which they consider amounts to a nuisance. In this case, noise also includes vibration.

Private sector landlords have powers to raise proceedings to recover possession of their houses under section 11 of, and schedule 2 to, the Rent (Scotland) Act 1984 and section 18 of, and schedule 5 to, the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988. Private sector leases may also contain a condition under which the tenant agrees not to cause nuisance or annoyance to neighbours, and I believe that such conditions are common.

Owner-occupiers can go to court to seek an interdict against a nuisance beginning or continuing, and damages where they have incurred loss.

On 22 February, the Scottish Office published a good practice note on tenancy management which described the legal and management remedies which are available to landlords to deal with problems arising from anti-social behaviour. I also announced on 22 February the award of a grant to the Chartered Institute of Housing to undertake research into current practice in dealing with anti-social behaviour and to identify examples of good practice among public sector landlords.

On 3 March, I announced that we would be consulting widely on a proposal which has been put to me, in the context of anti-social behaviour, for probationary tenancies. I expect to seek views on this in the near future. In making this announcement, I made it clear that I retain an open mind on action which might be required to help to deal with anti-social behaviour.

Farm Conservation Grants

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many farm conservation plans, so far approved in the Shetland Islands environmentally sensitive area scheme, involve payments in the (a) £0 to £1,000, (b) £1,001 to £2,000, (c) £2,001 to £3,000, (d) £3,001 to £4,000 and (e) £4,001 to £5,000 bands;

(2) how many farm conservation plans, so far approved in the Cairngorm Straths islands environmentally sensitive area scheme, involve payments in the (a) £0 to £1,000, (b) £1,001 to £2,000, (c) £2,001 to £3,000, (d) £3,001 to £4,000 and (e) £4,001 to £5,000 bands;

(3) how many farm conservation plans, so far approved in the Argyll islands environmentally sensitive area scheme, involve payments in the (a) £0 to £1,000, (b) £1,001 to £2,000, (c) £2,001 to £3,000, (d) £3,001 to £4,000 and (e) £4,001 to £5,000 bands.

Mr. Lang: The information, in the format requested, based on the total payments scheduled in each five-year farm or croft conservation plan is set out in the table:

	(a) £0–£1,000	(b) £1,001–£2,000	(c) £2,001–£3,000	(d) £3,001–£4,000	(e) £4,001–£5,000	(f) £5,001 and over

NHS Trust Chief Executives

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if NHS trust chief executives are bound by the same rules concerning public statements as are their staff; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Rules of individual conduct are a contractual matter between an employee and the employing trust.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance is given to the chairmen and chief executives of NHS health boards and trusts concerning public political comments; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is one of the conditions of appointment of chairmen of health boards and NHS trusts that they should not make political speeches on matters affecting the work of their board. The conditions of employment of NHS trust chief executives and board general managers of health boards are a contractual matter between an employee and the employer.

Kynoch Group plc

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assistance was given by his Department to Messrs Kynoch of Keith within the past 10 years.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 3 March 1995]: None. The Scottish Development Agency and later Scottish Enterprise took equity investment in Kynoch Group plc, formerly G and G Kynoch plc. This was an operational matter within the delegated authority of these two bodies.

Water and Sewerage Directors

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the present salaries of each of the local government directors and depute directors responsible for water and sewerage in Scotland; and what are the annual expenses paid to each of the councillors involved with water and sewerage committees in their duties on those committees.

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 7 March 1995]: From the information held centrally, it is not possible to provide information on the precise salaries of the directors and depute directors of water and sewerage. We believe that most directors of water and sewerage are paid in the broad range of £50,000 to £65,000. One earns in excess of £80,000.

No information is available about the expenses paid to councillors serving on water and sewerage committees, as these are matters for local authorities to decide.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many local government directors and depute directors have responsibility for water and sewerage services in Scotland.

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 7 March 1995]: There are 12 directors and 14 depute directors with responsibility for water and sewerage services in regional and island councils. In addition, there is one director and one depute director in the Central Scotland water development board which is responsible for bulk supplies of water.

Publications

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all White Papers, Green Papers and pamphlets issued by his Department, or agencies for which it is responsible, in 1994 giving, in each case, the total cost to the Exchequer of their production, publication and distribution; and what was the total equivalent cost in 1980.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 March 1995]: In 1994 my Department published two Command Papers. In addition, a wide range of other documents including consultation documents and pamphlets was issued. Detailed information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

In respect of those publications published by HMSO, all costs are borne by HMSO, which aims to recover these from sales revenue.

Highlands and Islands Enterprise

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the level of underspend on planned projects by Highlands and Islands Enterprise in the current year; and whether consideration has been given to the allocation of these resources to the funding of the joint European torus programme currently financed by the Highland regional council.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 March 1995]: I understand that there has been some slippage on Highlands and Islands Enterprise projects in the current year. However, assurances have been received from Highlands and Islands Enterprise that it will draw down its total grant in aid this year and that these funds are fully committed.

Long-stay Mental Hospitals

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to collect information about the number of long-stay mental hospitals which have trust status.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 February 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 6 February 1995, Official Report, column 73.

Information about the number of long-stay mental hospitals is available from the Scottish health service costs book published by the information and statistics division, directorate of information services, the NHS in Scotland. A copy of this publication has been placed in the Library of the House.

Sleeper Services

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what were the gross revenues and gross costs of the sleeper services to Carlisle and Fort William in 1992–93 and 1993–94; and what is the estimate for 1994–95;

(2) pursuant to his oral statement of 8 February, to the Scottish Grant Committee, Official Report, column 2, if he will provide details of the calculations of the costs per passenger on the Fort William and Carlisle sleeper services; and what has been the passenger loading on the sleeper services for the same financial years.

Lord James-Hamilton [holding answer 22 February 1995]: Responsibility for railways throughout Great Britain rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. Information on the operation of sleeper services is a matter for British Rail and the Franchising Director who have provided the following figures. The approximate gross costs, excluding the fixed element of track access charges, and gross revenues of the sleeper and night motorail services to Fort William and Carlisle are as follows:

£ million

	Costs	Revenue
Fort William	3.7	1.0
Carlisle	0.6	0.4

The figures relate to 1993–94 passenger numbers but have been uprated to 1994–95 price levels. They also reflect an assessed provision for new charging systems such as rolling stock leases. No figures are available for 1992–93 and 1994–95.

The calculations of the subsidy per passenger on the Fort William and Carlisle sleeper and motorail services noted by me in my oral statement to the Scottish Grand Committee on 8 February, were derived from the attributable subsidy—approximately £2.7 million and £200,000 for the Fort William and Carlisle services respectively—divided by the number of passengers in 1993–94.

The passenger loading figures for the sleeper services are as follows:

	1992–93	1993–94
Carlisle	6,700	5,700

No estimates are available for 1994–95.

WALES

Permanent Secretaries

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which permanent secretaries have left his Department's employment in the last five years: and which public positions they have been appointed to subsequently.

Mr. Redwood: One—Sir Richard Lloyd Jones, who retired in August 1993. He was subsequently appointed chairman of the Staff Commission for Wales, and the advisory committee which preceded it, for 1.5 days a week at £15,900 per year, and as chairman of the Arts Council for Wales for 2 days a week, for which he receives no remuneration.

HEALTH

Blood

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial structures exist between regional and district health authorities and the National Blood Authority for meeting variations in general trends in demand and supply of blood in the national health service; and what are the current price levels for blood transferred between them.

Mr. Sackville: National health service hospital trusts' contract with blood transfusion centres for the supply of blood, and fluctuations in supply and demand, are managed through the contracting process. Handling charges, which cover only the local transfusion centres' operating costs, are paid by hospitals for blood supplied. Handling charges are also paid for transfers between transfusion centres at a standard rate. There is never any charge for the blood itself which is freely given by our volunteer donors.

Organ Donor Register

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the national health service organ donor register was established; how many people have registered with it; when the register will come into operation; and what proposals she has to promote public awareness of it.

Mr. Sackville: The national health service organ donor register was launched on 6 October 1994. More than 700,000 people have joined the register. The register is already fully operational. This month we launched an advertising campaign in England in addition to ongoing publicity initiatives.

Note: Around 440,000 of these were transferred from the existing Lifeline Wales register.

Community Care

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from local authorities regarding the increased demands for community care since the implementation of the NHS and Community Care Act 1990.

Mr. Bowis: Some local authorities have cited the popularity of the policy as a reason for increased demand for community care as a factor which is placing their services under pressure. It is for authorities to manage such factors within the context of the increased resources which we have made available for community care.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what consultation takes place between the NHS and local authorities to determine the needs of particular areas for community care;

(2) how much has been saved in the NHS by the recent allocation of community care responsibility to local authorities.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 13 December 1994 at columns 615-16.

Smoking

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when smoking was last discussed at the EU Health Minsters' Council.

Mr. Sackville: On 22 December 1994.

Patients (Deaths)

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she intends to hold an investigation into the recent deaths of patients at Kneesworth psychiatric hospital.

Mr. Bowis: No. I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 8 February at column 271.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she intends to take to reduce the number of deaths of patients undergoing psychiatric care.

Mr. Bowis: In the White Paper, "The Health of the Nation" we set a target to reduce the suicide rate of severely mentally ill people. A number of central initiatives designed to improve existing mental health services will complement local action to reduce the suicide rate among severely mentally ill people. These include the various measures in the ten point plan that we announced in August 1993 and the issue of the "Mental Illness Key Area Handbook" to all managers of national health service and local authority mental health services. The revised edition of the handbook provides a number of examples of interventions which may help to reduce suicide rates.

Many of the measures being taken to reduce deaths from suicide among severely mentally ill people should also help to reduce the number of other premature and preventable deaths of patients undergoing psychiatric care.

Medical Negligence

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many actions for medical negligence have been issued against the Fallodon hospital in Leeds, and Leeds Private Hospitals Ltd.

(2) what action she is taking in response to claims for medical negligence against the Fallodon hospital in Leeds and Leeds Private Hospitals Ltd.

Mr. Sackville: In the private sector, any question of medical negligence is a matter between the parties concerned.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it a condition of any licence given to a private hospital that adequate insurance against medical negligence claims is obtained by that hospital;

(2) what requirements are placed on private hospitals to insure themselves against claims for medical negligence.

Mr. Sackville: Any question of medical negligence is a matter between the parties concerned.

Waiting Lists, West Midlands

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons additional resources made available in the present and forthcoming financial years for the West Midlands waiting list initiative are not being incorporated into district health authority budgets; and if she will make a statement on the impact of this on the scale of the redundancy programme in South Birmingham health authority.

Mr. Malone: The allocation of resources for the West Midlands waiting times initiative is a matter for West Midlands regional health authority and I refer the hon. Member to Mr. Bryan Baker, chairman of West Midlands RHA, for this information. The redundancy programme in South Birmingham, and any possible impact that the waiting times initiative may have on this, is a matter for South Birmingham health authority and the hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Bryan Stoten, chairman of the authority, for further details.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the future of the West Midlands waiting list initiative in 1996–97.

Mr. Malone: West Midlands are to be congratulated on the excellent progress that they have made in reducing waiting times for in-patient and day case treatment for their residents. I look to local purchasers and providers to build on this success in the future.

Fallodon Hospital, Leeds

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many complaints have been submitted to Leeds Healthcare regarding the Fallodon hospital and Leeds Hospitals Ltd.

Mr. Malone: This is a matter for Leeds Healthcare. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mrs. Pam Smith, chairman of Leeds Healthcare, for details.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will order an inquiry into the standards of health care provision at the Fallodon hospital and Leeds Private Hospitals Ltd.

(2) what representations she has received regarding the Fallodon hospital in Leeds.

Mr. Sackville: Responsibility for the Fallodon's registration under the Registered Homes Act 1984 rests with the health authority. A number of concerns have been raised with the Department in relation to the Fallodon's approval by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State under section 1(3) of the Abortion Act 1967 to provide treatment for termination of pregnancy. All were fully investigated. Improvements were required and implemented and the Fallodon continues to be approved under the Act.

Osteoporosis

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures she is taking to encourage bone density scanning for osteoporosis.

Mr. Sackville: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Baroness Cumberlege, announced on 31 January that she had accepted the recommendations contained in the report of the Advisory Group on Osteoporosis, copies of which are available in the Library. She wrote to the chairmen of all national health service bodies drawing their attention to the recommendation that bone densitometry should be available to assist clinical decision-making for certain patients identified as being at high risk. My noble Friend will also be discussing this aspect, and the report more generally, with regional chairmen.

Domiciliary Care

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the extent to which the current NHS system meets the Government's objective to promote the development of the domiciliary day and respite care services to enable people to live in their own home wherever feasible and sensible.

Mr. Bowis: Recent guidance, HSG(95)8, on national health service responsibilities for meeting continuing health care needs reiterated the important responsibilities of the NHS to arrange and fund a full range of services to meet people's continuing health care needs. As well as continuing in-patient care the guidance included important responsibilities for rehabilitation, respite health care and community health and primary care services for people at home or in residential care homes. Copies of the guidance are available in the Library.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many elderly people are currently under domiciliary day and respite care; and how many are in full nursing home facilities.

Mr. Bowis: The centrally available information on day and domiciliary services arranged by social services authorities shows that in a sample week in September 1993 there were estimated totals of 435,000 households in England receiving home help or home care where the oldest resident was aged 65 or over, 123,000 attendances at day centres by people aged 65 or over, and 287,000 people—nearly all aged 65 or over—had meals either delivered to their homes or served at luncheon clubs. Information is not available centrally about how many individuals were receiving services arranged by social services authorities.

The number of local authority supported residents aged 65 and over in short-term placements in either residential care or nursing homes, many of which will be for respite purposes, was 11,000 on 31 March 1994.

Information on all registered nursing homes is that there were 132,200 nursing home beds occupied by people aged 65 or over in 1993–94.

Dental Practitioners

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when she expects to recover the average overpayment from each general dental practitioner;

(2) what proposals she has to require general dental practitioners to repay the average overpayment to the Government.

Mr. Malone: The Green Paper, "Improving NHS Dentistry", states that the issue of past overpayments to dentists is one that needs to be addressed. The Government have been reviewing the issue as part of their consideration of the way forward following the Green Paper.

Maternal Mortality

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of maternal mortality there have been following births in the Dewsbury area for (a) home confinements and (b) hospital births in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Maternal deaths of women (ICD 630–676[1] aged 16–50 for Dewsbury district health authority, 1983–1992

Year	Number
1985	0
1986	0
1988	0
1990	0
1992	1

Notes

1. There may have been other deaths among women who were pregnant or had recently given birth where this information was not given on the death certificate or was not selected as the underlying cause of death.

2. Information collected on the death certificate gives the place where the woman died. This may be different from where her child was born. Therefore it is not possible to separate deaths following births from home confinements and hospital births.

Mental Health Act 1983

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those services which an authority (a) can be required to provide and (b) can make available under section 117 of the Mental Health Act 1983; and if she will list the services actually available under that section.

Mr. Bowis: The specific services provided by health and local authorities under section 117 will vary according to individual needs and local arrangements. General guidance on the provision of after-care services for patients who have been detained in hospital is given in chapter 27 of the Mental Health Act code of practice, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 8 February, Official Report, columns 270–17, when she expects to publish the numbers of patients detained under the Mental Health Act 1983 in (a) NHS units and (b) private units.

Mr. Bowis: The Statistical Bulletin, "In-patients Formally Detained in Hospitals Under The Mental Health Act 1983 and Other Legislation, England: 1987–88 to 1992–93", is to be published shortly. A copy will be placed in the Library.

Neuroleptic Drugs

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what proposals she has to hold an inquiry into the use of neuroleptic drugs.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 8 February at column 273.

Refugees

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reports she has received of NHS trust hospitals denying treatment to refugees properly referred by their general practitioners; and what mechanisms are in place to ensure that the rules as regards eligibility for free NHS hospital care are correctly applied.

Mr. Sackville: None. It is for national health service trusts to establish whether patients are eligible for exemption from charges for NHS hospital treatment, using the Department's Manual of Guidance on the NHS Treatment of Overseas Visitors.

Private Hospitals

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to review the licensing procedures of private hospitals.

Mr. Sackville: The registration of private hospitals is subject to part II of the Registered Homes Act 1984. A review of registration and inspection procedures will commence this year.

Human Rights

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will arrange for the draft convention for the protection of human rights and dignity of the human being with regard to the application of biology and medicine to be amended in response to opinion No. 184 of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe; when she expects the draft convention to be opened for signature; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The United Kingdom Government will take account of the Parliamentary Assembly's opinion in considering the current draft convention. No date has as yet been agreed for the convention to be signed.

The Government share with the Governments of other member states a commitment to the protection of human rights and dignity.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her Department's policy towards the draft convention for the protection of human rights and dignity of the human being with regard to the application of biology and medicine; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: My Department will continue its involvement in the Council of Europe's Steering Committee on Bioethics, which is drawing up a draft convention for the protection of human rights and dignity of the human being with regard to the application of biology and medicine for consideration by the Council of Ministers. This involvement will reflect the United Kingdom Government's firm commitment to the protection of human rights.

Prescribing Incentive Schemes

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement about payments to general medical practitioners under the 1993–94 national practice based prescribing incentive schemes.

Mr. Malone: The schemes have been successful in encouraging cost-effective prescribing. Payments due to those who qualified under the 1993–94 schemes have been authorised on an extra statutory basis. Similar arrangements will apply to payments in respect of 1994–95 schemes. The total amount paid on this basis—estimated at £1.7 million in 1994–95—will be included in family health services authorities summarised accounts.

Continuing Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is her estimate of the cost to the National Health Service of providing continuing care for each year from 1979 to 1996;

(2) what is her estimate of the number of people in need of continuing care as provided by the national health service in each year from 1979 to 1996.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) on 19 December 1994 at column 1147. The number of people in need of continuing care is not available centrally.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what steps she will take to monitor health authorities investment in continuing care provision; and how she will ascertain which health authorities are under-providing.

Mr. Bowis: The National Health Service Executive and social services inspectorate will work closely with authorities to ensure that the guidance is fully implemented. As part of this process, health authorities will be required to include managing any re-investment in their timed and costed plans which will be in place by 1 April 1996.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what circumstances patients will be able to challenge the criteria applied by the health authority to decide their entitlement to national health service continuing care.

Mr. Bowis: Health authorities must consult and fully involve local authorities, all general practitioners, national health service and independent providers and representatives of users and carers in drawing up local eligibility criteria.

From April 1996, a patient or his or her family and any carer can ask the health authority to review the decision on entitlement to national health service funded continuing health care if they do not believe that the health authority's eligibility criteria have been applied correctly.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what circumstances a patient in need of continuing care as provided by the national health service can be placed in a nursing home.

Mr. Bowis: It is for health authorities to arrange and fund a full range of services to meet the continuing health care needs of their local population. They may purchase such care from national health service hospitals or other facilities, including nursing homes. If a patient meets the eligibility criteria for continuing NHS in-patient care but a bed is not available within the health authority's contracted provision, agreement for an extra-contractual referral to another hospital or nursing home should be sought.

Home Helps

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many local authority home helps there have been per 1,000 population in each year since 1979.

Mr. Bowis: The information requested is shown in the table.

Table: Whole time equivalent (WTE) home helps employed by local authorities, 1979–1993 England

1979	0.96

[1] Home helps employed by direct service organisations or by independent organisations under contract to local authorities are not included.

[2] The statistical return collecting details of local authority staffing was very substantially revised in 1993 and this may have affected comparability with earlier years.

Permanent Secretaries

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which permanent secretaries have left her Department's employment in the past five years; and which public positions they have been appointed to subsequently.

Mr. Sackville: Sir Donald Acheson and Sir Duncan Nichol have retired as permanent secretaries in this Department in the five years from 1 March 1990. Ministers appointed Sir Donald Acheson to chair the Home Office Health Advisory Committee to the Prison Service in 1992. Ministers have not offered Sir Duncan Nichol any public appointments.

Operations

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from the health services management centre of the University of Birmingham questioning the value of a number of operations commonly performed on patients; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: No such representations have been received.

Staff Relocation Expenses

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent on staff relocation expenses in each year since 1990–91 by region.

Mr. Malone: This information is not separately identifiable within the annual accounts or annual financial returns of health authorities and national health service trusts.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Women Directors

21. Mr. Khabra: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what initiatives his Department is taking to increase the number of female directors in Britain's industrial companies.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: It is for the board and shareholders of companies to choose directors, not Government.

Company Assistance (Midlands)

22. Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what concerns have been raised by companies and firms in the midlands about the provision of assistance to them by his Department.

Mr. Eggar: The Department deals with a large number of companies in the midlands on a daily basis on a wide variety of issues.

Telecommunications

23. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what studies his Department has conducted on the relative costs of telecommunications services in the United Kingdom and other European Union countries.

Mr. Ian Taylor: My Department has studied the overall competitiveness of United Kingdom telecommunications infrastructure, including costs. We also monitor studies by outside bodies. These studies show that UK telecom costs are amongst the lowest in Europe.

Jaguar X200

24. Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with Jaguar concerning financial assistance for the X200 project.

Mr. Heseltine: I have been keeping in very close touch with the top management in Ford and Jaguar as their plans for the X200 project have developed.

The company has not yet decided whether to go ahead with the project or, if it does, where the car would be manufactured.

I am of course keen to maximise the prospects of the project being located in the United Kingdom.

Internet

25. Mr. Streeter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what use his Department is making of the Internet super-highway.

Mr. Ian Taylor: My Department recognises the value of the Internet as a means to share information and develop contacts at a national and international level. We are already making use of its facilities for electronic mail, and to obtain and provide information, and I have instigated a programme to consider and develop the Department's usage from a strategic perspective.

My E-Mail address is Taylor@mintech.demon.co.uk

Private Mines

26. Mr. Hanson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with private mine owners regarding terms and conditions of service for miners since privatisation.

Mr. Page: None. These are matters for the employers and their employees.

Electricity Companies

27. Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what advice his Department has given to the Director General of Electricity Supply concerning the consequences on prices of the high remuneration of directors.

Mr. Eggar: My Department has given no advice to the Director General of Electricity Supply regarding these matters.

Trade Deficit

28. Mr. Spring: To ask the President of the Board of Trade by how much the United Kingdom deficit with countries outside the EU changed in 1994; and to what factors he attributes this.

Mr. Ian Taylor: In 1994, the value of the visible trade deficit of the United Kingdom with countries outside the European Union was reduced by £2.7 billion, reaching its lowest level since 1987. UK exports to these countries increased in value by 10 per cent. in 1994 while imports increased by 5 per cent. UK exports are now at record levels both in terms of value and volume. This has been achieved by UK companies manufacturing goods that are competitive in quality and price in international markets.

Steel

29. Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what support he is giving to the Iron and Steel Trades Confederation's campaign in favour of British-made steel.

Mr. Eggar: The Government share the ISTC's concerns about continuing subsidies to the United Kingdom steel industry's competitors in Europe. We have consistently made it clear to the Commission and other member states the importance we attach to the strict application of the ECSC rules on state aid. To assist us in this task, I have recently set up a steel subsidies monitoring committee—consisting of Government and steel industry representatives—to help gather evidence of illegal state aid and to pass it on to the Commission for action. We are also working with the UK constructional steelwork industry to improve the transparency and rigour with which sub-contracts for steelwork are awarded for public sector projects.

Manufacturing (East London)

30. Mr. Gapes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next plans to visit east London to discuss the future of manufacturing industry.

Mr. Eggar: I visited east London last Wednesday, 1 March, to discuss with local manufacturers how best to take forward the London manufacturing initiative that I launched in October.

Company Profits

31. Mr. Connarty: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the average proportion of post-tax profits paid as dividends in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the OECD as a whole in the last year.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: United Kingdom dividends accounted for 62.1 per cent. of profit after tax, interest and depreciation in 1992. Comparable figures are not available for the OECD as a whole, and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Ceramic Imports

32. Mr. Fisher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received about the growth in the import of ceramic goods from the far east.

Mr. Page: My Department has received many representations on this subject, mainly about imports from China. United Kingdom manufacturers of ceramic products want the Government to support retention of the present quotas which limit imports into the European Community while many traders and retailers argue strongly that they are unjustified on economic grounds and should be removed.

Information Society

33. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the recent G7 meeting of Technology Ministers on the information society.

Mr. Ian Taylor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw) on 2 March 1995, Official Report columns 715-16.

Textphones

34. Mr. Gerrard: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance his Department gives to businesses developing textphones and similar aids for disabled people.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Seven different types of textphones have received approval from the British Approvals Board for Telecommunications. Whilst the development of aids of this type for disabled people is obviously important, I do not believe the companies involved in these developments need special support from my Department.

Near East Trade

35. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what special efforts are being made to encourage trade with near eastern countries.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The countries of the near east include many of the top 80 United Kingdom markets and dedicated desk officers and export promoters have been appointed to cover these. Their efforts have made a significant additional contribution to the encouragement and support of trade with the area. Regular promotional seminars are held, and we support numerous trade missions, as well as participation by United Kingdom firms in trade fairs and exhibitions.

As my hon. Friend knows, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, accompanied by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Trade will be visiting the area shortly accompanied by a team of senior business men.

Coal Mines

36. Mr. Illsley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received regarding the imposition of three-year fixed-term contracts on workers within the coal mining industry.

Mr. Page: None.

Manufacturing

37. Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what new measures he intends to take to revitalise the manufacturing base and its contribution to gross domestic product.

Mr. Heseltine: The Government's policies are geared towards improving the competitiveness of the whole economy, including the manufacturing sector. Manufacturing industry continues to perform strongly: the latest CBI survey shows export orders at their highest level since April 1977, and over the last year productivity has grown by almost 6 per cent. and output by nearly 4½ per cent.

Building Insurance

38. Mr. Parry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received about levels of premiums for building insurance relating to cover for terrorist attacks.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I have received no representations about the levels of terrorism insurance premiums which post-date my announcement of the premium arrangements for 1995, on 16 December 1994, Official Report, columns 850-51.

Energy Demand

Mr. Stern: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are his Department's latest projections of the range of future energy demand and of carbon dioxide emissions in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: My Department has today published the results of an extensive review of their prospects for future energy use in the United Kingdom and of the associated emissions of carbon dioxide, one of the major greenhouse gases.

The report, "Energy Projections for the UK: Energy Use and Energy-Related Emissions of Carbon Dioxide in the UK 1995–2020", Energy Paper No. 65 (EP65), updates the energy and carbon dioxide projections published in Energy Paper No. 59 (EP59) in 1992.

The new projections provide a framework to monitor the development and direction of energy markets in the UK; to keep track of whether the UK is on target to meet its aim of returning carbon dioxide emissions to their 1990 levels in 2000; and to inform debate on possible future carbon dioxide commitments beyond 2000.

The new figures show that, on the assumptions about the climate change programme described as follows, the outturn for carbon dioxide emissions in 2000 is expected to be between 7 and 14 million tonnes of carbon—MtC—below the Government's target for that year.

The full range of carbon dioxide projections for 2000 and later years in million tonnes of carbon is as follows.

	Energy Paper 65	Energy Paper 59 reference scenario
1990	158	158
2000	144–152	169
2005	154–165	182
2010	154–167	194
2015	164–182	207
2020	171–197	219

The EP59 reference scenario implied that, in order to meet its carbon dioxide commitment, the Government should aim to achieve savings of 10 MtC by the year 2000. The new projections show that, compared to the reference scenario, savings of 17 to 25 MtC are now expected to be achieved.

These savings, and those in later years, are due to the following factors.

First, the revised projections incorporate the carbon savings expected to arise from the climate change programme. The projections have been constructed on the assumption that virtually all the elements of the climate change programme set out in Cm 2427 are in place. The fiscal measures are those announced in the 1994 Budgets. It has also been assumed that the amounts of energy saved by the non-fiscal measures are the same as those assumed in producing Cm 2427.

Secondly, the revised projections reflect new assumptions about future fossil fuel prices and about the responsiveness of energy demand to the price of energy and to changes in incomes and output. They also incorporate changes in the assumptions about the way in which energy is likely to be supplied. While EP59 assumed that there would be 12 GW of combined cycle gas turbines CCGT the projections now assume that, by the year 2000, some 16 to 18 GW of CCGT will be operating. The estimates also assume, on the evidence of recent performance, that the output of nuclear generating stations will be significantly higher than was anticipated in 1992.

These various changes in supply side assumptions and in estimated demand relationships are expected to reduce carbon dioxide emissions by between 7 and 17 MtC in 2000, compared with the scenario adopted for the climate change programme.

The new projections alter the previous estimates of the carbon saved by the measures in the climate change programme. In part this reflects changes arising from the 1994 Budgets, particularly relating to VAT on domestic energy. The further assumed switch from coal to gas for electricity generation reduces the carbon savings attributable to reductions in electricity demand. The new projections assume a weaker link between changes in energy prices and changes in energy demand in the domestic sector.

These changes work in different directions. Their net effect is that the savings associated with the programme of measures included in the original climate change programme, allowing for the adjustments to the fiscal measures announced in the 1994 Budgets, would be between 8 and 9 MtC in 2000. This is what is included in the projections.

Taking account also of reduced assumptions for the Energy Saving Trust, the net effect is now expected to be between 7 and 8 MtC. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is making an announcement today on the implications of the new energy projections for UK climate change policy.

Electricity

Mr. Congdon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answers of 1 and 20 December to the hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown) Official Report, columns 807 and 1046-47, if he has now laid an order bringing further amendments to the Electricity (Class Exemptions from the Requirement for a Licence) Order 1990 into effect.

Mr. Eggar: I have today laid before Parliament an order which will bring into effect two amendments to the Electricity (Class Exemptions from the Requirement for a Licence) Order 1990. The first amendment will extend until March 1998 the transitional period in which companies who generated or supplied electricity before the electricity industry was vested are exempt from the requirement to hold generation or supply licences, and the second amendment will help clarify the position of on-site generators who belong to the electricity pool and supply qualifying consumers on the same site through a distribution or transmission system belonging to a third party. I have also taken the opportunity to consolidate the 1990 order and the two amending orders that were laid in April and June 1994.

Special Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the names of all special advisers in his Department during the period 13 June 1987 to 24 July 1989.

Mr. Heseltine: The special advisers in the Department of Trade and Industry during the period 13 June 1987 to 24 July 1989 were:

Charles Hendry
Jonathan Hill
Howell James
Peter Luff
Sir Jeffrey Sterling

Distance Selling

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on progress towards agreement on the European Union directive on distance selling.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The distance selling directive is on the agenda for the meeting of the Consumer Council on 30 March. The current text is broadly acceptable to all member states and the French presidency hopes to reach agreement on a common position. If a common position is achieved the directive will be submitted to the European Parliament, where the co-decision procedure will apply.

Baghdad (Trade Delegation)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the recent trade delegation to Baghdad.

Mr. Needham: The delegation went to Baghdad on its own initiative. It was not given assistance by the Government. Companies or individuals visiting Iraq with a view to discussing trade require a licence permitting them to do so from my Department. The organisers were advised of this requirement and asked to draw it to the attention of those travelling as part of the delegation. My Department has contacted known participants and will check to ensure they held, and complied with, the appropriate licences.

Post Office

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the income to the Post Office during the past year from the sale of Post Office buildings; what was the cost of establishment from new Post Office buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Page: The income to the Post Office in the financial year 1993–94 from the sale of Post Office buildings was £13.5 million. The cost of establishment of new Post Office buildings is not recorded separately. Investment in land and buildings—including leased premises—in the financial year 1993–94 was £114 million. This figure includes the costs of refurbishing and adapting existing buildings.

Nuclear Review

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the implications for the future of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty will be included within the scope of his Department's current review of policy on nuclear power.

Mr. Eggar: The nuclear review is being conducted within the framework of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and of the United Kingdom's other international obligations.

Steel

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the ratio in percentage terms and the figures in tonnes of imported and United Kingdom produced steel for each year since 1979.

Mr. Page: The information is in the table:

UK steel[1] production and imports

Year	Production[2] (000 tonnes)	Imports	Imports as percentage of production
1979	16,816	3,859	23
1980	10,389	4,707	45
1981	12,689	3,399	27
1982	11,835	3,925	33
1983	12,259	3,429	28
1984	12,563	3,646	29
1985	13,073	3,865	30
1986	13,141	4,233	32
1987	15,011	4,391	29
1988	16,681	5,225	31
1989	16,879	5,497	33
1990	16,081	5,411	34

UK steel[1] production and imports

Year	Production[2] (000 tonnes)	Imports	Imports as percentage of production
1991	15,032	5,576	37
1992	14,902	5,465	37
1993	15,103	4,917	33
1994	15,669	n/a	n/a

Postal Services

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the President of the board of Trade what is the current target timescale for completing first postal deliveries in urban areas.

Mr. Page: I understand from the Post Office that the general current target timescale for completing first deliveries in town areas is between 7 am and 9.30 am.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the target timescale for completing first postal deliveries has been altered since 1975.

Mr. Page: I understand from the Post Office that there has been no change in the target timescale for completing first deliveries since 1975.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what proportion of first-class mail is currently delivered within the first-delivery timescale as defined in 1975;

(2) what proportion of first-class mail is currently delivered within the first-delivery timescale, as currently defined.

Mr. Page: I understand from the Post Office that there has been no change in the first delivery timescale since 1975 and that information on the proportion of first-class mail currently delivered within the first delivery timescale is not available. However, taking into account that the general target timescale for first postal deliveries in rural areas is longer than in town areas, overall 88 per cent. of all classes of mail nationally is delivered on the first delivery.

Tourism

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what government assistance has been given to depressed tourist areas in each year since 1976.

Mr. Page: There is no list of tourist areas to which Government assistance can be ascribed.

Energy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the board of Trade if he will make a statement on the distribution of investment between nuclear and non-nuclear sources of energy as sponsored or sanctioned by his Department.

Mr. Page: The distribution of expenditure by my Department between nuclear and non-nuclear sources of energy is given in "Trade and Industry 1995: The Government's expenditure plans 1995–96 to 1997–98" (Cm 2804), copies of which are available in the Library of the House. This includes information about the financing of public corporations in the energy sector: further information about their expenditure can be obtained from their annual reports and accounts, also in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations took place between (a) Ministers and (b) officials of his Department with (i) British Nuclear Fuels and (ii) Scottish Nuclear during their negotiations for additional reprocessing contracts and wet storage for spent nuclear fuel, announced on 28 February.

Mr. Eggar: Such contractual negotiations between British Nuclear Fuels plc and Scottish Nuclear Ltd., are a commercial matter for the companies concerned. BNFL has kept officials from the Department of Trade and Industry informed in general terms.

Mr. Terry Venables

Mr. Soley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on how a computer disk in the possession of his Department containing information on Mr. Terry Venables became public.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: It appears that the information concerned was improperly copied. The circumstances are the subject of an investigation by the police who are in consultation with the Crown Prosecution Service.

Ship Finance

Mr. Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to publish the Theisen Securities report on ship finance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Page: The report by Theisen consultants on the financing of sales of new ships is expected to be available soon. I will place copies in the Libraries of the House.

Konver Funding

Mr. Dover: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has obtained written confirmation from the European Commission that in the list of qualifying areas for Konver II funding, Preston is the travel-to-work area embracing Chorley and South Ribble.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 7 March 1995]: No; contrary to earlier expectations, the Commission has not yet published any list of areas in the Official Journal. But the list of British Konver II areas in the Government's programme, sent to the Commission on 1 March, includes Preston travel-to-work area.

Insurance

Mr. Bradley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the estimated average additional costs of purchasing private insurance to protect against sickness or unemployment after October 1995 to a homeowner with a £50,000 mortgage (a) if they are self employed, (b) if they are in full time permanent employment and are not disabled and (c) if they are full time permanent employment and are disabled.

Mr. Jonathan Evans [holding answer 7 March 1995]: Insurers currently charge standard rates of about £7 for every £100 of monthly mortgage payment and do not generally charge different rates for different situations.

Following the Budget announcement on changes to social security assistance, some insurers appear to be beginning to tailor their products more specifically to individual needs. However, it is too early to say whether this will have a significant impact on costs.

DEFENCE

Job Losses

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures his Department takes to changes to the size of the defence industry; and how many job losses have been recorded by his Department since July 1990.

Mr. Freeman: My Department monitors public announcements of job losses by United Kingdom defence contractors. Since July 1990, when "Options for Change" was announced, some 65,500 job losses have been recorded in this way.

This figure includes those announcements of which my Department is aware either through the press or by direct notification from the company. It may not include job losses sustained by smaller companies, including sub-contractors and component suppliers, which have gone unreported. It may, however, include some announced job losses which in fact relate to the civil rather than the defence business of the company concerned. The figure is of announced job losses, not all of which may yet have been implemented. It does not include jobs created in the defence industry as a result of new orders.

HMS Brazen

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions between 1 January and 31 December 1994 HMS Brazen was used to transport fertiliser from the United Kingdom to Gibraltar for use at the official service residence; what quantity was involved; and at what estimated cost.

Mr. Soames: HMS Brazen transported fertiliser from the United Kingdom to Gibraltar for use at the official service residence on one occasion between 1 January and 31 December 1994. She transported four bags of fertiliser weighing 1 cwt. each. The transport of the fertiliser incurred no additional cost, as it occupied spare capacity on a ship already planned to visit Gibraltar.

Sex Discrimination

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons documents relating to his Department's policy on sex discrimination are classified; in what circumstances they can be handed to employment appeal tribunals in cases of pregnancy dismissal by his Department; what considerations apply when they cannot be handed over; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: No special considerations apply to the disclosure in industrial tribunal proceedings of documents relating to my Department's policy on sex discrimination. Such a document would therefore be subject to disclosure if it was relevant to the issues to be determined in the proceedings and there were no other reasons such as legal professional privilege which would give the respondent cause to object to its production. In the context of pregnancy dismissal cases before tribunals, documents relating to sex discrimination policy are not considered by my Department to be relevant. This is because the only issue to be decided by the tribunal is that of quantum; the Ministry of Defence has accepted liability to compensate those service women who were unlawfully discharged on the ground of pregnancy.

Strategic Weapons Systems

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the subject areas covered in the current programme of exchanges under the Polaris sales agreement, as amended for Trident.

Mr. Freeman: A joint official level United States-United Kingdom working group established under the Polaris sales agreement meets at regular intervals to discuss a range of technical, financial, logistics, planning and safety issues relating to the Polaris and Trident strategic weapon systems. Details of these exchanges are classified.

Atomic Control Office

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 February, Official Report, column 825, what amount of money is in the assistant chief scientific adviser (nuclear)'s intermediate higher level budget; and if he will provide an estimate, in percentage terms, of how much of this budget is spent on administration of the atomic control office, London.

Mr. Freeman: The assistant chief scientific adviser (nuclear)'s cash allocation for the current financial year is £1,285,000. It is estimated that between 5 and 10 per cent. of this will be spent on the administration of the atomic control office.

Proto II Facility

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how much it will cost in total to transfer and establish the proto II x-ray simulation facility, presently at the Sandia national laboratory, to AWE Aldermaston; and what proportion of this cost is to be met by the United Kingdom Government;

(2) if he will make a statement on the proposal to transfer to Atomic Weapons Establishments (UK) the proto II x-ray simulation facility presently at the Sandia national laboratory and the plans to establish this facility at AWE Aldermaston as outlined in the United States Department of Energy fiscal year 1996 budget request for atomic energy defence activities.

Mr. Freeman: It has been decided not to proceed with the proposed transfer of the proto II facilitity to the United Kingdom.

Mutual Defence Agreement

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 February, Official Report, columns 823–24, if he will make a statement on the role and function of the United Kingdom person stationed at (a) Laurel, Maryland, (b) Lawrence Livermore laboratory, (c) Dahlgren, Virginia, (d) Kings bay, Georgia, (e) New London, Connecticut and (f) Crystal city, Arlington, Virginia.

Mr. Freeman: The United Kingdom personnel stationed in the United States as part of the Polaris sales agreement, as amended for Trident, provide direct liaison with US strategic systems project staff, supply staff and contractors on technical, financial, logistics, planning and safety matters. The individual stationed at the Lawrence Livermore laboratory is an employee of the Atomic Weapons Establishment on a short term appointment associated with the 1958 agreement, not the Polaris sales agreement as suggested by my previous reply.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many US personnel are stationed in the United Kingdom as part of (a) the 1958 US/UK mutual defence agreement, (b) the Polaris sales agreement and (c) the Trident sales agreement; and where they are located.

Mr. Freeman: There is one US employee stationed at the Atomic Weapons Establishment Aldermaston under the terms of the 1958 mutual defence agreement. There are five US employees in the United Kingdom as part of the Polaris sales agreement, as amended for Trident. These are as follows:

London:	2
Bath:	2
Barrow in Furness:	1

AWE Aldermaston

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the policy of pursuing pulsed power weapons physics applications at AWE Aldermaston.

Mr. Freeman: Pulsed power physics techniques support a range of programmes at AWE associated with warhead safety, effectiveness and capability.

RAF Spadeadam

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was Royal Air Force Spadeadam's budget for each of the last five financial years.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is as follows:

1992–93: £7,200,000
1993–94: £8,500,000
1994–95: £8,212,000

Information for 1990–91 is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's current estimates of the numbers of operational nuclear weapons held by the other nuclear-weapon states; and what estimates his Department has made of each state's rate of dismantling of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Soames: A comparison of the strategic nuclear forces of the nuclear weapon states is given in figure 3 on page 33 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1994" (Cm 2550). It would be inappropriate to publish our more detailed assessments of force holdings and dismantlement programmes.

Flying Training, Slovakia

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he had with the Government of Slovakia on access to flying training facilities in Slovakia for the Royal Air Force during his recent visit to that country; and what agreements have been reached on this subject.

Mr. Soames: During his meeting with the Slovakian Defence Minister on 15 February my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State discussed a wide range of issues, including possible United Kingdom military training opportunities in Slovakia. Although no agreements were concluded, our respective officials are considering ways of deepening co-operation between our two countries.

Rugby League

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what provisions have been made for the Rugby League within the Royal Air Force sports board's five-day sport officials and coaches courses for 1995–96.

Mr. Soames: No bid was received from the Rugby League for its sport to be included within the Royal Air Force sports board's five-day courses for 1995–96. Along with other sports, rugby league will be allowed the opportunity to hold a course in 1996–97.

Permanent Secretaries

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which permanent secretaries have left his Department's employment in the last five years; and which public positions they have been appointed to subsequently.

Mr. Freeman: Sir Peter Levene, Sir Michael Quinlan, Sir Kenneth Macdonald and Professor Sir Ronald Oxburgh have left the Department as permanent secretaries in the five years from 1 March 1990. Ministers have appointed them to the following positions:

Sir P. Levene
adviser to the Prime Minister on efficiency and effectiveness;
special adviser to the President of the Board of Trade;
special adviser to the Chancellor of the Exchequer on competition and purchasing (1992 only); special adviser to the Secretary of State for Environment (1991–1992).

Sir K. Macdonald
chairman International Military Services Ltd.

Sir M. Quinlan trustee of the Science museum.

University Air Squadron

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the approximate annual cost of the training of Oxford university air squadron at RAF Benson; and which organisation finances these costs.

Mr. Soames: The current estimate of expenditure by Oxford university air squadron during this financial year is £436,000. This expenditure is funded by my Department with costs falling to the Royal Air Force college, Cranwell's budget.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the RAF bases which offer training to university air squadrons and the approximate annual cost of the training in each case.

Mr. Soames: A list of university air squadrons based at RAF bases and airfields, together with estimates of expenditure during the present financial year, are as follows:

University Air Squadron	Airfield	Estimate of expenditure £000
Aberdeen Dundee and St. Andrews	RAF Leuchars	536
University of Birmingham Air Squadron	RAF Cosford	549
Bristol	Colerne Airfield	758
East Lowlands	RAF Turnhouse	507
East Midlands	RAF Newton	721
Liverpool	RAF Woodvale	457
University of London	RAF Benson	1,094
Manchester and Salford	RAF Woodvale	700
Northumbrian	RAF Leeming	514
Oxford	RAF Benson	436
Southampton	RAF Boscombe Down	680
University of Wales Air Squadron	RAF St. Athan	504
Yorkshire	RAF Finningley[1]	618

[1]Should the decision be taken to close RAF Finningley, the Yorkshire UAS would relocate to RAF Church Fenton.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what training facilities are available for Oxford university air squadron at RAF Benson.

Mr. Soames: At present, the Oxford university air squadron operates five Bulldog aircraft from RAF Benson. Generally, a full three year training syllabus comprises 99 hours of individual tuition on the aircraft. The squadron's working accommodation consists of a hangar, offices and a briefing facility. In addition, members have access to the infrastructure of an RAF operational base and the opportunity which that provides for training.

Operation Granby

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of RAF personnel deployed during Operation Granby was logistical and support personnel.

Mr. Soames: Over 70 per cent. of RAF personnel deployed to the Gulf were logistics and support personnel.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the British 1st Armoured Division deployed as part of Operation Granby was logistical and support personnel.

Mr. Soames: A total of 43 per cent. of the British 1st Armoured Division deployed during Operation Granby was logistics or support personnel.

Western European Union

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what actions his Department has proposed for the establishment of an intelligence satellite for the Western European Union.

Mr. Soames: The Western European Union is currently studying the possibilities of co-operation on a European satellite observation system. The United Kingdom is contributing fully to that work.

Excess Equipment

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the receipts for the sale of excess equipment in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: The following is the information:

Financial year	£ million
1987–88	61.3
1988–89	59.6
1989–90	37.0
1990–91	31.0
1991–92	32.8
1992–93	48.7
1993–94	66.7
1994–95 (Forecast)	72.4

It would require disproportionate effort to establish details of receipts for previous financial years, as records are not readily available.

Land Sales

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cost in each of the last 10 years for the sale of land by his Department.

Mr. Soames: The sale of land and buildings over the past ten years has benefited the defence budget by some £789 million. The cost of achieving this level of receipt, however, is only recorded for the past five financial years, including the present year, and is as follows:

1990–91: £2.9 million
1991–92: £5.6 million
1992–93: £6.3 million
1993–94: £11.2 million
1994–95: £14.7 million

These levels of expenditure do not include in-house resources as this information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The increasing costs are due to larger and more complex sites being introduced into the disposals programme.

Bosnia

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will specify how many violations of the no-fly zone over Bosnia have been recorded for fixed wing aircraft in each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Soames: The monitoring of air activity over Bosnia is a matter for the UN and NATO. However, we understand that there have been 59 reported violations of the no-fly zone by fixed wing aircraft in the last 12 months. These are broken down as follows:

	Number
March	2
April	2
May	0
June	6
July	2
August	3
September	9
October	4
November	6

"Small Change" Experiments

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of LSD experiments called "Small Change" carried out at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down; in which years were the "Small Change" experiments conducted; how many service volunteers were tested under the "Small Change" experiments; what were the lowest and highest doses administered to service volunteers; what these volunteers were required to do under the "Small Change" experiments; how many animals were tested under the "Small Change" experiments and what types of animals were used; what was the conclusion of the "Small Change" experiments; with which countries the results of these experiments were shared; and under which defence agreement the results were shared with these countries.

Mr. Freeman: Responsibility for such matters rests with the chief executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment. I have therefore asked him to reply.

Letter from Graham S. Pearson to Dr. David Clark, dated 8 March 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what was the purpose of LSD experiments called Small Change carried out at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down; in which years were the Small Change experiments conducted; how many Service volunteers were tested under the Small Change experiments; what were the lowest and highest doses administered to Service volunteers; what these volunteers were required to do under the Small Change experiments; how many animals were tested under the Small Change experiments and what types of animals were used; what was the conclusion of the Small Change experiments; with which countries the results of these experiments were shared; and under which defence agreement the results were shared with these countries has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the treat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. As part of that programme, an evaluation is carried out of chemicals that may be utilised by an aggressor as a chemical warfare agent.

3. Small Change, which took place in 1968, was one in a series of studies carried out to assess the effect of LSD on troops in a military setting where the behaviour of those volunteers who had been given LSD could be compared with control volunteers who had not been given LSD. No animals were used in these studies. The principal aim of the study was to assess the effects on the overall efficiency of an infantry platoon in attack when half of its personnel had been dosed with 160 µg each of LSD. The study was to determine whether the presence of volunteers who had not received LSD would:

a. Mitigate the effects of the drug on the military performance of the unit as a whole.

b. Modify the response of the individual members of the unit to the drug.

4. Twenty eight volunteers participated in Small Change; fourteen received doses of 160 µg LSD in water. The volunteers were required to perform anti-terrorist sweeps as formed sections, each sweep involving an advance over four kilometres and last about 2½ hours.

5. Small Change showed that the platoon did not discharge its functions as well as would normally be expected. Overall its performance was adequate but it would have sustained a higher number of casualties than might have reasonably been expected. Unit efficiency fell by about 10% and the role of good discipline and mutual support between drugged and undrugged soldiers in mitigating the drug effects were demonstrated.

6. The results from Small Change formed part of the technology database held by the Establishment in the area of evaluation of the potential hazard to Service personnel from possible chemical warfare agents. This information was drawn upon during the 1960s and 1970s in the agreements with our NATO allies to exchange information and so promote collaboration and cooperation in areas such as research and development in chemical and biological defence. The agreements at that time included:

a. The Technical Cooperation Programme involving UK, US, Canada and Australia which had subsumed the earlier trilateral UK/US/Canada meetings.

b. American, British, Canadian and Australian Armies (ABCA) agreement Quadripartite Working Group (QWG) on NBC defence.

c. The NATO Panel VII on chemical and biological defence.

Fraud

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 28 February, Official Report, column 515, if he will give a breakdown of the figure for fraud in the financial year 1993–94.

Mr. Soames: The breakdown of non-procurement fraud in my Department in financial year 1993–94 was as follows:

Fraudulent encashment of payable instrument	2,000
Travel and subsistence	17,000
Misappropriation of cash	107,000
Instrument of payment received on false documentation	81,000
Theft of assets	358,000
False claim for hours worked	3,000
Other	3,000

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 28 February, Official Report, column 516, what were the estimated costs of fraud in the five highest value cases specified by his Department.

Mr. Soames: The estimated values of the frauds in question were as follows:

Director of Ammunition (Foxley)	1,500,000
VMS (Ltd.)	150,000
Chellingworth and Singer Ltd.	1,000,000
Gateway Motor Auctions	111,000
CAS Aviation and Marine International	650,000

These figures do not, however, necessarily represent a quantifiable cash loss to the Department.

Biological and Toxic Weapons Convention

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy in respect of the biological and toxic weapons convention review conference to be held in 1996.

Mr. Freeman: My Department is working for a strengthening of the biological and toxic weapons convention by the inclusion of appropriate verification measures. We hope to have achieved progress towards this by 1996.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures his Department has considered to enhance the verification procedures of the biological and toxic weapons convention.

Mr. Freeman: My Department is currently giving consideration to a number of measures including declarations, visits and inspections, some of which could be at short notice, that could be included in a future verification regime for the biological and toxin weapons convention.

ENVIRONMENT

Non-human Primates

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many non-human primates are imported to the United Kingdom annually; from which nation sources; which species are involved; and what information is held about distribution throughout the country.

Sir Paul Beresford: All species of primate are listed in the appendices to the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild fauna and flora, and are therefore subject to the import/export licensing controls contained in the convention, which is implemented throughout the European Union under regulations 3626/82 and 3418/83. In 1994, 1,999 live primates were recorded as imports to the UK under the CITES regulations. The species and countries of origin involved are shown in the table. The Department does not keep comprehensive information about the distribution of imported specimens within the UK as this is not required by CITES for most of the specimens concerned.

Species	Number imported	Country of origin
Golden lion Tamarin	2	Hong Kong
(Leontopithecus rosalia)	3	Japan
Chacma baboon	7	South Africa
(Papio hamadryas ursinus)
Olive baboon	55	Kenya
(Papio hamadryus anubis)
Crab-eating macaque	989	Mauritius
(Macaca fascicularis)	431	Philippines
	234	Israel
	40	China
Rhesus macaque	191	China
(Macaca mulatta)	40	USA
Cotton-top tamarin	4	Japan
(Saguinus oedipus)
Owl-faced monkey	1	Zaire
(Cercopithecus hamlyni)
Pileated gibbon	1	Switzerland
(Hylobates pileatus)
Black howler monkey	1	USA
(Alouatta caraya)

Local Government Finance

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment what are his proposals for removing the current restrictions which apply to certain local authorities in the exercise of their economic development powers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I have today laid before the House new regulations which will have the effect of removing from 1 April 1995 the current £10,000 limit on the amount of financial assistance which certain local authorities are able to provide to individual businesses each year under their economic development powers. All local authorities in England will now be free to decide, having regard to all their local circumstances including the resources available to them, the amount of any financial assistance which they provide to businesses.

British Gas

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions there have been with British Gas about grant aid and the development of Foleshill gas work site; if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: I understand that British Gas has reached agreement with English Partnerships about the grant required to develop phase 1 of the site and that a survey will be completed this month for British Gas to establish ground conditions on phase 2 of the site. A formal submission to the board of English Partnerships will be made shortly after that about the offer of a grant to British Gas.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to make a submission to the European Commission under article 34 of the Euratom treaty in respect to the planned first shipment of high-level radioactive waste from Sellafield to Japan.

Mr. Atkins: None. Article 34 of the Euratom treaty relates to particularly dangerous experiments which are to take place in the territories of member states. The article will not apply to shipments of radioactive wastes from the UK, which will always comply with internationally agreed safety requirements.

Sickness Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to combat sickness absenteeism in (a) Ordnance Survey, (b) the Planning Inspectorate and (c) his Department.

Sir Paul Beresford: Line managers are required to monitor the level of sick leave taken by their staff and to take action where this gives cause for concern. Continuing failure to achieve the required standard of attendance can lead to medical retirement or dismissal. Where officers require help, the services of the welfare division are available. We can also call on specialist counselling services, and the civil service occupational health service to provide advice.

The Department has also hosted exhibitions and publicised events such as the Health Education Authority's "Look After Your Heart" campaign, together with a health screening programme.

Office of Water Services

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will permit Ofwat to make appropriate charges when asked to give advice in other countries on water privatisation and the role of the regulator; and if he will make a statement on the basis on which charges are permitted.

Sir Paul Beresford: I understand that Ofwat, as an independent non-ministerial Government Department, follows the normal Treasury accounting guidance on charging practices for Government Departments.

Bathing Water Directive

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will oppose a review and upgrading of the bathing water directive, as proposed by the European Commission.

Sir Paul Beresford: Our objective in the forthcoming negotiations on the Commission's proposal will be to ensure that the revised bathing water directive concentrates on essential quality and health parameters, is cost-effective, based on up-to-date science and meets the requirements of subsidiarity.

South West Water

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the projected cost of the reference by South West Water to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, following the limits imposed by Ofwat on water charging in the south-west.

Sir Paul Beresford: The costs of the reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission of the determinations in respect of South West Water Services Ltd. will be borne by that company, in accordance with the terms of its appointment, but these costs cannot be taken into account in setting price limits. The MMC cannot at this stage estimate with any accuracy what those costs will be.

TREASURY

Bank of England Profits

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much profit has been made by the Bank of England in each of the last four years; and what happens to such profits.

Mr. Nelson: The profits of the banking department of the Bank of England for the last four years were:

		1990–91 £ million	1991–92 £ million	1992–93 £ million	1993–94 £ million
		161.8	166.2	88.3	120.2
The profits were accounted for as follows:
(i)	Tax	18.1	30.9	12.1	24.4
(ii)	Paid to the Treasury	81.5	67.7	38.1	48.4
(iii)	Retained by the Bank	62.2	67.6	38.1	47.4

In addition, the profits of the Bank's issue department from the issue of bank notes, which were all paid to the Treasury were:

1990–91 £ million	1991–92 £ million	1992–93 £ million	1993–94 £ million
2,546	1,875	1,556	1,117

This information is published in the Bank's annual report and accounts, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Career Breaks

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) men and (b) women applied for career breaks in his Department or its agencies; and how many have had their employment terminated in the last five years.

Mr. Nelson: Figures relating to the number of staff who applied for career breaks over the last five years are unavailable. The number of staff from my Departments and agencies on career breaks during the period requested is 100 men and 2,224 women.

The total number of staff from my Departments who have had their employment terminated in the last five years is 438. No staff on a career break had his or her employment terminated.

Import Penetration

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effects of the last three increases in interest rates on import penetration.

Mr. Nelson: Import penetration depends on a variety of factors, including price competitiveness, domestic demand and capacity. Recent increases in interest rates were aimed at ensuring permanently low inflation and sustainable economic growth, thereby providing a stable climate within which British industry can compete successfully in both domestic and overseas markets.

Tourism

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the numbers of jobs (a) lost or (b) gained by changes in the balance of payments in tourism between 1976 and 1993.

Mr. Nelson: HM Treasury has made no such estimate.

Convergence Programme

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to update the convergence programme produced by the United Kingdom in February 1994.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A revised convergence programme is today being submitted to the European Commission. Copies of the programme are available in the Libraries of both Houses.

Incapacity Benefit

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what circumstances it is envisaged that people receiving incapacity benefit will be taxed at source; and how many people he estimates this will effect.

Sir George Young [holding answer 3 March 1995]: It is estimated that there will be over 300,000 new recipients of incapacity benefit in 1995–96, of whom about 200,000 are expected to have an income tax liability. Tax will be deducted under pay-as-you-earn in one of two ways. For most recipients—who have some taxable income other than their benefit—tax will be deducted by adjusting the tax code applied to that other source. For those who do not have another source of taxable income—about 10,000 recipients—tax will be deducted from their benefit by the Benefits Agency.

Disability Living Allowance

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost to the Exchequer of raising the personal allowance by an amount equivalent to the blind person's allowance for people receiving disability living allowance at a rate equal to, or greater than, the middle rate of the care component of that allowance.

Sir George Young [holding answer 3 March 1995]: The estimated revenue cost in 1994–95 of such a change is £20 million.

Allowances

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people currently receive (a) the married couple's allowance, (b) the additional person's allowance, (c) the widow's bereavement allowance and (d) the blind person's allowance.

Sir George Young [holding answer 3 March 1995]: Latest estimates are in the table:

Numbers benefiting from allowances in 1994–95

	Thousands
Married couple's allowance[1]	10,500
Additional personal allowance	750
Widow's bereavement allowance	120
Blind person's allowance	30

[1] Number of married couples with one or both partners benefiting.

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if related allowances such as the adult and child dependency allowance will be treated as part of the income of the recipient of incapacity benefit once the benefit becomes taxable; and in how many of these cases taxing the recipient of incapacity benefit will render that person eligible for income support.

Sir George Young [holding answer 3 March 1995]: Incapacity benefit, including age-related additions and adult dependency increases, paid to new claimants after 13 April 1995, will be liable to income tax. Child dependency increases will not be liable to income tax. It is not possible to make a reliable estimate of the number of recipients of incapacity benefit with an income tax liability who will be eligible for income support, as a result of taxing the recipient.

Financial Institutions

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if all individual traders in City financial institutions are required to have individual trading position limits set by their institutions, under Bank of England regulations, or under other regulations.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 6 March 1995]: Both the Bank and the Securities and Futures Authority require the management of relevant institutions to have limits on overall trading positions and, where appropriate, to monitor and record exposures against them.

Barings

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his oral statement on Barings of 27 February, Official Report, column 693, what he has to add to his statement in respect of his comment that the unauthorised derivative positions in Barings Singapore were built up in a matter of days; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 6 March 1995]: I have nothing to add to what my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer told the House on Monday 27 February. He has asked the Board of Banking Supervision to investigate fully and urgently all aspects of the Barings episode and to report back to him.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the responsibilities of Mrs. Lisa Leeson within the back office of Barings Singapore; and if they included the settlement of derivative trades undertaken by traders within Barings Singapore.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 6 March 1995]: This is a matter for Barings.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the trading limits imposed upon Mr. Nick Leeson of Barings Singapore by Barings.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 6 March 1995]: None at the moment, but as my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer told the House on Monday 27 February, he has asked the Board of Banking Supervision to investigate fully and urgently all aspects of the Barings episode and to report back to him.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the dates on which the large unauthorised derivative positions build up recently by a trader at Barings in Singapore first became known to (a) Barings managers in Singapore, (b) Barings managers in the far east, (c) staff in the London office, (d) Barings management in London, (e) staff at the Bank of England, (f) staff at Her Majesty's Treasury, (g) the Governor of the Bank of England, (h) himself and (i) the Prime Minister.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 6 March 1995]: I do not have the information on (a) to (d). For (e) to (i) the date in each case was Friday 24 February.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) on what occasions Barings London treasury department, or any other entity within Barings London, arranged funding for any of the recent unauthorised derivative positions initiated by a trade at Barings in Singapore;

(2) on what date a team of staff from Barings in London flew to Singapore to investigate the large derivative positions which were recently taken by a trade in Barings Singapore and which resulted in the collapse of the bank.

Mr. Nelson [holding answers 6 March 1995]: As my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer told the House on Monday 27 February, he has asked the Board of Banking Supervision to investigate fully and urgently all aspects of the Barings episode and to report back to him.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what regulations exist to control the percentage of contract open interest which may be accounted for by any one trader or entity, on the futures exchanges in (a) London, (b) Tokyo, (c) Singapore and (d) Chicago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 6 March 1995]: The answers are as follows:

London:

there are no limits on the open positions that may be taken by persons dealing on recognised investment exchanges in London. Transactions on the London, International Financial Futures and Options Exchange, LIFFE, the London Commodity Exchange, LCE, the International Petroleum Exchange, IPE, and the London Metal Exchange, LME, are cleared through members of the London Clearing House, LCH, which regularly monitors its members' margin requirements against their capital. The LCH and the four exchanges also monitor large positions of their members at contract level. The OMLX exchange carries out a daily position and margin review of all its members.

Chicago:

two US futures exchanges based in Chicago are recognised as overseas investment exchanges under the Financial Services Act 1986. They are supervised by the US Commodity Futures Trading Commission whose regulations have included provisions for limits on open positions for a number of years.

Tokyo and Singapore:

there are no exchanges operating in these centres which are recognised as overseas investment exchanges under the Financial Services Act 1986. Questions about the regulations applying to exchanges in these centres should be addressed to the relevant authorities.

Civil Service

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he has taken to create a more efficient, modernised civil service without demoralising the staff with job insecurity and a reduction of living standards.

Sir George Young [holding answer 8 March 1995]: "The Civil Service—Continuity and Change", Cm 2627, and "The Civil Service—Taking Forward Continuity and Change", Cm 2748, explain what measures have been taken, and will be taken, to create a more efficient civil service; emphasise the Government's intention to deal with staff reductions on a voluntary basis wherever possible; and make clear the Government's commitment to maintaining a predominantly career civil service, committed to the training and development of all staff, and to effective communication to maintain morale.

In addition, the recent consultation paper "Better Accounting for the Taxpayer's Money: Resource Accounting and Budgeting in Government", Cm 2626, proposes potentially far reaching changes in the way Government Departments budget and account for all the resources they consume, and what they achieve with those resources, as part of the Government's commitment to improve the way that the public sector manages itself.

Tobacco Products (Distance Selling)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he is taking to prevent the promotion and distribution of tobacco products through distance selling; what measures are being or will be taken to publicise the penalties for engaging in this trade; and how many companies have been prosecuted for distance selling of tobacco products.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 8 March 1995]: Distance selling, in which duty is paid in the country of destination, is a recognised legitimate activity for which provision has been made in EC legislation, which is implemented in United Kingdom legislation in the Excise Goods (Holding, Movement, Warehousing and REDS) Regulations 1992. Certain schemes which are being marketed as distance selling are being investigated by HM Customs and Excise as tax avoidance devices.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will make a statement on recent British initiatives to assist the peace process in Sudan;

(2) when the next round in the Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development talks on Sudan is expected to take place;

(3) what proposals are being considered at the United Nations to increase the pressure on all sides in the Sudanese war to find a peaceful solution.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We believe that the IGADD peace initiative offers the best hope of a peaceful resolution to the conflict in Sudan. We are in regular contact with the parties involved in the initiative and are encouraging them to negotiate in good faith. Consultations between the parties are continuing. No date for the next round of talks has yet been set.

Conventional Forces in Europe Treaty

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of (a) the progress of the CFE treaty implementation and (b) the prospects for implementation of all the obligations by all signatories by the November 1995 deadline.

Mr. David Davis: So far, progress on CFE treaty implementation has been good, with almost all states achieving the required 60 per cent. target by 16 November 1994. We are actively addressing outstanding problems and hope that the treaty will be fully implemented by all states at November 1995.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the number and the types of CFE treaty limited equipment which have yet to be destroyed in all CFE signatory states.

Mr. David Davis: The information is in the following table.

At November 1994, the following equipment had yet to be destroyed by CFE signatory states:

Country	Battle tanks	Armoured Combat vehicles	Artillery	Attack helicopters	Combat aircraft
Armenia	—	159	—	—	—
Azerbaijan	216	727	103	—	—
Belarus	570	434	—	—	50
Bulgaria	317	92	162	—	40

Turkey	424	—	48	—	—
Ukraine	728	321	—	—	226
United Kingdom	62	10	—	—	—

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Russian request for a revision of the CFE treaty.

Mr. David Davis: Russia has called for revision of article V of the CFE treaty, which sets limits on the amount of treaty limited equipment in the northern and southern flank regions. We have urged Russia to use the flexibility within the treaty to meet her security concerns. We have also, with our NATO allies, stressed the importance of full implementation of the treaty's provisions.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the consequences of the Belarus decision to halt the destruction of weapons requested by the CFE treaty.

Mr. David Davis: We are most concerned by Belarus's announcement, which, if implemented, would have potentially serious consequences for the CFE treaty. We and other NATO allies have strongly urged Belarus to resume its destruction programme. We are also considering what assistance we might provide to help Belarus to fulfil its reduction obligations by the November 1995 deadline.

Intergovernmental Conference

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the British Government will be pursuing the issue of an enhanced role for national Parliaments in contributing towards the accountability of EU institutions at the intergovernmental conference.

Mr. David Davis: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said in the House on 1 March:

"we shall present a range of our ideas at the conference...We shall set out ways of achieving a stronger role for national Parliament".—[Official Report, 1 March 1995; Vol. 255, c. 1063.]

Ivory Coast

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent reports he has received on the human rights situation in the Ivory Coast; and if he will publish the representations made to the Government of the Ivory Coast.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 6 March 1995]: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to his question of 10 January, column 59.

Code d'Ivoire is a multi-party democracy with functioning human rights institutions. The Ivorian authorities are well aware of the importance attached internationally to full respect for human rights.

EDUCATION

Sickness Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what measures she is taking to combat sickness absenteeism in (a) the Teachers Pensions Agency and (b) her Department.

Mr. Boswell: Sickness absence in the Department, including the Teachers Pensions Agency, is monitored and reported monthly to heads of branch. Referrals are made to personnel and welfare officers when an individual's sick leave totals give cause for concern. In addition, the Department is about to launch an initiative to (a) remind staff of the procedures to follow if they are sick and (b) encourage line managers through briefings and training to take a leading role in managing sickness absence firmly but fairly.

North Yorkshire County Council

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the number of employees in the education department of North Yorkshire county council in each of the last 15 years.

Mr. Robin Squire: The employment of individuals in the education department of North Yorkshire county council is a matter for North Yorkshire local education authority. The Department does not collect such information.

SCOTLAND

Incentive Prescribing Schemes

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made on the introduction of incentive prescribing schemes for non-fundholding practices; which health boards have incentive prescribing schemes already in place or definitely due to start on 1 April and how many practices and list patients will be covered.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The indicative prescribing scheme, introduced in April 1992, allows for incentive prescribing schemes to operate in each health board area. To date, no applications from health boards have been formally approved under the indicative prescribing scheme to set up incentive prescribing schemes.

Allowances

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the (i) salary, honorarium or allowance payable to and (ii) number of days, or part days, on a weekly average devoted to the performance of public duties by (a) the chairman and members of Scottish Homes board, (b) the chairman and members of Argyll and Clyde health board, (c) the chairman and members of the Renfrewshire Healthcare NHS trust, (d) the chairman and members of the RAH trust, (e) the leader of Strathclyde regional council, (f) the chairpersons of committees of Strathclyde regional council, (g) other members of Strathclyde regional council, (h) the leader of Renfrew district council, (i) the conveners of committees of Renfrew district council and (j) other members of Renfrew district council; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Details of allowances paid to individual members of local authorities are not held centrally. Each authority decides on its own scheme within the requirements of the Local Authorities Etc. (Allowances) (Scotland) Regulations 1991, as amended. Details of payments made to individuals are available for inspection by local electors at the appropriate council offices on request.

The information requested for the chairman and members of the other bodies is provided in the table.

Non-executive directors	5,000 per annum	3 days per month

Ian Greer Associates

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what items of correspondence were received by Ministers in his Department from Messrs. Ian Greer Associates in the last month.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 28 February 1995]: None.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will review the decision to keep closed until 2006 the Forestry Commission file No. F43/454 at the Public Record Office.

Sir Hector Monro: The file is now available for inspection by the general public at the Public Record Office.

Abattoirs

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many abattoirs there were in 1993 and 1994; and how many of these met European Community standards.

Sir Hector Monro: At the end of 1993, there were 54 licensed red meat abattoirs in Scotland, of which 27 fully met European Community standards and were approved to trade throughout the EC. Of the remainder, 17 plants were operating under a temporary derogation while upgrading towards full EC status and 10 plants were low-throughput premises.

At the end of 1994, 31 of the 49 licensed red meat abattoirs were up to the full EC standard. Ten plants continued to operate under a temporary derogation and eight plants had low-throughput status.

Social Work Trusts

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of state for Scotland what consideration he has given to the establishment of social work trusts.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Guidance to local authorities has said that, in relation to community care, they should distinguish between their purchasing and providing functions. The establishment of social work trusts is one option which could assist social work authorities in developing their enabling functions.

Care Services

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will issue detailed guidelines on the criteria to be used to determine whether a person is in need of health care or social care.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In his statement to the Scottish Grand Committee on 1 March, Official Report, Scottish Grand Committee, columns 1-12, my noble and learned Friend the Minister of State announced that as part of an on-going review of all aspects of continuing care and care in the community the Scottish Office has continued to refine the guidance that is available in this respect.

Consistent with the approach adopted by the Department of Health, to which the Scottish Office contributed, detailed guidance on the operational aspects of arranging and funding continuing care services is to be issued from the Scottish Office.

A letter issued on 1 March from the Scottish Office on this matter to directors of social work, general managers of health boards and chief executives on NHS trusts in Scotland. A copy of this letter has been placed in the Library of the House.

NHS Management Executive

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what examination the NHS management executive is giving to the merger of health boards and local authorities in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None.

Salmon Roe

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he had to legalise the sale of salmon roe produced in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: Interested parties will be consulted shortly on proposals which would permit trade in farmed, but not wild, salmon roe.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the allocation of the European regional development fund to each of the objective 1, 2 and 5b regions in Scotland for the current programming period.

Mr. Kynoch: The objective 1 and 2 single programming documents were approved on 29 July and 16 December respectively. Allocations from the European regional development fund are shown in the table.

Approval of the Scottish objective 5b programmes is still awaited. However, the proposed allocation for each programme from the ERDF is also shown. All allocations are at 1994 prices.

Designation	Period	Area	ERDF mecu	ERDF £ million
Objective 1	1994–99	Highlands and Islands	180.000	142.068
Objective 2	1994–96	Eastern Scotland	96.000	75.770
		Western Scotland	222.910	175.935
Objective 5b	1994–99	Borders	20.400	16.101
		Dumfries and Galloway	33.900	26.756
		North and West Grampian	28.250	22.297
		Rural Stirling/ Upland Tayside	16.875	13.319

* Exchange rate £ = 1.267 ecu.

Each area is eligible to receive further ERDF resources from Community initiatives.

Prisons (Drugs)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many drug and related finds, broken down by type of drug, were made in gaols in Scotland in each year since 1990.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 9 March 1995:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your question on how many drug and related finds, broken down by type of drug, were made in jails in Scotland in each year since 1990.

Any prisoner found in possession of illicit drugs or injecting equipment is guilty of a disciplinary offence under The Prison and Young Offenders Institutions (Scotland) Rules 1994. The number of such recorded offences since 1990 are as follows:

1990–91: 749

1993–94: 895

Detailed information for these years is not available on the type of drugs found but records indicate that most of the disciplinary offences involved cannabis.

Water Authorities

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the proposed salaries and expenses for (a) the chairman, (b) the chief executives and (c) all other board members for the proposed new water authorities.

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 7 March 1995]: The chairman of the North and West water authorities will each receive £40,000 per annum while the chairman of the East of Scotland water authority will receive £24,000 per annum. The chief executives of new water authorities have yet to be appointed, but the salary of each will be around £80,000, plus a possible performance bonus to be settled each year. The other members of the new water authorities will normally receive £6,000 per annum. In all cases, expenses incurred on water authority business will be reimbursed.

Voluntary Bodies (Grants)

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has reached a decision on the allocation to voluntary bodies of grant under the special grants (environmental) programme in 1995–96.

Sir Hector Monro: I am pleased to have been able to offer 51 individual grants totalling £429,930 to 46 voluntary bodies in Scotland to assist them in carrying out their valuable environmental conservation, improvement and education work. The sums available in the special grants (environmental) programme in 1995–96 represent an increase of some 12 per cent. over 1994–95. This increase demonstrates both the value that the Government place on the work carried out by the voluntary sector, and its role in taking forward the Government's environmental objectives.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has yet determined the level of fee remission grant which will be available to parents under the assisted places scheme in school session 1995–96.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend is making £10.656 million available for fee remission in 1995–96. Fifty-five schools across Scotland will participate in the scheme. This funding should enable the number of pupils currently benefiting to be maintained at slightly above 3,000.

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce the income scale which will apply to the assisted places scheme in Scotland in school session 1995–96.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: For school session 1995–96, I propose to lay regulations before the House in due course providing for progressive parental contribution for one assisted pupil in relation to family income as follows:

Part of relevant income to which the specified percentage applies	Parental contribution (percentage)
That part (if any) which exceeds £9,545 but does not exceed £10,378	9
That part (if any) which exceeds £10,378 but does not exceed £11,226	12

That part (if any) which exceeds £18,872	33

The relevant income scale is open ended, but the remission can, of course, be given only where the parental contribution is less than the school tuition fee.

Cable Television Franchises

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those areas of Scotland which are covered by cable television franchises.

Mr. Ian Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

Fourteen franchises, covering 1,123,000 homes have been awarded in Scotland to date, in the following areas:

Aberdeen
Dundee and Carnoustie
Perth
Glenrothes and Kirkaldy
Edinburgh
Falkirk and Livingston
Cumbernauld, Airdie and Coatbridge
Motherwell and East Kilbride
Greater Glasgow
North West Glasgow and Clydebank
Bearsden and Milngavie
Dumbarton
Paisley and Renfrew
Greenock and Port Glasgow

The ITC is considering further local delivery operator franchises in Scotland.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Framework Document

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what complaints he has received about the non-availability of the framework document; how many copies of the document had been distributed by Tuesday 28 February; and what proposals he has to make the framework document readily available to all the people of Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: There was enormous public interest in this document and, as a result, there was some initial difficulty in quickly meeting immediate demand.

At 28 February, approximately 60,000 copies had been distributed through post offices and approximately 40,000 through the freephone and freepost mechanisms.

The Government recognise the importance of everyone in Northern Ireland having an opportunity to consider the proposals. Copies continue to be available in the 30 main post offices and are still being issued in response to requests to the freephone and freepost systems.

Fair Employment

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the J. Hawthorne listed as a consultant in the fair employment small firms employment scheme in his answer of 15 February, Official Report, columns 679–80, is the same person as James Hawthorne CBE, the head of the Community Relations Commission and the former controller of BBC Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: Yes.

Abattoirs

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many abattoirs there were in 1993 and 1994; and how many of these met European Community standards.

Mr. Ancram: All abattoirs in Northern Ireland are approved in accordance with the terms of European Community directives, laying down the hygiene, operation, supervision and structural conditions of abattoirs, so that they will meet European Community standards.

At the end of 1993, there were 16 approved red meat abattoirs, of which 15 were fully approved to trade throughout the Community and one was a full throughput premises with a temporary derogation. At the end of 1994, there were 15 approved red meat abattoirs, of which 14 were fully approved and one had a temporary derogation. Premises with temporary derogations are approved to trade on the national market.

Portaferry-Strangford Bridge

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans there are to build a bridge linking Portaferry and Strangford village; what is the estimated cost of such a bridge; and what EU funding could be available for such a scheme.

Mr. Moss: There are no proposals to build such a bridge, which, in the absence of detailed costings, is estimated to cost between £15 million and £20 million. It is not possible to say whether European Union funding could be available without first considering a full economic and financial appraisal.

Expenditure

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much was spent from the law, order, protective and miscellaneous services programme on (a) the probation service, (b) training schools, (c) grants to voluntary bodies concerned with the rehabilitation of offences, (d) crime prevention, (e) victim support, (f) civil defence, (g) civil emergencies, (h) elections (i) services in support of the security forces, (j) legal services, (k) the Standing Advisory Committee on Human Rights, (l) information services and (m) Northern Ireland Office administration in 1993–94 and 1994–95; and what is the estimated expenditure in 1995–96 and 1996–97.

Sir John Wheeler: The amount spent in 1993–94, forecast spend for 1994–95 and planned expenditure for 1995–96 and 1996–97 from the law, order protective and miscellaneous services programme are as follows:

		Spend 1993–94 £000s	Forecast 1994–95 £000s	Planned 1995–96 £000s	Planned 1996–97 £000s

c.	Prison Costs	141,130	147,485	143,813	144,365

Ms Mowlam: To aks the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the amount of money spent under the law and order, protective and miscellaneous services programme on criminal damages and injuries compensation in (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95; and what is the estimated expenditure in (i) 1995–96 and (ii) 1996–97.

Sir John Wheeler: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Compensation Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Denis Stanley. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. A. Stanley to Ms Mowlam, dated 8 March 1995:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply, on behalf of the Compensation Agency, to your recent Question regarding criminal injuries compensation.

The following table details how much was spent on criminal damage and criminal damage and criminal injuries compensation in 1993–94, the forecast for 1994–95 and the current estimate for 1995–96 and 1996–97:

Year	Criminal damage compensation £ Million	Criminal injuries compensation £ Million
1993–94	67.9	29.6
1994–95 (forecast)	55.0	31.7
1995–96 (estimate)	26.0	33.8
1996–97 (estimate)	9.0	30.8

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Television Licence Fee

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he expects to seek parliamentary authority for an increase in the television fee.

Mr. Dorrell: On 1 December 1994, Official Report, column 805, I announced that, from 1 April 1995, the fee for a colour television licence would increase to £86.50 and that for a monochrome licence to £28.50. I have today laid before the House the regulations necessary to bring these fees into force.

Whitehall Study

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what brief and limits he set for the study he has commissioned on the future of Whitehall and of its urban design consequences;

(2) what is the cost of the study of the future of Whitehall and of its urban design consequences will be published;

(3) when he expects the study of the future of Whitehall and of its urban design consequences will be published.

Sir Paul Beresford: I have been asked to reply.

Property Holdings commissioned a portfolio review last year to examine the scope for rationalising the Whitehall estate and for reuse of surplus space. Property Holdings with the Department of National Heritage also commissioned an urban design study of the Government estate in the Whitehall conservation area, which will provide day-to-day best practice advice to Departments carrying out maintenance and alterations affecting the external appearance of their Whitehall buildings. Copies of the reference for both studies will be placed in the Library of the House.

The portfolio review is on-going and the initial report was received in October 1994. It is estimated to cost up to £75,000 plus VAT, but it will not be published as it includes market-sensitive information that could affect any property negotiations resulting from the study. The design is expected to be completed by July 1995 and a copy will be placed in the Library of the House. It is estimated to cost £40,000 plus VAT, including the printing and production costs of the guide.

Children's Play

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage which organisations he has invited to bid for funds to carry out work under his new arrangements for children's play.

Mr. Dorrell: I will shortly be meeting a number of organisations to discuss the new arrangements which we propose to introduce and will then invite bids for funds from these and other interested organisations.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps he has taken to ensure that all children's play activities are recognised by the Sports Council for the purposes of national lottery funding.

Mr. Dorrell: Under the National Lottery etc. Act 1994, it is for the Sports Council to consider the eligibility of projects submitted to it in the light of the Act and the directions which I have issued to it. I understand that the council is considering this matter in the light of the announcement which I made on 2 March about new arrangements for children's play, Official Report, column 640.

National Lottery

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to conduct research into the effect that the introduction of an instant win game by the operators of the national lottery will have on fund raising by charities, sports clubs and other organisations, especially through the medium lotteries.

Mr. Dorrell: I have no such plans.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what consultations he has had with the Director General of the National Lottery with regard to placing a limit on the first prize payable in respect of any single winning ticket.

Mr. Dorrell: I have had no such consultations.

Tourism Promotion

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps he takes to establish the accuracy of local claims regarding the origins of historical figures used in terms of tourism promotion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 7 March 1995]: It is not my function to check the accuracy of traditional associations of historical figures with specific localities.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Election Law Breaches

Mr. Straw: To ask the Attorney-General how many allegations of (a) fraudulent voting, (b) misuse of proxies, (c) breach of financial limits and (d) other breaches of election law and been (i) received by the police or the Crown Prosecution Service, (ii) investigated and (iii) prosecuted, and with what result, for each year since 1992.

The Attorney-General: The number of cases reported to the CPS with a view to investigation for election offences between 1992 and 1995 and covering both parliamentary and local government elections is a follows:

101 cases
1993
30 cases (between 1 April and 31 December)
1994
61 cases
1995 (to date)
3 cases

There are no accurate figures for the first three months of 1993.

Categorisation of the cases in the manner requested by the hon. Member could be effected only through recovery from archives and scrutiny of each individual file. This would involve disproportionate cost. In 1992, there were five successful prosecutions for the personation of those entitled to vote; two of double voting; and one case of a person convicted on an eight-count indictment of theft and forgery of ballot papers and personation.

In 1993, there was one successful prosecution for a failure to return a declaration of expenses; one of making a false statement of fact about the personal character or conduct of a candidate; and one case of two offences of falsification of proxy forms. There was also an acquittal in a case of incurring unauthorised expenses.

In 1994, a case of falsification of a nomination of candidate form was commenced. The case has been committed for trial but no trial date has yet been fixed.

There is no central record of allegations received by the police but not submitted to the Crown Prosecution Service.

Sickness Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Attorney-General what measures he is taking to combat sickness absenteeism in (a) the Treasury Solicitor's Department, (b) the Serious Fraud Office, (c) Government Property Lawyers and (d) the Crown Prosecution Service.

The Attorney-General: The departments for which I am responsible are concerned about the well-being of their staff and monitor closely and investigate both individual cases and overall trends. They make every effort to control the level of sickness absences through preventive measures which include the provision of:

(a) health screening programmes;

(b) free eye tests and where necessary allowances to purchase spectacles for users of visual display units;

(c) stress awareness and management seminars;

(d) health and safety advice; and

(e) the services of a welfare officer.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Overseas Aid Policy

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Minister for Overseas Development will be publishing a statement about the United Kingdom proposals for improvements in its overseas aid policy at the time of the world summit for social development.

Mr. Baldry: Our objectives, policies and achievements are reviewed annually with a view to maintaining and improving the quality and effectiveness of the aid programme.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office, including the Overseas Development Administration, published its 1995 departmental report on 8 March and copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Sickness Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he is taking to combat sickness absenteeism in the Overseas Development Administration.

Mr. Baldry: Established guidelines are in place for the management of sick absence, including welfare, medical, disciplinary and inefficiency procedures which accord with best practice as recommended by the National Audit Office.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Domestic Committees

Mr. Miller: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission what recent changes have been made to the responsibilities of domestic committees.

Mr. Beith: Following discussions between Committees, the House of Commons Commission has now approved the following modifications to the responsibilities of domestic Committees which take account of the Information Committee's primary responsibility for the parliamentary data and video network and the latter's endorsement by the House:

the distribution of the clean feed within the House—from the Broadcasting Committee to the Information Committee; annunciator services and the provision of television, video and radio channels—from the Administration Committee to the Information Committee.

Internet

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee what factors are contributing to the delay in connecting hon. Members to the Internet.

Mr. Waller: The Information Committee considered the proposed experimental connection to Internet on 16 and 30 January. Before the system is operational, it is necessary to finalise and award the contract, arrange certain security measures and install a dedicated link.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee what assessment the Committee has made of whether it would be technically feasible to identify electronic mail sent by hon. Members from the parliamentary data and video network via the Internet to domestic addresses and those sent to the international addresses.

Mr. Waller: While it would be technically feasible to monitor Members' Internet e-mails, there are no plans to do so. It is a long-standing tradition of the House that hon. Members' parliamentary communications are not monitored by the House authorities. Since there are no charges for Internet e-mail, there would be no bar to Members receiving and sending either domestic or international e-mail messages.

Word Processors (Training)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee what facilities exist for training hon. Members on the use of word processors.

Mr. Waller: Training for hon. Members in all aspects of IT including word processors was considered by the Committee in its report "The Provision of Members' Information Technology Equipment, Software and Services"—first report, Session 1992–93, HC737—which was approved by the House on 30 June 1994. The report recommended, inter alia, the provision of a modest amount of basic on-site training which would be paid for by Members from their office costs allowance. Training in the use of the parliamentary data and video network is provided without charge to Members' office cost allowances.

Parliamentary Channel

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chairman of the Broadcasting Committee what are the current arrangements for parliamentary charging for the Parliamentary Channel; when these arrangements are subject to review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The licences from the Speaker of the House of Commons and the Clerk of the Parliaments which underpin the arrangements for parliamentary broadcasting run for five years until the summer of 1996, when they will fall due for renewal. PARBUL—Parliamentary Broadcasting Unit Ltd.—which is the company charged with producing the signals on behalf of Parliament, is funded by shareholdings from the BBC, ITV, Channel 4, BSkyB and the Parliamentary Channel. Funding is on a per-channel basis and the Parliamentary Channel therefore provides one sixth of the costs of the equipment and staff involved in the creation of the signals. The original agreement between Parliament and the broadcasters, which was approved by the House, provides for the broadcasters to make a contribution, via PARBUL, of roughly 50 per cent. towards the costs of the televising operation, in return for the right to make use of the signals for broadcasting purposes. No question arises therefore of any charge being payable to Parliament by the Parliamentary Channel.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chairman of the Broadcasting Committee what steps the Committee is taken to ensure that the Parliamentary Channel is made available free to all electors who are connected to satellite; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Parliamentary Channel is a cable channel and is available at no extra charge as part of the basic package of channels to all subscribers to broadband cable systems. The Select Committee on Broadcasting, in its first report of Session 1990–91 on "The Arrangements for the Permanent Televising of the Proceedings of the House", recommended that the United Artists proposals for the Parliamentary Channel offered the most promising prospect for the provision of a dedicated channel. It also noted that the proposal should not be regarded as the last word, nor as excluding or pre-empting any other proposals for a dedicated channel which might come forward in the future. I am not aware of any plans for the establishment of a dedicated Parliamentary Channel receivable by owners of satellite dishes. In any case, because of the high start-up and operating costs of such a channel, it could be provided free of charge only either at a commercial loss or on the basis of a large and continuing public subsidy.

Audio-visual Resources

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will promote or fund a CD-ROM on how Parliament and British democracy works for use by schools and electors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waller: I have been asked to reply.

The question of a multi-media presentation is at present under discussion between the officers of the two Houses, and other interested parties. Various audio-visual resources on Parliament are already available from the education officer.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Career Breaks

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many (a) men and (b) women applied for career breaks in his Department; and how many have had their employment terminated in the last five years.

Mr. Newton: No member of the Privy Council Office's staff has applied for a career break in the last five years.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Gas Licences

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish further information about the licences which would be granted pursuant to the Gas Bill, once enacted.

Mr. Eggar: I am today publishing further information about proposed gas licences, in advance of the Second Reading of the Gas Bill next Monday. These outlines will give a clearer idea of the measures and safeguards that would be established for the operation of a fully competitive market in domestic gas supply.

The principal standard conditions are likely to include:

for supply licences, an obligation to supply all prospective domestic customers within their area, subject to certain technical exceptions; to publish charges; to offer a reasonable range of methods of payment to customers; to supply gas where directed to do so by the Director General of Gas Supply, to ensure the continuity of supply to customers; to make financial arrangements, such as a bond, to cover the costs which would be involved if another company had to take over supplying their customers; to offer consumers reasonable rights to terminate contracts; to provide special services for disabled customers or pensioners free of charge; to adopt suitable methods for dealing with customers who have genuine difficulty paying their bills; to advise customers on energy efficiency; to check the background of officers authorised to enter customers' premises and provide them with official identification.

for transportation licences, requirements to keep separate accounts for transportation and storage business; to furnish the director with details of charges, and both the director and the Gas Consumers Council with other information; to establish standards of performance and provide compensation if they are not met; to establish a "network code" under which others may use the pipeline system; to make effective arrangements for the provision of emergency services to the public; to raise a levy, if necessary, to compensate any suppliers with disproportionate social obligations; and to obtain the director's approval before disposing of key assets.

for shipper licences, obligations as regards the use of pipeline systems; to assist the transporter during an emergency; to supply the director with appropriate information.

Gas Market (Competition)

Sir John Hannam: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 24 January, Official Report, columns 125–27, if he has reached any conclusions in relation to the consultation on the initial areas for domestic gas competition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The area for the first phase of the transition to a competitive gas market will cover some 500,000 gas consumers in Cornwall, Devon and Somerset.

The south-west has received by far the most support—nearly a third of all responses to our consultation document suggested the south-west as the most suitable area.

The response demonstrated widespread enthusiasm for competition in gas supply from all over the country. Local authorities and other organisations from all parts of the country—from Clydesbank to Carrick, from Devon to Dover, from Rotherham to Rugby—requested that they should be the first to benefit from competition in the domestic gas market.

The south-west fulfils the criteria set out by the Trade and Industry Select Committee and the consultation document:

it will be one of the areas that might be relatively disadvantaged by the higher transportation charges applicable;

it has a mix of rural and urban areas and a representative cross-section of types of consumers;

it is suitable for testing and necessary technical systems;

it is a clearly defined area with clear natural boundaries.

Because of the need for further consideration of technical factors, no decision regarding the second phase of the transition to competition has yet been made.

The Gas Bill published last week would provide the legislative and regulatory framework for the extension of competition in supply to 18 million domestic gas consumers in Great Britain. We have proposed that, subject to parliamentary approval of the Bill, the introduction of competition should be phased from 1996 to 1998, with the first phase in April 1996 covering some 500,000 homes, which would be extended to 2 million homes in 1997, before nationwide competition in 1998.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Alton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which EC member states permit European regional development fund grant to be accessed using wholly private sector match funding; and what are the reasons for Her Majesty's Government not permitting the same procedure.

Mr. Eggar: The Government do permit European regional development fund grant to be "accessed using wholly private sector match funding"—projects to be financed by the fund and the private sector alone. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Broadgreen (Mrs. Kennedy) on 20 February 1995, Official Report, columns 31–32.

Mr. Alton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the details of the models which the Government have developed and submitted to the Commission for facilitating objective 1 funding.

Mr. Eggar: I take it that the hon. Member is referring to the Government's proposals, mentioned in the reply I gave him on 20 February 1995, Official Report, column 31, for facilitating private sector contributions to projects to which the European regional development fund makes grants.

I do not intend to make these proposals public in advance of the Commission's response.

They relate not only to objective 1 grants but to ERDF grants generally.

Departmental Filing Arrangements

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether filing arrangements in his Department include indexing under the names of individual hon. Members.

Mr. Heseltine: Correspondence between hon. Members and Ministers in the Department is recorded in their respective private offices in the name of the hon. Member.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether filing arrangements in his Department include indexing under named lobbying companies.

Mr. Heseltine: There is no such index in the Department.

Correspondence

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many items of correspondence were received from the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton) by Ministers in his Department on issues relating to the interests of the Al Fayeds; on what dates they were received; and how many were replied to.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 7 March 1995]: It is not the normal practice to disclose information about communications between hon. Members and Ministers.

Network Marketing

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what inquiries are going on into the activities of companies involved in network marketing.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 7 March 1995]: Since June 1994, the Department has successfully applied to the High Court to wind up 12 companies engaged in the promotion of money-making schemes with a pyramid recruitment structure similar to that used in network marketing. However, as a matter of policy, I cannot disclose whether any current inquiries are taking place.

Pneumoconiosis Compensation Scheme

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many payments were made under the coal industry pneumoconiosis compensation scheme in (a) 1980, (b) 1986 and (c) 1993.

Mr. Page: The numbers of lump sum payments awarded by British Coal under the pneumoconiosis compensation scheme in the nearest financial years were as follows:

Year	Number of lump sum awards
1980–81	521
1993–94	263

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the average level of payment made under the coal industry pneumoconiosis compensation scheme in (a) 1980, (b) 1986 and (c) 1993.

Mr. Page: Average levels of lump sum payments awarded and loss of earnings allowances paid by British Coal under the pneumoconiosis compensation scheme in the nearest financial years were:

	Average lump sum payments £	Average loss of earnings allowances £
1980–81	781	1,183
1986–87	914	2,330
1993–94	1,640	5,850

Progression payments—supplement payments to lump sums—were introduced in 1988 and averaged £378 in 1993–94.

The estimate for average loss of earnings allowances in 1993–94 is provisional.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many payments have been made under the coal industry pneumoconiosis compensation scheme since 1974.

Mr. Page: The numbers of lump sum payments awarded by British Coal under the pneumoconiosis compensation scheme since 1974 are as follows:

Period	Number of lump sum awards
1 October 1974 to 2 December 1976	62,617
25 March 1979 to 31 December 1994	13,465

Figures for the period 3 December 1976 to 24 March 1979 are not readily available.

Civil Servants

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many civil servants since 4 May 1979 have left the Export Credits Guarantee Department and have within two years joined companies engaged in contracts with the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave her to the same question on 8 February 1995, Official Report, column 314.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which permanent secretaries have left his Department's employment in the last five years; and which public positions they have been appointed to subsequently.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 8 March 1995]: Mr. J. R. S. Guinness left the employment of the Department of Energy as permanent secretary during the five years from 1 March 1990. Mr. Guinness was appointed as part-time chairman of British Nuclear Fuels plc. No permanent secretary left the Department of Trade and Industry in the same period.

Regional Selective Assistance Grants

Mr. Hutton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the total values of all regional selective assistance grants paid to businesses in the Barrow and Furness parliamentary constituency in 1993–94 and 1994–95; and what was the average grant paid in each year.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The regional selective assistance grants which were made and accepted in the Barrow and Furness parliamentary constituency totalled £2,222,800 in 1993–94 and £135,500 in 1994–95. These projects are at a variety of stages of payment, although the average value of each offer made was £202,000 in 1993–94—this figure is influenced by one particularly large grant—and £22,600 in 1994–95.

Career Breaks

Mr. McNamara: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many (a) men and (b) women applied for career breaks in his Department or its agencies; and how many have had their employment terminated in the last five years.

Mr. Heseltine: My Department does not hold details on the number of staff who applied for career breaks over the past five years. However, between 1990 and 1994 the Department granted career breaks to 13 men and 263 women. None of these staff has had his or her employment terminated.

American Deregulation Initiative

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what reports have been sent by the embassy in Washington concerning the US Administration's deregulation initiative and the Bill introduced by the Republican party; and when these reports were despatched.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The British embassy in Washington has sent two reports, dispatched on 9 and 18 January 1995, concerning the "Congressional Republicans' Contract with America". The embassy brought to our attention two of the 10 proposed pieces of legislation, which collectively make up the contract, that may have deregulatory or competitiveness implications. These are the Job Creation and Enhancement Act and the Common Sense Legal Reforms Act.

Deregulation (Reporting)

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what instructions have been sent to overseas posts on the reporting of developments relevant to the Government's deregulation policies.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: As part of the Government's strong commitment to raising the profile of deregulation at the Community level, overseas posts were updated in February on deregulatory developments. Posts were requested to report on member states' current deregulation initiatives.

Libyan Sanctions

Mr. Stewart: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has had from Babcocks of Renfrew on the issue of Libyan sanctions and the export of boilers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 6 March 1995]: None.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Sickness Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what measures he is taking to combat sickness absenteeism in (a) the Public Trust Office, (b) the Public Record Office, (c) HM Land Registry and (d) his Department.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The question partly concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executives of the three agencies concerned are best placed to provide an answer. I have accordingly asked each of them to reply direct.

Absenteeism in my Department is taken seriously by managers at all levels in the organisation. All staff are issued with a handbook which explains the Department's policy on sick absence and details what will happen if poor attendance prevents an individual from giving regular and reliable service. Managers are required to tackle sick absence constructively and promptly and this includes conducting a "return to work" interview with staff after any period of sick absence. Levels of sick absence are monitored both locally and centrally and initiatives designed to tackle areas where sick absence is highest have been introduced. In particular, my Department is currently conducting research into the incidence and causes of stress in the Department and the linked problem of stress-related sick absence.

Letter from Julia C. Lomas to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 9 March 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary of the Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to you as part of the Lord Chancellor's Department's response to your parliamentary question, listed on 28 February 1995, regarding measures being taken to combat sickness absenteeism.

The Department's central guidance is available to all Public Trust Office staff. On return from sick leave, all staff are interviewed by their managers. Managers are responsible for monitoring sick absence levels, and for taking action if these are unacceptable.

I am in the process of issuing new written guidance to managers, and a comprehensive refresher training programme is to be run shortly to support this.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 9 March 1995:

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary for the Lord Chancellor's Department to reply to your recent question concerning the measures being taken by HM Registry to combat sickness absenteeism. I can provide the following information.

1. Periodic health screening is carried out to assist in identifying potential health problems and providing information on healthy living.
2. Appropriately trained line managers at all levels are involved in managing attendance. Local Personal Managers oversee the operation and effectiveness of procedures.
3. There is close liaison with the Occupational Health Service over cases of concern and the Registry's own Welfare Service play an active supportive part in the well being of staff.
4. The Registry has developed a customised Personnel Information System which provides detailed information on sickness absence and its causes. This information is used to inform line managers and to further develop the Agency's sickness absence policy.
5. All staff in the Land Registry have a personal copy of the Agency's policy on staff attendance and this is publicised on a regular basis.

I do hope that this answers the point raised with the Parliamentary Secretary but please contact me if I can be any further assistance.

Letter from Sarah Tyacke to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 8 March 1995:

I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply to your question about measures being taken to combat sickness absenteeism in the Public Record Office.

In October 1993 the Public Record Office put in place a plan of action to combat sickness absenteeism. This included:

drafting a revised sick absence policy which has now been circulated to all staff;

Personnel Management Department providing managers with monthly reports about staff whose sick absence is a cause for concern, agreeing what action should be taken and ensuring that subsequent attendance is monitored regularly and;

Statistical data on sick absence is now compiled and analysed by Personnel Management Department and this information is circulated to managers on a regular basis. This enables managers to identify and deal with problems at an early stage.

Specific action which has been taken since February 1994 is as follows:

64 staff have been asked to discuss sick absence with their manager and agree a plan of action to improve it. Their attendance is then monitored at least quarterly and further action taken if appropriate. Personnel Management Department work closely with managers throughout this process;

17 referrals have been made to the Occupational Health Service (OHS);

8 medical retirements have been requested (6 already actioned);

4 verbal warnings have been given;

1 written warning has been given; and

3 staff have been dismissed.

International Information Super-highway

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) what plans he has to ask the Law Commission to investigate the impact on British law of the international information super-highway;

(2) what efforts his Department is making to liaise with (a) the Governments of the other member states of the European Union, (b) the institutions of the European Union and (c) the American Government with regard to possible law reform as a result of the impact of the international information super-highway;

(3) what plans he has to increase the number of his officials working on the impact on British law of the international information super-highway;

(4) how many of his officials, at which grades and in what departmental groups, are engaged in research into the impact on British law of the international information super-highway;

(5) what research his Department is doing into the impact on British law that the international information super-highway is currently having and is likely to have in the future; and what plans he has to publish this research;

(6) what plans he has to introduce legislation to make changes to British law in the light of the impact on it of the international information super-highway.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I currently have no plans to ask the Law Commission to investigate the impact on British law of the international information super-highway. However, the Law Commission's business law team is taking part in examination, being conducted by the Department of Trade and Industry, as to whether formal requirements in English law would inhibit the use and effectiveness of electronic data interchange in its commercial application.

At present, my Department is not engaged in any liaison with the Governments of the other member states of the European Union, the institutions of the European Union or the American Government on the possibility of law reform as a result of the impact of the international information super-highway. No officials in my Department are currently involved in research into this issue. I have no immediate plans to change this situation, nor to introduce legislation to make changes to British law. However, any issues raised by the existence of the international information super-highway are being assessed, and discussed with other interested Departments, as the need arises.

Defamation

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to reverse the burden of proof in cases of innocent dissemination in defamation cases and when he plans to publish a Bill on this subject.

Mr. John M. Taylor: A Bill putting the defence of innocent dissemination of a statutory footing, and making the defence available to a wider category of defendants, is in an advanced state of preparation and a draft will be published very shortly. It is not proposed that the burden of proof should be reversed.

Judiciary (Performance Appraisal)

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Gower (Mr. Wardell) of 1 March, Official Report, column 572, if he intends to introduce performance appraisal for the judiciary.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Royal Commission on criminal justice recommended the creation of a formal system of performance appraisal for the judiciary. That recommendation remains under active consideration by the Lord Chancellor, who will respond in due course.

Gerry Adams

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the case of Gerry Adams of Sinn Fein and the European Court of Justice; what United Kingdom public expenditure this has entailed to date; what estimate he has made of the potential future expenditure from public funds; and in what circumstances and under whose authority public funds are allocated in respect of this case.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Legal aid has been granted to Mr. Adams in support of his application for a judicial review of the Home Secretary's decision excluding him from entering Great Britain under the prevention of terrorism Act. The matter has now been referred by the High Court to the European Court of Justice for an interpretation of the relevant European Union law. Where a reference is made by the High Court to the European Court of Justice, legal aid automatically covers work done for the European Court of Justice element of the case.

To date, a total of £9,234 has been paid on account from the legal aid fund. No estimate has been made of the final cost to legal aid, nor do I consider it appropriate to speculate as to what the final cost might be.

In dealing with his application for legal aid, Mr. Adams was assessed on the same means and merits criteria as any other applicant for legal aid, in accordance with the appropriate regulations.

Immigration

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the current waiting time for appeals to be hear against refusal of settlement visa applications from spouses and fiancees in India and Pakistan.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Statistics are not kept by the country of origin, but where parties have indicated readiness for the appeal to be heard, cases are now being listed for hearing by the immigration appellate authorities at the hearing centres as follows:

Centre	1995
Glasgow	March
Birmingham	April
Leeds	April
Manchester	April
Hatton Cross, London	June
Thanet House, London	November

In view of the current lengthy waiting times in the south-east, the chief adjudicator has indicated that when notices of hearing are sent from London, the immigration appelate authorities will offer the parties the opportunity of an earlier date at one of the regional centres, if the parties are willing to travel to that centre.

Wills

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what safeguards are available to protect a bereaved person who does not wish the deceased person's will published for security or other reasons; and what is the status of the Data Protection Act 1984 in this respect.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Under section 124 of the Supreme Court Act 1981, a will is a public document.

However, anyone may apply to a district probate registrar to prevent inspection of a will. The registrar may grant the application if, in his opinion, inspection would be undesirable or otherwise inappropriate. A record of every will administered by the probate registry is kept on a computer system; the general public do not have access to this computer system and the system is fully registered under the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mr. Bryce Taylor

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 1 March, Official Report, column 573, who is now paying Mr. Bryce Taylor's costs.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Since there are no cost implications for the legal aid fund, the question of costs is entirely a matter for the parties concerned.

Assault Compensation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received urging, and what plans he has to ensure, that when magistrates courts award sums in compensation to be paid to victims of assault by their assailants that those amounts are paid by the court and received from the assailant by them.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Representations to this effect are received from time to time. However, if compensation were paid to compensatees directly from court funds, this would create a free loan for offenders at taxpayers' expense. If offenders defaulted, it would result in a new burden on the public purse. The proposal would also remove the element of restitution from the court's sentence. We believe that it is important for offenders to be required to repay their victims.

Magistrates

Mr. Straw: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 24 February, Official Report, column 346, if he will list the current political balance of magistrates for each (a) metropolitan borough, (b) London borough and (c) non-metropolitan district in England.

Mr. John M. Taylor: This information can be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements exist to ensure the Benefits Agency treats in a confidential manner the financial information required of claimants appealing against reduced invalidity benefit on grounds of hardship; and what arrangements exist for protecting confidentiality in respect of the agency's use of a private firm to open claimants' letters containing such information.

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the Benefits Agency is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 8 March 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question regarding the confidentiality aspect of claims to Invalidity Benefit and the opening of Benefits Agency post by private sector companies.

All information received within Benefits Agency offices concerning the financial and other circumstances of customers is held in strict confidence. All Agency staff have an overall duty to protect any information that is held and to ensure it is not disclosed to anyone without the customer's consent. Any post received in connection with appeals on Invalidity Benefit entitlement will be treated in this manner.

As you may know, the Government's Competing for Quality initiative subjects public functions to competition from the private sector. As part of this initiative the Benefits Agency has market tested its accommodation and office services, which includes post opening operations. In some areas this has resulted in the Agency's post being opened by private sector contractors.

The contract specifications drawn up contain all the necessary safeguards to ensure confidentiality of information is maintained to the high standards required by the Civil Service. All staff directly involved in post opening are bound by the same stringent security and confidentiality rules. This includes each member of staff involved in post-opening being required to sign a declaration acknowledging the provisions of section 123 of the Social Security Administration Act 1992, which makes it a criminal offence to disclose personal information provided for Social Security purposes.

I am sure you will appreciate that these arrangements present many opportunities for enhanced customer service, in terms of the Agency's business as a whole.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 13 February, Official Report, column 536, how many of the invalidity benefit recipients are (a) males and (b) females; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: The information is in the table.

Number of invalidity benefit recipients in Great Britain and Wales, at a particular time, by sex

	Great Britain		Wales
Year	Males	Females	Males	Females
1979	504,000	106,000	58,000	11,000
1983	593,000	144,000	70,000	17,000
1987	754,000	213,000	93,000	29,000
1993	1,156,000	424,000	125,000	47,000

Notes:

1. The number of recipients figure is at June for 1979, and April for 1983, 1987 and 1993.
2. The Welsh 1979 figure may contain a small number of claimants not in receipt of benefit.
3. Figures based on a 1 per cent. sample of claimants, rounded to the nearest thousand.

Mortgage Interest

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was (a) the total cost of paying income support for mortgage interest in Scotland in each year since 1982–93 and (b) the total number of households in Scotland receiving income support for mortgage interest in each of these years.

Mr. Roger Evans: The available information is set out in the table.

Year	Number of households[1]	Estimated annual cost[2] £ million
1989	15,000	19.3
1990	14,000	24.6
1991	18,000	33.1
1992	19,000	32.4
1993	22,000	32.6

Notes:
[1] Figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand.
[2] Estimated annual expenditure on mortgage interest is calculated as total numbers multiplied by average weekly amount multiplied by 52.

Income support statistics annual inquiries 1989 to 1993.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 1 March, Official Report, column 623, what estimate has been made of the housing benefit payable to the 41,960 asylum seekers receiving income support in February 1994.

Mr. Roger Evans: Asylum seekers who are liable for housing costs can claim housing benefit in the normal way. They are not, however, separately identified in the statistical information gathered by local authorities. Accordingly, it is not possible to estimate the housing benefit payable to asylum seekers.

War Pensions

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of those service personnel who served in Northern Ireland are currently in receipt of a war pension.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of war widows currently in receipt of pensions qualified for payment after 14 August 1945; and how many have so qualified within the last 12 months.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Some 1,608 war widows pensions were awarded in the year ending 31 December 1994.

Child Support Agency

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will set out details of the compensation scheme available in the case of the Child Support Agency failing to take appropriate action;

(2) how many time compensation has been awarded by the Child Support Agency when they failed to take appropriate action.

Mr. Burt: The Child Support Agency may consider paying compensation under the terms of the Department of Social Security special payments arrangements. Since the CSA is a relatively new business, we are considering how those arrangements might better cover CSA cases. When these are agreed, we shall be making public the criteria under which payments for redress may be considered as we do for other agencies of the Department. In the meantime, officials will carefully consider the merits of any requests for compensation and what redress, if any, should be made.

To the end of January 1995, we have made special payments for financial redress on 34 occasions.

Sickness Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures he is taking to combat sickness absenteeism in (a) the Resettlement Agency, (b) the Benefits Agency, (c) the Contributions Agency, (d) the Child Support Agency, (e) the Information Technology Services Agency and (f) his Department.

Mr. Hague: A number of steps are being taken across the Department to manage sickness absence. Specific initiatives include: the internal publication of absence details, awareness presentations for line managers and staff, guidance on the responsibilities of line managers, tightening up the procedures for first reporting absence, return to work interviews, involving personnel branches in appropriate cases and seeking examples of best practice from other organisations. There are also various health promotion initiatives.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 9 March.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 9 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning, I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Economic Policy

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what is the Government's policy in respect of promoting political, social and economic expansion;

(2) what assessment he has made of the extent to which his goals relating to the promotion of social and economic expansion have been achieved.

The Prime Minister: The objective of the Government's economic policy is to promote sustained economic growth in order to raise living standards and create jobs. The Government are pursuing prudent fiscal and monetary policies together with supply-side measures which will continue to improve the working of the economy. This is the only way to ensure that economic recovery is sustained with low inflation.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister who will represent Her Majesty's Government at the special meeting of the members of the Basel convention in Dakar called to clear up the confusion on how to define toxic waste; and what will be their remit.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 3 March 1995]: Her Majesty's Government will send an observer.

TRANSPORT

Planning and Compensation Act 1991

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library the full text of his Department's criteria and guidelines for implementing section 62 of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 (a) pertaining to when section 62 first came into effect and (b) pertaining currently.

Mr. Watts: I have placed in the Library the guidelines and application form, which were introduced on 17 January 1992, and also the current versions of these documents, which are under review.

Sickness Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he is taking to combat sickness absenteeism in (a) Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency and (b) the Driving Standards Agency.

Mr. Norris: For a number of years DVLA has been pursuing a strategy of improving attendance through the introduction of more effective line management controls and initiatives to improve staff health and motivation. Since 1985, the average number of days per employee lost through sickness in DVLA has reduced from 16 days to the civil service average of eight days.

Sick absence in the Driving Standards Agency is currently well above the civil service average. The agency is setting up a working group to identify the reasons for this and to make proposals. In the meantime, the agency has introduced a pay scheme designed to reward staff who, through good attendance, help the agency to provide a better service to its customers.

British Rail Property (Crime)

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people were victims of crime on British Rail property in each year since 1991.

Mr. Watts: The table shows by calendar year, the total number of offences recorded on British Rail property, including ScotRail, by the British Transport police, which is the force responsible for keeping law and order on the railway.

Date	Number of offences
1991	22,186
1992	20,904
1993	20,359
1994	17,313

Road Building Projects

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all priority 1, priority 2, agreed start and reserve start road building projects currently planned or under way, giving their cost and completion dates.

Mr. Watts: The bulk of this information is contained in "Trunk Roads in England 1994 Review", a copy of which is in the Library. The new starts programme for the remainder of 1994–95 and for 1995–96 was subsequently amended by my right hon. Friend's announcement of 19 December 1994. A copy of the press release issued at the time is also in the Library.

Completion dates for schemes which are not yet under construction depend on the successful conclusion of statutory procedures and the availability of funds.

Orange Badge Holders

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements he will make to enable orange badge holders to park on double yellow lines for an indefinite amount of time when the yellow lines occupy space outside an orange badge holder's home.

Mr. Norris: I have no plans to extend the time limit for parking on yellow lines. Local authorities have powers under the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 to designate by order a parking place reserved for a disabled badge holder.

Trunk Roads Review

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the next trunk roads in England review will be produced.

Mr. Watts: There are no plans for a further review of the trunk road programme at present. The results of the last review of the programme are set out in "Trunk Roads in England 1994 Review".

Overloaded Lorries

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many convictions were secured in respect of the operation of overloaded lorries in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Vehicle Inspectorate.

I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mr. Paul Tyler, dated 9 March 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the number of convictions in respect of the operation of overloaded lorries in the last 10 years.

I do not have information for the past 10 years and it can only be provided at disproportionate cost. However, the details below show the number of successful prosecutions carried out by the Vehicle Inspectorate and the Local Authority Trading Standards Officers for the last 5 years.

Year	Number of prosecutions
1990–91	13,396
1991–92	13,295
1992–93	10,831
1993–94	9,151
1994–95[1]	8,555

[1]year to date.

If there is any further information you require, please let me know.

Marchioness

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide references for public and published statements made by him or his predecessors providing reasons for not establishing a formal investigation in to the loss of the Marchioness and lives as provided for in section 56 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1970.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 1 February 1995]: Reference to statements made by Transport Ministers are as follows:

Minister	Date	Volume/Column
1. Patrick McLoughlin	WPQ 19 January 1990	Vol. 165 Col. 443
2. Patrick McLoughlin	WPQ 12 February 1990	Vol. 167 Col. 103–04

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make a statement on his Department preparation and supervision costs in "Trunk Roads in England 1994 Review" as regards the proposed Birmingham northern relief road;

(2) how much his Department expects to spend on the compulsory purchase of land and property to make way for the proposed Birmingham northern relief road;

(3) how much his Department has spent so far on the administration of the public inquiry into the proposed Birmingham northern relief road; and how much he expects to spend by the time the inquiry is finished.

Mr. Watts: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 1 March 1995, Official Report, columns 597–98.

Auxiliary Coastguards

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what official vehicles are available to Cemaes Bay auxiliary coastguard;

(2) on how many occasions in the past 12 months the auxiliary coastguards have been forced to use their own vehicles in response to emergency calls.

Mr. Norris: These are operational matters for the Coastguard agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Harris to Ms Joan Walley, dated 9 March 1994:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent parliamentary questions as these questions deal with operational matters, for which I have responsibility as Chief Executive.

PQ 1082/94/95. The Coastal Response Team at Cemaes Bay have occasional use of coastal response vehicles.

PQ 1072/94/95. None. All Auxiliary Coastguards on enrolment agree that their private vehicles may be required for emergency purposes, should it be necessary.

M25 Link Roads

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to make a further announcement on the progress of his plans for link roads between junctions 12 and 15 of the M25; and when he intends to hold a public inquiry into the scheme.

Mr. Watts: Draft orders for the further improvement of the M25 between junctions 12 and 15 were published in April 1994. The public inquiry into the scheme was delayed to allow objectors more time to prepare their cases. An announcement will be made in due course.

Road Surfacing Costs

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the cost per kilometre of (a) porous asphalt; and (b) conventional asphalt; and what is the lifespan in each case.

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 8 March 1995:

The Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts MP, has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning the cost per kilometre of (a) porous asphalt and (b) conventional asphalt; and what is the life span in each case.

Costs of constructing roads with porous and conventional asphalt surfacings can very significantly between contracts and are influenced by geographical location, local construction details, complexity of traffic management and associated works such as drainage. There are also differences which reflect market conditions. The costs given in the following table are of surfacing materials only and are broadly indicative bearing in mind the limited use of porous asphalt. There are additional costs for porous asphalt which are not applicable to conventional asphalt. Additional drainage is needed and more frequent salting in cold weather. Further, laying the material is more difficult and requires more extensive traffic management. These additional costs are not included in the figures given and can vary widely depending on site conditions.

Approximate £ thousand/kilometre

	Porous asphalt	Conventional asphalt
Single carriageway	50–100	35–45
2 lane dual carriageway all purpose	100–200	70–100
motorway	120–220	80–110
3 lane dual carriageway all purpose	140–260	90–130
motorway	130–290	100–150
4 lane dual carriageway motorway	190–330	120–180

Porous asphalt surfaces are not suitable for use on all roads, but providing conditions are suitable, a life of over 7 years should be possible and in some cases as long as 12 years. This is in contrast to conventional asphalt surfaces where life can range from 10 to 15 years.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Probation Reform

15. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for reform of probation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I have already published proposals to reform the qualifying training of probation officers. I am today publishing revised national standards for community sentences; and will shortly be publishing a Green Paper setting out proposals for legislation to restructure community punishment. These initiatives are between them intended to ensure that the work of the probation service commands the greatest possible confidence on the part of the courts and the public.

Cost of Crime

16. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's latest estimate of the cost of crime to the British economy.

Mr. Maclean: It is not feasible to provide a meaningful total figure. Any realistic assessment would have to take full account of the personal and social damage as well as the financial costs.

Child Refugees

17. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many unaccompanied child refugees entered the United Kingdom in the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available; and what information he has about the principal ports of entry.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: A total of 357 unaccompanied children applied for asylum on arrival in 1994. Although specific information about principal ports of entry is not available, most of these applications would have been made at Heathrow.

Crime Prevention

18. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what priority he attaches to the partnership approach to crime prevention.

Mr. Maclean: Partnership is fundamental to the Government's approach to crime prevention. We all need to work together in partnership to ensure that the opportunities for crime are reduced. In September 1994, my right hon. and learned Friend launched the partnership campaign "Partners Against Crime", aimed at encouraging individual members of the public to join with the police as partners in the fight against crime.

Asylum Policy

19. Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received since 15 February expressing support for his asylum policy.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: I believe that there is widespread support for the Government's objective of determining asylum claims as quickly as possible, in the interests both of genuine refugees and of the removal of those whose claims are unfounded. The measures announced on 15 February, Official Report, columns 693-95, will contribute significantly to that objective.

Police Liaison, London

20. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the interrelationship between himself, the Police Authority for London, the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, the advisory committee and the police and community consultative groups in each of the London boroughs.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend is the police authority for the Metropolitan police district. The Metropolitan police committee will advise him in that capacity, taking into account information received from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis and his senior colleagues, from the police community consultative groups operating within the Metropolitan police district, and from other sources.

Criminal Injury Compensation

21. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he intends to take about the future organisation and level of criminal injury compensation.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given earlier this afternoon to the same question from the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Ainger).

Drugs

22. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many charges for possession of the drug crack have been brought in the Metropolitan police area; and what new initiatives he will take to deal with this threat.

Mr. Maclean: Information is not held in this form. Records are not kept of the numbers of charges for possession.

The latest available figures, supplied by the Metropolitan police, show that there were 542 recorded offences of possession of cocaine in the period October 1993 to September 1994. There are no separate records for crack. Seizures are, however, recorded separately: provisional figures show 847 crack seizures in the Metropolitan police area for 1994.

The Government's strategy for dealing with drugs misuse is currently being reviewed and a White Paper will be published in the spring. Vigorous law enforcement will continue and there will also be a new emphasis on drug education and prevention.

Fire Stations (Closure)

23. Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of local fire stations programmed for closure following the reduction in fire authority budgets.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: My right hon. and learned Friend has made no such estimate. Any fire authority wishing to reduce the operational capability of its brigade, including the number of fire stations, must seek his approval under section 19 of the Fire Services Act 1947. His practice is to grant approval only where he is satisfied that the nationally recommended minimum standards of fire cover will be maintained.

Persistent Juvenile Offenders

24. Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to help the police and courts to deal with the most persistent juvenile offenders.

Mr. Maclean: The Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 contains important new measures which will help the police and the courts to deal more effectively with young people who commit crimes. The secure training order will enable the courts to order the detention of persistent juvenile offenders for periods of between three months and one year, followed by a similar period of supervision.

Make-a-difference Initiative

25. Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the progress of the make-a-difference initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: This initiative to promote voluntary activity has made excellent progress: grants have been made to 27 local partnerships; Government Departments have prepared action plans for involving volunteers; and last week we launched a national telephone helpline to make it easier for people to find volunteering opportunities in their area. The make-a-difference team, with members from business, voluntary and public sectors, is aiming to publish a strategy on the future of volunteering in June.

Road Scheme Protests

26. Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional financial provision he plans to make for police forces in 1995 to cover the cost of protecting road schemes against protesters.

Mr. Maclean: The policing of demonstrations at road scheme sites falls within the normal law enforcement duties of the police. The costs are provided for in the same way as the costs of any other forms of policing. Police authorities will still be able to apply for special payments of grant where they face really large and exceptional demands which they could not have foreseen.

Police Funding

27. Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by what percentage police funding has risen since 1979 in real terms.

Mr. Maclean: Estimated expenditure on the police service in England and Wales has increased by 92 per cent. in real terms since 1978–79.

Sickness Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking to combat sickness absenteeism in (a) the UK Passport Agency, (b) the Prison Service and (c) the Home Office.

Mr. Howard: The Home Office has procedures in place to record and monitor absence through sickness. Steps have recently been taken to reinforce line managers' responsibilities in this area. Where levels of absence through sickness give cause for concern specialist medical advice may be sought. There is also an occupational health care programme for staff and access to the welfare service.

The UK Passport Agency has a policy on health care and absence caused by sickness which aims, where possible, to prevent absence through sickness and thereby to increase efficiency and promote the well-being of staff. This is achieved by monitoring of absence through sickness by line managers, ensuring that staff have access to counselling, an on-going health care programme, seminars/awareness training for line managers and the issuing of guidance/information to all staff.

The control of absence through sickness in the Prison Service is the responsibility of local managers, and following a report by an independent consultant, comprehensive guidance was issued to them in 1992. In addition, the service is seeking ways to enable quicker decisions to be taken on medical retirement, where that is appropriate; and various occupational health initiatives have been taken to encourage healthy practices, such as life style screening and health education seminars.

In all areas of the Home Office, absence through sickness may lead to retirement on medical grounds or action being taken under the inefficiency procedures.

Police (Complaints)

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each year since 1989 the number of complaints against the police completed in England and Wales in which racially discriminatory behaviour was alleged; how many of those were substantiated and how many were unsubstantiated; how many were informally resolved; of those that were substantiated, how many resulted in a disciplinary charge; and what was the outcome of such a charge.

Mr. Maclean: Figures for the number of complaints against the police of racially discriminatory behaviour and their outcome are set out.

Information is not collected centrally about the categories of offences leading to disciplinary proceedings.

Complaints of racially discriminatory behaviour (all police forces in England and Wales)

	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993
Substantiated	4	5	7	3	5
Unsubstantiated[1]	107	210	240	259	281
Informally resolved	67	69	79	98	96
Withdrawn	113	125	100	101	68
Total	291	409	426	461	450

[1] Including complaints dealt with by dispensation.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for (a) the Metropolitan police and (b) the rest of England and Wales the number of police complaints in each of the last five years for which records are available that were dispensed with (i) in total, (ii) because it was not reasonably practicable to complete a satisfactory investigation, (iii) because they were anonymous, (iv) because they were repetitious, (v) because they were vexatious, oppressive or otherwise an abuse of the procedures for dealing with complaints, (vi) because more than 12 months has elapsed between the incident and the making of the complaints or (vii) because the matter had already been informally resolved; and if he will list in each case the number of requests for dispensations that were (1) made and (2) refused.

Mr. Maclean: The Police Complaints Authority has kept statistics in relation to individual reasons for dispensations since 1993 only.

In 1993, in respect of all forces in England and Wales, the figures were as follows:

Reason for dispensation	Number
Incapable of meaningful investigation	6,717
Anonymous	4
Repetitious	69
Vexatious, etc.	83
Delayed	202
Total	7,075

There were also nine dispensations refused in 1993.

The total numbers of dispensations recorded by the Police Complaints Authority since 1989 which were (a) granted and (b) refused, in respect of all forces in England and Wales, are as follows:

Year	1989	1990	1991	1992
Granted	2,113	2,991	4,083	6,035
Refused	28	42	37	20

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many civil claims for police misconduct were reported to HM inspectorate of constabulary in each of the last three years for which figures are available in respect of each police force in England and Wales.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not collected by HM inspectorate of constabulary.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases in each of the last three years for which figures are available complaints against the police were investigated by an officer from another force.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of cases of complaints against the police for each of the last three years for which figures area available (a) which were mandatorily referred to the Police Complaints Authority for supervision, (b) which were referred to the authority for it to decide whether or not to supervise the investigation, (c) which the authority decided on their merits to supervise in the public interest and (d) which were referred to the authority for supervision in total.

Mr. Maclean: Sections 87 and 88 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 and the Police (Complaints) (Mandatory Referrals etc) Regulations 1985 define the type of case which must be referred or may be referred voluntarily to the Police Complaints Authority for possible supervision. The Police Complaints Authority is required by section 89 of the 1984 Act to supervise the investigation of all complaints relating to a death or serious injury. It may also supervise any other complaint or non-complaint case which is voluntarily referred to it and where it considers it in the public interest to do so. The authority may also require the referral of a complaint so that it may consider supervision.

The table shows the number of cases, including those originating from a complaint, between 1991 and 1993 (a) which were mandatorily referred to the Police Complaints Authority for supervision; (b) which were voluntarily referred; (c) which were required to be referred by the Police Complaints Authority; (d) the total cases referred; (e) the number which were mandatorily supervised by the Police Complaints Authority; and (f) which were supervised at the authority's discretion.

Mandatory referrals	4,212	4,333	3,998
Voluntary referrals	103	132	129
Referrals required by PCA	15	11	12
Total referrals	4,330	4,476	4,139
Mandatory supervision	421	420	625
Discretionary supervision	308	337	326

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many police complaints cases completed in each of the last five years for which figures are available complainants made formal representations of dissatisfaction with an investigation or its outcome.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not collected centrally.

Appeals

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each year since 1988 the number of cases referred by him to the Court of Appeal under section 17(1)(a) of the Court of Appeal Act 1968 in respect of conviction; and for each such year what was (a) the number of defendants involved, (b) the number of appeals allowed and (c) the number of appeals dismissed.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The information requested is given in the following table:

References to the Court of Appeal under section 17(1)(a) of he Criminal Appeal Act 1968 in respect of conviction—1988 to 1994

Year	Cases (defendants)	Outcome of appeal
		Allowed	Dismissed
1988	[1]2 (2)	—	1 (1)
1989	3 (6)	3 (6)	Nil
1990	7 (20)	7 (20)	Nil
1991	10 (12)	[2]10 (12)	Nil
1992	8 (11)	5 (8)	3 (3)
1993	[3]8 (9)	4 (5)	2 (2)
1994	[4]9 (12)	1 (2)	Nil

[1] One case later abandoned.
[2] Court ordered a re-trial in one case: defendant later acquitted.
[3] Two cases outstanding.
[4] Eight cases outstanding.

Royal Prerogative of Mercy

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each year since 1989 the number of cases in which the royal prerogative of mercy was exercised to grant (a) a free pardon, (b) a remission of imprisonment, (c) remission of youth custody and detention in a young offender's institution, (d) remission of detention and (e) remission of fine on grounds affecting the original conviction, in cases other than those involving road traffic offences.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The numbers of free pardons is given in the following table:

Exercises of the royal prerogative of mercy to grant a free pardon on grounds affecting the original conviction (excluding cases involving convictions for road traffic offences) 1989 to 1994

Year	Free pardons
1989	15
1990	17
1991	14
1992	4
1993	5

The royal prerogative of mercy has not been used in the other categories—which go to a person's sentence—on grounds affecting the original conviction.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each year since 1988 the number of cases in which the royal prerogative of mercy was exercised to grant (a) free pardons, including those relating to road traffic offences, (b) pardons granted on grounds affecting the original conviction, (c) pardons granted for other reasons and (d) pardons relating to traffic offences.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The information requested is given in the following table:

Exercises of the royal prerogative of mercy to grant pardons—1988 to 1994

Year	(a) Free pardons (all cases)	(b) Pardons on grounds affecting original conviction	(c) Pardons for other reasons (ie excluding (b))	(d) Pardons relating to traffic offences

1989	50	50	—	35
1990	47	47	—	30
1991	37	37	—	23
1992	19	19	—	15
1993	22	22	1	17
1994	12	12	—	9

Miscarriages of Justice (Compensation)

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total amount paid in compensation to victims of miscarriages of justice for each year since 1989–90; what was the total amount paid pursuant to the Criminal Justice Act 1988 for each such year; what was the total amount paid under the discretionary scheme for each such year; and in each year in each category what was the number of such payments.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The total amount of compensation for miscarriages of justice paid since the financial year 1989–90 is £6,244,000, including £565,733 in ex gratia awards:

	£ million
1989–90	0.285
1990–91	0.839
1991–92	1.719
1992–93	0.532
1993–94	1.506
Part year ending 31 December 1994	1.363

These totals include interim payments in cases in which the final amount of the award has yet to be determined. The information is not collated in a way which enables separate totals for ex gratia payments to be distinguished.

Agreement in principle to pay compensation was given, per calendar year, to the following numbers of individuals:

1990: 10(8)
1991: 27(2)
1992: 26(1)
1993: 9(2)
1994: 19

Figures in brackets show the number of ex gratia awards included in the totals.

Extradition

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what request he has received from Singapore requesting the extradition of (a) Mr. Anthony Hawes, (b) Mr. Andrew Frazer, (c) Mr. Simon Jones, (d) Mr. Ian Douglas, (e) Mr. Gordon Bowser, (f) Mr. Peter Baring, (g) Mr. Andrew Tuckey, (h) Mr. Ron Baker and (i) Mr. Peter Norris; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: No such request has been received.

Firearms

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has concerning the number of non-functioning deactivated firearms which are currently held in the United Kingdom; what licences are required for such firearms; on how many occasions in each of the last five years for which figures are available such firearms have been used in the course of the perpetration of crimes; what sentences are provided by law for the use of such firearms; what plans he has to review the law in this area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Firearms deactivated in accordance with the provisions set out in section 8 of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988 fall outside the scope of firearms controls and do not therefore require a firearms certificate. Figures are not available about the number of deactivated firearms of the occasions on which such weapons have been used. The use of a firearm or imitation firearm in the furtherance of crime carries a maximum penalty of life imprisonment.

In the light of concerns that some deactivated firearms have been illegally restored to working order and subsequently used in crime, the standards to which guns are deactivated have been reviewed and more stringent specifications will be introduced shortly.

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the existing law preventing the sale to the public or easy access by the public to non-lethal weapons, with particular reference to Air Taser and other stun guns.

Mr. Maclean: Air Taser and other stun guns are classed as prohibited weapons under section 5(1)(b) of the Firearms Act 1968, as amended. Their possession, acquisition, manufacture, sale or transfer is prohibited without the authority of the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State does not grant authority to individual members of the public to possess such weapons. Possession of a prohibited weapon without authority is an offence for which the maximum penalty is 10 years, imprisonment or an unlimited fine or both. I am satisfied that the existing law in this area is adequate.

Interception of Communications

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about GCHQ staff at Menwith Hill station intercepting domestic and international telephone calls.

Mr. Howard: None.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many warrants he has issued in each year since 1992, to date, under the Interception of Communications Act 1985; what duration of interception each warrant specified; and how many warrants are in force at present.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the annexes to the reports of the Interception of Communications Commissioner for 1992 and 1993, Cm 2173 and Cm 2522, copies of which are in the Library. Under section 4 of the Interception of Communications Act 1985, a warrant is issued for a period of two months. It may lapse at the end of that period or it may be cancelled before the two months have elapsed or it may be renewed for a further period. It is not the Government's practice to publish figures for warrants in force at particular times other than in the commissioner's reports.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people seeking asylum in Britain have applied for (a) a writ of habeas corpus and (b) a judicial review of their case while in detention in the last 12 months.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: During the 12 months to 31 January 1995, 221 asylum applicants sought judicial review of their cases. No statistics of asylum applicants seeking a writ of habeas corpus are maintained. Separate statistics are also not maintained of the numbers of asylum applicants seeking judicial review of their cases while in detention.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, how many people seeking asylum in 1993–94 absconded.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The records do not distinguish between asylum seekers and others who absconded from detention in 1993 and 1994 and this information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Information on the number of asylum seekers who failed to comply with the terms on which they were granted temporary admission in 1993 is not available. However, a special exercise relating to 1994 identified 677 people, who had claimed asylum at some stage, as having failed to comply with their terms of temporary admission.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many (a) Sri Lankan and (b) Turkish nationals applied for asylum status in each year since 1991; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many asylum seekers were deported in each year since 1991; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many (a) Sri Lankan and (b) Turkish asylum seekers were deported in each year since 1991; and if he will make a statement;

(4) how many people applied for asylum status in each year since 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: In 1994, a total of 32,830 applications for asylum were received in the United Kingdom. Of these, 2,350 were from Sri Lankan nationals and 2,045 from Turkish nationals.

The available figures for departures relating to those refused asylum or exceptional leave to remain in the country are for those removed or who embarked voluntarily after deportation or illegal entry action had commenced against them. Out of an estimated total of 2,110 departures in 1994, 130 were Turkish nationals and 45 were Sri Lankan nationals.

Information on applications for asylum for 1993 and earlier years is published in table 2.2 of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Asylum Statistics United Kingdom 1993", issue 17/94. Information on removals and voluntary departures is published in table 9.1 of the same publication. Information on removals prior to 1992 is not available. A copy of this publication is available in the Library.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people have (a) applied for and (b) been accepted for asylum in the United Kingdom in the past 12 months;

(2) how many people applying for asylum in the United Kingdom in 1994–95 were given exceptional leave to remain;

(3) how many people (a) have sought and (b) were granted asylum in the United kingdom in 1994–95.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: During 1994, 32,830 applications for asylum, excluding dependants, were received in the United Kingdom. Some 20,990 decisions on asylum applications were taken during the year, of which 825 cases were granted asylum and 3,660 were refused asylum but granted exceptional leave to remain.

The latest month for which data are available is January 1995. During this period, 3,570 applications for asylum were received and 2,450 applications were decided. Of these decisions, 130 cases were granted asylum and 460 cases were refused asylum but granted exceptional leave to remain.

Settlement Visas

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many wives have applied from (a) India and (b) Pakistan for settlement visas to join their husbands in the United Kingdom in each of the last three years; and how many have been (i) granted and (ii) refused;

(2) how many husbands have applied from (a) India and (b) Pakistan for settlement visas to join their wives in each of the last three years; and how many have been (i) granted and (ii) refused.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The information is given in the table.

Applications for entry clearance for settlement in the United Kingdom made by spouses in India and Pakistan, 1992–1994

Number of persons

	Wives			Husbands
	1992	1993	1994	1992	1993	1994

[1] Including applications subsequently withdrawn or lapsed.
[2] Granted initially or on appeal.
[3] Applications granted may include applications received in the previous year.

Law Enforcement Officers

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if members of the Renseignements Généraux are authorised or need authorisation to work in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: Law enforcement officers representing foreign Goverments working in the United Kingdom must observe guidance issued by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. A copy of the guidance, known as the "Whitehall Guidelines", has been placed in the Library.

Prisons (Drugs)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many drug and related finds by type of drug were made in women's gaols in England and Wales in each year since 1990.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 9 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about how many drug and related finds by type of drug were made in women's jails in England and Wales in each year since 1990.

Information drug finds was not recorded centrally until 25 September 1990.

The table below lists the drug and related finds in women's jails for the calendar years 1991, 1992, 1993 and 1994.

Items	1991	1992	1993	1994
Heroin	5	4	10	36
Cocaine	4	6	4	6
LSD	0	0	5	2
Amphetamines	1	0	3	2
Barbiturates	0	0	4	3
Cannabis	32	27	44	58
Cannabis Plant	4	1	4	11
Other	3	9	10	23
Authentic syringe	3	10	23	21
Improvised syringe	0	0	0	0
Authentic needle	0	0	2	3
Improvised needle	0	0	0	0
Pipe	1	0	1	0
Roach	0	0	2	2
Total	53	57	112	167

It should be noted that increases in the numbers of finds may reflect more effective searching, as a result of the priority being given to the control of drugs, and are not necessarily an indication that there has been a corresponding increase in the presence of drugs.

North East London Probation Service

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the effect of the November 1993 budget statement on the budget of the North East London robation service;

(2) what will be the impact of the November 1994 budget statement on the North East London probation service.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Gerrard) on 6 March, Official Report, column 30.

Non-governmental Agencies

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what non-governmental agencies are funded by the Government to work in crime prevention; and what initiatives they are undertaking.

Mr. Maclean: The Government provide a contribution to the core costs of Crime Concern, whose main objectives are to establish local crime reduction schemes and to develop new approaches to crime prevention. The Government have also contracted Crime Concern, the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders and the Society of Voluntary Associates to manage safer cities projects in 30 towns in England and Wales. The projects in turn provide grants for local crime prevention schemes. In addition, we have made extra funds available in 1994–95 for local partnerships which wish to install closed circuit television schemes in their areas as a crime prevention measure.

Prisons

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the staffing ratio of (a) privately managed prisons and (b) publicly operated prisons.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 9 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the staffing ratio in both privately managed prisons and publicly operated prisons.

On 31 January 1995, the staff:inmate ratio for privately managed prisons was 1:2.43. The staff figure is based on the number of prisoner custody officers employed, which equate to the three officer grades in publicly operated prisons. The inmate figure is the number held in these prisons at the end of January.

On 31 January 1995 the staff:inmate ratio for publicly managed prisons was 1:2.0. The staff figure is based on the officer, senior officer and principal officer grades and includes specialist staff. The inmate figure is the total inmate population as at 31 January 1995, excluding those held in police cells and privately managed prisons.

The ratio for publicly managed prisons is affected by the inclusion of dispersal prisons and other prisons with specialist functions which have a relatively high staff:inmate ratio, as well as accommodation being out of use for refurbishment. The private sector does not include prisons in this category, and is not currently undergoing refurbishment.

Football Pools and Lotteries

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to guarantee the continued viability of the football pools and society and local lotteries.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 7 March 1995]: The Government have made a number of changes to the law to remove unnecessary restrictions on football pools and lotteries and more changes are on the way.

A number of measures benefiting football pools were introduced in November 1994, when part IV of the National Lottery etc. Act 1993 came into force. The age limit for participation was reduced from 18 to 16; the use of premises for the collection of coupons and stakes were permitted; and roll-over of prize money was permitted in certain circumstances.

More recently, the Government have invited the broadcasting authorities to revise their advertising codes so as to permit broadcast advertising of the pools. In addition, we will shortly be issuing a consultation paper on gaming machines and betting offices which will include a proposal to allow betting offices to pay winnings on football pools coupons and to handle "spot the ball" coupons. Depending on the outcome of the consultation, the changes will be put into law later this year by an order made under the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994.

I am currently considering what scope there is for further deregulatory measures.

Ashford (Middlesex) Remand Centre

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future of the site of the former Ashford (Middlesex) remand centre.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 7 March 1995]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. David Wilshire, dated 9 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the future of the site of the former Ashford (Middlesex) Remand Centre.

No decisions have yet been taken regarding the future of this site. The Prison Service's estate strategy recognises a need for additional accommodation by the end of the century and sites are still being sought for some of the new prisons announced by the Home Secretary in 1993. Current assessments of future needs indicate that Ashford is not an ideal location for meeting future population pressures. Other sites are being sought but Ashford may be considered if more suitable locations are not available.

WALES

Public Appointments

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the dates on which he intends to publish advertisements inviting applications to fill the vacancies on (a) the Arts Council of Wales, (b) the Sports Council of Wales, (c) the Wales tourist board, (d) the Wales Youth Agency, (e) the Welsh Development Agency, (f) the Glan Hafren NHS trust, (g) the Powys Health Care NHS trust, (h) the Morriston Hospital NHS trust and (i) Swansea NHS trust.

Mr. Redwood: I am keen to keep the boards of non-departmental public bodies and health bodies at the minimum number which is consistent with efficient management. Where there are vacancies to be filled, candidates are drawn from a variety of sources. These sources include the Welsh Office register of candidates for public appointment and, in some cases, specific advertisements. Recent health trust chairmanships were advertised.

Lead Piping

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he is taking to encourage the replacement of lead piping in drinking water supplies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Water companies must comply with the requirements relating to lead set in the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989—SI 1989 No. 1147. Among other relevant provisions, the regulations require water companies to replace their part of a lead service pipe when requested to do so in writing by a consumer intending to remove his or her part of the pipe.

The Government fund the mandatory home renovation grant system available from local authorities and which may be used for lead pipe replacement. Mandatory home renovation grants are available to bring properties up to the statutory fitness standard, which includes the provision of an adequate piped supply of wholesome water: it is for local authorities to determine applications and decide whether an individual property meets this standard. Minor works assistance, which is always discretionary, may be available to those home owners in receipt of an income-related benefit, for small but essential repairs to their houses. Dwr Cymru Welsh Water has a grant scheme to help any of its customers wishing to replace lead plumbing and, when this is done, also undertakes to replace its communication pipe.

Cadw

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes in the priorities and approach of Cadw will be made following the appointment of a new chief executive.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend's priorities for Cadw will be set out in the Cadw corporate plan.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the allocation of European regional development fund to each of the objective 2 and 5(b) regions in Wales for the current programming period.

Mr. Redwood: The ERDF allocations for the industrial south Wales and rural Wales programme areas are £111.2 million over 1994 to 1996 and £89.9 million over 1994 to 1999 respectively.

Public Transport

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what initiatives his Department is pursuing to increase the use of public transport in Wales, and if he will make a statement;

(2) what new initiatives his Department is pursuing to improve public transport in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The provision of good quality public transport services is a matter for the transport industries. County councils have a duty to supplement services where they identify a need. The Welsh Office assists by means of the bus priority scheme. Privatisation of the railways will provide more opportunities for improvements in that sector.

Through Ticketing

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with colleagues in the Department of Transport to discuss future ticketing arrangements for rail services in Wales and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Rail Regulator and Ministers are committed to continuing easy access to through ticketing for passengers. The regulator has recently consulted widely on this subject and is considering the representations he has received.

Railways

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new proposals he has to improve rail communications in Wales, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The development of rail communications is a matter for the railway industry. The Government's plan to transfer the railways to the private sector provides the best opportunities for improving rail services in Wales.

Rail Freight

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives his Department is pursuing to increase the use of railways in Wales for the transportation of freight; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Publicity will soon be given in Wales to the availability of enhanced grants to attract more freight on to the railways. The Welsh Development Agency has also been asked to consider the provision of rail freight connections at industrial estates in Wales.

Sickness Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he is taking to combat sickness absenteeism in (a) Cadw and (b) the Welsh Office.

Mr. Redwood: In addition to programmes to promote good health, Cadw and the Welsh Office have well-established procedures applying to all staff and their managers, for reporting and monitoring sickness absence, so that potential problems can be identified and addressed at an early stage. In appropriate cases, the advice of the civil service occupational health service is sought.

Cable Franchises

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in what parts of north Wales he expects cabling to take place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The Independent Television Commission has responsibility under the Broadcasting Act 1990 for administering the local delivery franchising process. The ITC is considering franchises in Wales in response to expressions of interest already received, but would welcome further approaches from companies interested in providing services in any currently unfranchised areas in Wales.

Vehicle Spot Checks

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in what location in Wales, he proposed to make roadside spot checks concerning atmospheric pollution caused by motor vehicles and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Staff from the Department of Transport's Vehicle Inspectorate will be carrying out roadside spot checks of vehicle emissions at various cities and towns nationwide, including Wales, over the coming weeks. There will be no advance warning of specific locations.

Optical Fibres

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next proposes to visit the optical fibres production centre on Deeside industrial park.

Mr. Redwood: I visited Optical Fibres Ltd. on the Deeside industrial park last October. I have no plans to do so again in the near future.

Optical Fibres is a world leader in the manufacture of fibre optic cables and is an excellent example of a Wales-based company at the forefront of the multimedia revolution.

Unemployment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he is taking to reduce unemployment in Clwyd; and what (a) job creation schemes and (b) training schemes he (i) has initiated in the last five years and (ii) will initiate.

Mr. Redwood: Unemployment in Clwyd, as elsewhere in Wales, is falling as the recovery proceeds. In the past five years, the strategic development scheme has been initiated by the Welsh Office while the Welsh Development Agency has participated in a number of regeneration schemes with the local authorities in the area. For 1994–95 and 1995–96, nearly £11 million has been allocated under the strategic development scheme to projects to promote economic development and job creation in Clwyd. The WDA's contribution to the urban and rural regeneration initiatives in which it is involved will amount to around £4 million in 1994–95.

Over the past five years, the North East Wales training and enterprise council has provide a wide range of services to help unemployed people back to work.

Significant measures introduced in the last five years include modern engineering apprenticeships and youth credits.

In 1995–96, modern apprenticeships will be supported in other occupational sectors and a new programme of accelerated modern apprenticeships will be aimed primarily at 18 and 19-year-old college leavers.

Regional selective assistance continues to make a significant contribution to creating and safeguarding jobs in Clwyd. Over the past five years, over 150 offers have been accepted which are forecast to create or safeguard almost 11,000 jobs.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how he proposes to tackle long-term unemployment in Alyn and Deeside.

Mr. Redwood: Long-term unemployment, like unemployment generally, is falling as the recovery proceeds. A number of specific measures are in place to assist people who have been unemployed for more than a year to get back to work. These include training for work and restart.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to get people aged 25 years and under into work and out of long-term unemployment.

Mr. Redwood: A wide range of support is available to unemployed people under the age of 25. This includes training and practical help in finding work. All 16 and 17-year-olds who are not in full-time education or employment are guaranteed the offer of a suitable youth training place. Recent surveys have shown that 71 per cent. of young people who completed their training go into jobs or further education and training. Training opportunities for young people are being extended through modern apprenticeships and accelerated apprenticeships. Priority for recruitment under the training for work programme is now given to young people under the age of 25 who have never worked. Finally, the Employment Service offers a range of opportunities to help unemployed people into work including client advice, community action, job interview guarantee, jobclubs and work trials.

Drugaid

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had concerning the grant aiding of the 24-hour helpline for drug addiction problems run by Drugaid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: In October 1994, Drugaid was informed of the Government's proposal to establish a national HIV/AIDS and drugs telephone advice and information helpline from 1 April 1995, covering England, Scotland and Wales. Drugaid was invited to tender for the contract, and did so as part of a consortium. The contract was awarded to Network Scotland.

From 1 April, Network Scotland will provide an integrated 24-hour freephone English and Welsh language HIV/AIDS and drug helpline, which will refer users of the service to the appropriate local agencies.

It would be inappropriate for my Department to continue to support a Welsh helpline which would duplicate work undertaken nationally.

HEALTH

Nursing Homes

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many elderly people in registered nursing homes have paid the full cost of their care in each year since 1990.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Private Psychiatric Hospitals

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received regarding the standards of care at private psychiatric hospitals.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received regarding the standards of care in private psychiatric hospitals; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Arrangements for monitoring the standards of care given to national health service patients in private psychiatric hospitals are agreed between health authorities and NHS trusts and the private hospitals as part of the contracting process. Private psychiatric hospitals are subject to registration and inspection by the local health authority under the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Electro-convulsive Therapy

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received (a) about and (b) calling for the banning of the use of electro-convulsive therapy on children under the age of 16 years.

Mr. Bowis: We have received some such representations. The Royal College of Psychiatrists has advised us that it has updated its guidance on the use of electro-convulsive therapy. This guidance includes a series of recommendations on the use of electro-convulsive therapy in the treatment of young people.

Pensioners' Nursing Care

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pensioners have had to sell their homes to pay for their nursing care in the latest available year; and what percentage of them could have remained in day or respite care.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Sir A. Bowden) on 14 February, Official Report, column 642.

Cycling

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will issue a consultation document on the work of the physical activity task force; and if the consultation process will reflect her recent statements on the health benefits of cycling by targeting cycling as a widely accessible form of exercise.

Mr. Sackville: No decisions have yet been taken on whether to issue a consultation document based on the work of "The Health of the Nation" physical activity task force, but I shall continue to endorse the health benefits of cycling.

Minimal Access Surgery

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received regarding the adequacy of training for doctors using minimal access surgery.

Mr. Sackville: We have received a number of letters concerning training issues associated with minimal access surgery. The Department of Health and the Wolfson Foundation have provided funds to establish two national training centres in London and Leeds. The two centres offer a range of training courses in addition to those already well established in the national health service.

Epilepsy

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of NHS medicines prescribed for people with epilepsy was licensed (a) within the last five years, (b) more than five years ago, (c) more than 10 years and (d) more than 15 years ago.

Mr. Sackville: Records from the Medicines Control Agency do not relate specifically to national health service medicines. However, records show that there are currently 215 products licensed for prescription to people with epilepsy.

Then number of products licensed for epilepsy in the periods are:

(a) within the last five years—1991 to 1995: 96
(b) more than five years ago—1985 to 1990: 90
(c) more than 10 years ago—1979 to 1984: 41
(d) more than 15 years ago—1973 to 1978: 36

It is not possible to match this information on licensing with NHS prescriptions.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of NHS medicine prescribed for people with epilepsy is prescribed by its generic name.

Mr. Malone: The percentage of drugs dispensed in the family health services authorities in England in 1993 and prescribed by generic name for the British national formulary section "Antiepileptics", chapter 4.8, was 45.8 per cent.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost to the NHS of providing medicines to people with epilepsy in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Malone: The available information is shown in the table.

Net ingredient cost of the British National Formulary therapeutic group Antiepileptics (Chapter 4.8), 1989–1993
England

£ million

Antiepileptics	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993
Net ingredient cost	19.0	21.6	26.0	31.0	36.3

1. The net ingredient cost refers to the cost of the drug before discounts and does not include any dispensing costs or fees.
2. The data for 1989 and 1990 are not consistent with data from 1991 onwards. Figures for 1989 and 1990 are based on a sample of 1 in 200 prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors only. Figures from 1991 cover all prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists, appliance contractors, dispensing doctors and prescriptions submitted by prescribing doctors for items personally administered.

Wirral Hospital Trust

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has had with the Wirral hospital trust regarding the proposal to introduce generic worker grades, nurse restructuring and ward manager posts; if she approves of such changes; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: National health service trusts are responsible for managing their own affairs, using the resources available to them to provide high-quality cost effective health services. Their freedom to determine the pay and conditions of their own staff is an important part of making services more responsive to local needs.

Market Testing

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what bids have been received from members of staff of (a) the North Yorkshire regional health authority, (b) the Northern regional health authority and (c) the Yorkshire regional health authority for a buy-out of specific services being market tested; and with what result.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for Northern and Yorkshire regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contract John Greetham, chairman of the authority, for further details.

Barnet Health Authority

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her oral statement of 20 February, Official Report, column 40, regarding further investment in primary care initiatives of £85 million in London, if she will list the amount Barnet health authority will receive, the initiatives that will be funded in Barnet and whether any of these funds will be deployed in the area covered by the Edgware general hospital.

Mr. Malone: The additional £85 million for primary care initiatives in 1995–96 is targeted at health districts in the London initiative zone. Barnet is not included in the London initiative zone.

Filoviruses

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies have been carried out into human health risks associated with Ebola and Marburg viruses.

Mr. Sackville: Some limited studies of transmission and seroprevalence have been undertaken where cases have occurred in Africa. Responses to infection with Ebola, Marburg and other filoviruses have been studied in primates and cross protection studies using other filoviruses in animal models have also been undertaken. Improved diagnostic tests are currently under development.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what contingency plans are available in the event of an outbreak of Ebola or Marburg viruses in the United Kingdom;

(2) what facilities are available to quarantine persons potentially infected with Ebola and Marburg viruses.

Mr. Sackville: There are no special contingency plans to deal with an outbreak of Ebola or Marburg viruses. These viruses have shown very limited potential for spread outside endemic areas. There are powers available to local authorities in the Public Health (Control of Disease) Act 1984 over people, premises and property to control the spread of communicable disease. We do continue to take a cautious approach and recommend strict precautions for personnel dealing with definite or suspected cases of viral haemorrhagic fever to prevent any possibility of spread. The Department of Health funds high security infectious disease units for the treatment of patients with viral haemorrhagic fever, although no case has been seen in the United Kingdom for about 10 years. These viruses appear to have a limited capacity for spread within the human population and the need for a vaccine for use in the UK has not been established.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions have taken place with German and American health agencies relating to outbreaks of filovirus infection in these countries.

Mr. Sackville: There have been no recent discussions with any overseas Governments on filovirus infections. The outbreak in Germany occurred in 1967 and the outbreak in the United States of America occurred in 1989.

Local Authority Homes

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many residential places for the elderly were available in local authority homes in England in each year since 1990.

Mr. Bowis: The information is shown in the table.

Number of places in local authority homes primarily for elderly people, England

As at 31 March	Number of residential places
1990	103,600
1991	96,100
1992	85,000
1993	75,400
1994	67,200

The decrease in number of local authority homes in part reflects the transfer by local authorities of the management and ownership of local authority homes to the independent sector.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has approved the conclusions of the study commissioned by the London ambulance service from Messrs. ORH, health consultants, concerning the resources received by that service in order to reach or maintain the patients charter standards and for ambulance response times.

Mr. Sackville: The report commissioned from ORH health consultants is a matter for the London ambulance service and the South Thames regional health authority.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to paragraph 7.2 of the evidence presented by her Department to the Health Committee on 2 March, in respect of the London ambulance service, what operational advantage she expects to arrive from transfers of the funding of that service from the regional health authority to district health authorities in their areas; and if she will give the number of districts so concerned.

Mr. Sackville: The delegation of funding for contracts for accident and emergency services with the London ambulance service from regional to district health authority level will ensure that the authorities concerned are fully involved in the process of specifying, negotiating and agreeing contracts with the London ambulance service and monitoring performance against those contracts. The 16 authorities will be represented for contracting purposes by a consortium of four lead purchasers. The consequent reduction in regional administrative costs will help to release funds for investment in direct patient care.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action was taken in her Department (a) by Ministers, (b) by the ambulance adviser to the Department of Health and (c) by the ambulance policy adviser group subsequent to the receipt of the petition of the House presented on 7 December 1990 concerning the continuing problems of the London ambulance service.

Mr. Sackville: At the time the South West Thames regional health authority was responsible for running the London ambulance service. The South Thames regional health authority is now responsible for the LAS and it, not my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and her Department, has day-to-day responsibility for the management of the LAS.

We have provided a real terms increase of funding for the LAS each year. In addition, this year we have provided an extra £14.8 million to enable it to purchase an extra 180 ambulances and recruit 240 extra front-line staff. The Wells report identified a number of short, medium and long-term objectives for the LAS which it needs to achieve in order to provide the service our capital city needs.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will obtain and publish the periods and relevant dates when the activation time for emergency ambulances dispatched from the headquarters of the London ambulance service exceeded (a) 10, (b) 15, (c) 20, (d) 30 minutes and (e) each further multiple of 10 minutes.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Eastleigh (Mr. Chidgey) on 25 January Official Report, columns 251–52.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the system of computer-aided dispatch placed in service by the London ambulance service on 26 October 1992 was appraised or approved by her ambulance policy advisory group or ambulance adviser.

Mr. Sackville: No. It is not for the Department's ambulance policy advisory group or ambulance adviser to intervene in individual ambulance services' operational decision-making processes.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action was taken by her Department during 1991–92 consequent on the gradual deterioration in service of the London ambulance service quoted in her evidence on the Health Committee on 2 March.

Mr. Sackville: During 1991–92 the Department monitored the performance of the London ambulance service through reports from, and meetings with, the then South West Thames regional health authority, which was responsible for the direct management of the LAS.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what ministerial statements concerning the London ambulance service have been made since 1990 which have drawn on information or advice received from (a) her ambulance adviser and (b) the ambulance policy advisory group.

Mr. Sackville: All ministerial statements concerning ambulance services draw directly or indirectly on advice received from the ambulance adviser or the ambulance policy advisory group.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates she has made of the number of people suffering from Alzheimer's disease aged (a) 65 years and over or (b) under 65 years in (i) England and (ii) Wales; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 20 December 1994, Official Report, column 1148.

Ambulance Services Departmental Adviser

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will name the person holding the post of departmental adviser on ambulance services as the member of her ambulance policy group mentioned in the written evidence presented to the Health Committee on 2 March who have served in these capacities since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: The post of ambulance adviser to the Department of Health has been filled as follows:

1984–1991: Mr. Peter Hunt

1991–1994: Mr. Michael Willis

1994–: Mr. Gron Roberts

The ambulance policy advisory group met for the first time in January 1992.

Personal Social Services

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been given to certain directors of social services regarding the implications of local government reorganisation for personal social services; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: None.

The social services inspectorate has been or will be in contact with specific authorities once the individual structural orders have been made. The SSI will be able to offer appropriate advice to those authorities on the implications of local government changes for personal social services. We expect to issue general guidance to all authorities later this year.

NHS trusts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many non-executive directors of NHS trusts have been paid in excess of £3,000 for two attendances.

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Abortions

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has concerning the numbers of (a) deaths, (b) serious medical complications arising following (i) legal abortions and (ii) illegal abortions performed upon women from (1) England and Wales, (2) Scotland and (3) Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested for legal abortions is given in the tables. Data for 1993 are not yet available for Great Britain. Information for illegal abortions is not available.

Table 1: Number of deaths following legal abortions performed in Great Britain to residents of United Kingdom from 1984 to 1992

	Country of residence
	England and Wales	Scotland	Northern Ireland
1985	1	0	0
1986	0	0	0
1987	1	0	0
1988	1	0	0
1989	1	0	0
1990	1	0	0

Table 2: Number of complications[1] following legal abortions performed in Great Britain[2] to residents of United Kingdom 1984–1992

	Country of residence
	England and Wales	Scotland	Northern Ireland
1984	893	96	1
1985	875	117	0
1986	796	108	0
1987	897	98	2
1988	735	111	2
1989	621	82	0
1990	658	103	2
1991	641	78	2
1992	695	63	3

[1] These figures represent the number of complications mentioned rather than the number of operations. It is not possible to distinguish the seriousness of the complications.

[2] Information on abortions performed in Scotland is based on hospital in-patient discharges. Data are given only for residents of Scotland as it is not possible to separate the remaining data by individual country of residence.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bananas

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is his assessment of the proportion of the cost benefit of the EU banana policy which accrues to banana producers; and if he will identify where the rest of the benefit goes;

(2) what estimate he has made of the additional costs of banana purchases to United Kingdom consumers in consequence of the EU banana policy; and what estimate he has made of the impact on the consumer prices in other EC nations;

(3) when he received the World bank report on the operation of the EU banana policy; and if he will make a statement outlining his views of its conclusions and also the power available to the United Kingdom Government to take any initiative on efficiency of use Community funds and the prices charged to the general public.

Mr. Jack [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1995, c. 361.]: I am now able to provide the following assessment of the recent report published under World bank auspices under the title "EU Bananarama III". This is the work of an economist now based in Australia who formerly worked for the World bank. It does not necessarily reflect the bank's views.

The findings in the report are based on economic modelling, not on an analysis of market data since the EU regime was introduced. The assumptions underlying the model clearly have a marked influence on the results found. In our view, they do not fully reflect economic and political realities, in particular the obligations which the EU has undertaken under the Lomé convention on maintaining access for African, Caribbean and Pacific bananas to the EU market.

The consumer cost of the regime is obviously partly offset by the taxpayer benefit in the form of revenues from the customs tariff. The remainder of the benefits of the EU regime go to traders holding licences to import dollar bananas and, now the framework agreement with Colombia, Costa Rica, Nicaragua and Venezuela is in force, to producers in those countries.

Although the assumptions on which the calculations are based are not entirely clear, I am satisfied that the estimated consumer costs of the regime are overstated while the benefits to the ACP are understated, especially in the short term. As to consumer costs, the calculation appears to be based on a comparison with consumer costs in markets closer to the main sources of supply where retailing costs are lower. In addition, the estimate of ACP producer benefits assumes that, in the absence of the trading advantages offered by the EU regime, ACP countries would either continue to export the same volume of bananas as before, albeit at lower prices, or would benefit from their resources being switched out of banana production into more productive uses. In the case of the Windward Islands, whose economies are particularly dependent on bananas, viable alternative export crops offering comparable export opportunities and employment potential have not so far been identified, despite the effort which has gone into agricultural diversification in recent years. Were access for bananas to the EU market to be cut back, there would be immediate social and economic dislocation in the Caribbean and increased social costs.

Since the EU banana regime came into force in July 1993, retail prices in the United Kingdom have fallen. Indeed, in 1994, they were at their lowest level for nearly a decade. French consumers also now pay less for their bananas. In Germany, the only other major member state market on which we have full price information, consumers pay significantly more. This results in part from the application of the common customs tariff. Prior to July 1993, Germany benefited from a special derogation from EU rules enabling it to import bananas free of all duties. This could clearly not be continued once the single market regime was in place.

The economic prescription put forward in "Bananarama III" of free trade in bananas imported into the EU with aid for disadvantaged ACP producers would result in savings for EU consumers, particularly in the short term, but extra costs to the EU taxpayer.

While recognising the need for ACP producers to continue to improve their competitiveness through restructuring and some diversification, the Government remain confident that the EU bananas regime successfully reconciles the requirements of the single market and the need for adequate supplies of good-quality bananas to our consumers with our long-standing commitments to the ACP producers to promote access to the EU market.

Bovine Offals

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what dates the new rules for requiring separate vehicles for the carrying of specified bovine offals were debated by Parliament and introduced by his Department.

Mrs. Browning: A statutory instrument will be laid shortly introducing a requirement for a specific dye to be used to identify specified bovine offals. The Government are still considering other proposals concerning the collection and disposal of specified bovine offals.

Nitrate Vulnerable Zones

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to publish the results of the consultation on his proposals on nitrate vulnerable zones.

Mr. Jack: There have been over 500 responses to the consultation document on the designation of nitrate vulnerable zones in England and Wales. These have raised many issues requiring detailed technical assessment. The Government hope to be able to publish their response to the consultation, including the proposed amendments to boundaries, in about a month's time.

Permanent Secretaries

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which permanent secretaries have left his Department's employment in the last five years; and which public positions they have been appointed to subsequently.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 8 March 1995]: The previous permanent secretary retired in February 1993. He has subsequently been appointed chairman of the Residuary Milk Marketing Board.

Food Balance of Trade

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the balance of trade in food in each year since 1985.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 6 March 1995]: Imports and exports of food, feed and drink as recorded in the overseas trade statistics in each year since 1985 are shown in the table below. There has been a much bigger increase in exports than in imports since 1985. This has served to limit the increase in the difference between them—the crude trade gap—which has fallen by 22 per cent. in real terms.

Year	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993	Percentage change 1985–1993
Imports	9,482	10,070	10,276	10,602	11,420	12,298	12,262	13,406	14,105	+49
Exports	4,430	5,038	5,166	4,909	5,886	6,352	6,827	7,521	8,215	+85

Note:
[1] Because of differences in valuation principles, the crude trade gap overstates the contribution of food, feed and drink to the deficit on visible trade in the balance of payment statistics by about 15 per cent.

Chicken Feed

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether chickens may be fed (a) meat, (b) kitchen scraps or (c) worms.

Mrs. Browning: Chickens may be fed meat or kitchen scraps provided they are processed in accordance with the requirements of the Diseases of Animals (Waste Food) Order 1973, as amended. There are no restrictions on the feeding of worms to chickens.

Salmonella in Poultry (Danish Controls)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reports have been provided by the British embassy in Copenhagen on the Danish regime for monitoring and controlling salmonella in poultry, so as to enable him to make comparisons with the United Kingdom's regime.

Mrs. Browning: The embassy in Copenhagen has provided the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food with details of the measures taken by Denmark to monitor and control salmonella in poultry. The UK has also been supplied with information on Danish controls in the EU Standing Veterinary Committee.

Sheep Quota

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many applications were received, by each region, for sheep quota from category 3(c) of the 1993 national reserve; and how many were assessed as eligible for each region.

Mr. Jack: The table sets out the information requested for each of the Ministry's administrative regions:

	Category (c) applications received	Assessed as eligible
Anglia	142	0
East Midlands	205	7
North East	243	50
Northern	650	161
North Mercia	136	30
South East	241	0
South Mercia	224	7
South West	507	64
Wessex	212	15
Total	2,560	334

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the cost of the common agricultural policy to UK taxpayers and consumers.

Mr. Waldegrave: On the basis of OECD analysis of the total cost of agricultural support within the EU, I estimate that the cost of the common agricultural policy to UK taxpayers and consumers is about £4 per person per week, if world prices are judged to be the same in the absence of the CAP. In practice, removal of agricultural support would reduce agricultural production and raise world prices. In this respect, that figure is therefore likely to overstate the true cost of the CAP.

I have placed in the Library of the House a note setting out the calculations underlying this estimate.

Lairaging, Coventry Airport

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what lairaging and associated facilities there are at Coventry airport for calves awaiting transport when aircraft are delayed due to (a) bad weather, (b) aircraft failure and (e) other factors;

(2) what is the capacity of the lairage at Coventry airport; how far distant is it; how many alternative holding premises there are; and what measures are being taken to prevent the spread of infection in very young calves during these holding operations.

Mrs. Browning: There are no designated lairage facilities at or near Coventry airport, although in an emergency officials would require the unloading of calves into one of the hangers at the airport. Currently, the contingency plan of the exporters concerned, in the event of delays to flight plans, is to take the calves back to the premises of origin. Officials will use their powers where necessary to ensure that calves do not go for longer than 15 hours from the start of their journey without being fed and rested.

Dangerous Wild Animals

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to include American mink, Arctic fox and Racoon dog in the Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: The Farm Animal Welfare Council recently recommended that consideration should be given to the inclusion of these animals in the Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976. Interested organisations have been consulted on this recommendation and their views will be taken into account before any conclusions are reached as to how this matter should be taken forward.

Sickness Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he is taking to combat sickness absenteeism in (a) the Intervention Board, (b) the Veterinary Medicines Directorate and (c) his Department.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am pleased to say that the rate of sickness absence in my Department is already well below the civil service average. Nevertheless, a fundamental review has been undertaken of existing arrangements for the management of sick absence in the core Department and a range of measures designed to introduce even more effective controls are now being developed.

Responsibility for such matters within the Intervention Board and the Veterinary Medicines Directorate has been delegated to the agency chief executives and I have asked them to reply direct.

Letter from Guy Stapleton to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 3 March 1995:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply to your question about sick absence control measures in the Intervention Board as this is within my operational responsibility.

The Agency employs the full range of Civil Service procedures for dealing with staff who have problems with recurring or long-term sick leave. Where appropriate, this involves personnel action, with individual counselling and the use of informal and formal warnings aimed at resolving problems and improving attendance. Professional advice on prognoses is obtained from the Civil Service Occupational Health Service (CSOHS) at fixed trigger points or at any time when it is felt this is warranted by the circumstances. There is also input to this process from our Welfare Officer. Following professional advice, early medical retirement may take place or, in the absence of any improvement despite advice and counselling, the inefficiency procedures may be initiated which can lead to dismissal on grounds of poor attendance.

I commissioned a review in the Agency's Personnel Group during 1994 with the objective of achieving better overall management control of sick absence cases. Recommendations from the review for strengthening the current arrangements, in particular in respect of our approach to individual cases involving regular, short-term absences, were approved by the Agency's Management Group and will be introduced in 1995. The changes will clarify the division of responsibility between personnel and operational managements, and will give more emphasis to the devolvement to managers of the front-line control measures that need to be taken immediately following the return of any member of staff after sick leave. To help implement the new arrangements, we are planning to provide revised written guidance and a bespoke training programme for all managers in the Agency. The aim will be to ensure a consistent and effective policy for the handling of sick leave cases throughout the Agency.

To supplement the administrative changes and improved control measures, the review also made a number of recommendations to improve the level of general staff awareness about the negative aspects of sick absence. Accordingly, we also propose to issue a booklet for circulation to all staff that describes the impact that sick absences can have on the overall level of service that we provide to our customers, as well as the cost and efficiency implications this has for the smooth running of the department. The general aim will be to heighten awareness about individual responsibility and the impact that sick leave has on the organisation, as well as the additional pressure it imposes for immediate work colleagues.

We consider that an important factor in the success of these changes will be to achieve, as far as possible, the understanding and support of staff and the Trade Union Side. The Agency is making a clear commitment that the changes are aimed at improving the dialogue and communication that takes place when staff have sick leave problems. We have no intention of diluting or neglecting the normal duty of care that we have towards our employees and we shall continue to act reasonably and fairly towards all our staff on these issues.

Finally, while it is somewhat difficult to forecast the impact these changes will have, we are, nevertheless, setting ourselves ambitious targets to reduce sick absence rates to less than 4.5% in 1995/96 and to under 4% in 1996/97. This represents achieving overall improvements equivalent to around 33% on the level of sick absences recorded last year and of about 40% on the 1992/93 figures.

Letter from J. M. Rutter to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 8 March 1995:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question about the measures being taken to combat sickness absenteeism in the Veterinary Medicines Directorate, as this is an operational matter for which I am responsible.

You are aware from my earlier letters of 20 December 1994 and 30 January 1995 of the sickness absenteeism rates in the Directorate over the last 4 years. These are well below the Civil Service average. My senior managers and I receive monthly reports of sickness absence, and the same procedures for the management of such absences are applied as in core MAFF. The Minister has advised you that these have been reviewed, and a range of measures designed to introduce even more effective controls are now being developed. These will apply also to staff in the Directorate.

Livestock Exports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will show the number of livestock, by type, exported to (a) Spain, (b) France, (c) Italy, (d) Portugal and (e) Ireland in each year since 1990.

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 6 March 1995]: The data requested are shown in the following table.

Quarantine Arrangements

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what security restrictions are applied to quarantine arrangements for imported non-human primates.

Mrs. Browning: The statutory requirements which apply to authorised quarantine premises are set out in the licences granted under article 9 of the Rabies (Importation of Dogs, Cats and Other Mammals) Order 1974. They include details on the construction and dimension of the perimeter surrounds and the requirements for the construction of the units. These conditions are designed to ensure that full rabies security is maintained while imported animals—including non-human primates—covered by the order are in quarantine. All quarantine premises are inspected regularly by MAFF veterinary officers and at least once a week by MAFF appointed veterinary/medical supervisors to ensure that satisfactory standards are maintained.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if imported primates are always quarantined in areas without non-quarantined animals.

Mrs. Browning: Specific authority must be granted by this Ministry before imported primates can be quarantined in a unit with non-quarantined animals, for example at a zoo. Quarantine restrictions then apply to all the animals in the unit.

Imported Primates

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are taken to identify cause of death in imported primates; and what security measures are taken in these circumstances.

Mrs. Browning: Where a primate dies in quarantine, the whole carcase is sent to the Centre of Applied Microbiology and Research, Porton Down for rabies tests and post-mortem examination under secure conditions. Strict procedures have been laid down for the packaging and conveying of carcases to CAMR.

Where the animal has been sharing accommodation, all the survivors are kept in quarantine until the results of the tests are known.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how potentially infected materials from imported primates are disposed of and decontaminated.

Mrs. Browning: All quarantine premises must use an incinerator, or other means accepted as satisfactory by the Ministry, for the disposal of carcases, faeces, clippings, uneaten food and other waste. If possible, the incinerator should be within the perimeter fence, and enclosed.

Where the incinerator is outside the perimeter fence, it must have its own lockable fence and be inaccessible to animals, and all waste must be carried to it in leak-proof sealed containers.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what restrictions are placed on the movement, handling and travelling environments of non-human primates entering the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Browning: Under the Rabies (Importation of Dogs, Cats and other Mammals) Order 1974, all non-human primate imports into Great Britain have to be licensed and the animals have to spend six months in authorised quarantine premises. Animals may arrive only at designated ports and airports and must be transported to their quarantine premises by carrying agents authorised by MAFF to transport monkeys. The carrying agent must, within 24 hours of the landing, inform the Ministry of the landing of the animal and its conveyance to the quarantine premises. The veterinary/medical supervisor for the quarantine premises must also confirm the arrival of the animal to the Ministry within seven days.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures are taken to identify potential filovirus contamination of animals before importation into the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Browning: Although there is no statutory requirement to test animals for potential filovirus contamination before importation into the United Kingdom, many of the animals are tested either before or after import as part of the normal health screening by the importing companies. Since 1990, a total of about 1,000 monkeys have been tested. None has revealed any evidence of filovirus infection.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidelines are issued to persons handling imported non-human primates, promoting awareness of potential health risks and minimising the risks of infection.

Mrs. Browning: The Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1994 require employers involved in work that might expose staff to biological agents hazardous to health to provide their employees with enough information, instruction and training for them to know what the risks are, and what precautions to take.

To assist employers in meeting their statutory obligations, the Medical Research Council produces specific guidance on infectious hazards in simians which is entitled "The Management of Simians in Relation to Infectious Hazards to Staff".

EMPLOYMENT

Unemployment

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what action he is taking to reduce unemployment in Coventry; and what (a) job creation schemes and (b) training schemes he will initiate;

(2) what measures he proposes to tackle long-term unemployment in Coventry.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from R. M. Phillips to Mr. Jim Cunningham, dated 9 March 1995:

The Secretary of State for Employment has asked me, in the absence of the Chief Executive, to reply to your questions about the action being taken to reduce unemployment in Coventry, in particular, the measures to combat long-term unemployment through job creations schemes and training initiatives.

Claimant unemployment in the Coventry local authority area has fallen by nearly 22% in the twelve months to January. This was the greatest percentage reduction of any authority area in the whole of the West Midlands region. The number of long-term unemployed for the Coventry local authority area also fell by 25%, the second largest fall amongst all regional authority areas.

The number of employer vacancies notified to Jobcentres in the same area increased by 41.8% for the twelve month period ending January. This too was the largest increase in notified vacancies for any authority area in the West Midlands region. I can also report that Coventry, and the Warwickshire county, have been allocated £22.54m from the Single Regeneration Budget, calculated to lead to the creation and preservation of 2,600 new jobs, and the provision of 1,950 training places. Over 60% of funds allocated will go towards establishing projects for disadvantaged areas and groups in Coventry.

The Employment Service (ES) actively markets and delivers its programmes and services to unemployed jobseekers, especially disadvantaged groups and the long-term unemployed, as part of its Annual Performance Agreement with the Department of Employment. In the eleven months up to February, the ES in Coventry placed 3,318 long-term unemployed people into jobs, and 1,765 people on the adult vocational Training-for-Work programme. All unemployed people who do not manage to find work within 13 weeks of their date of registration, are given a personal interview with an experienced employment adviser, where efforts to find work are reviewed and options for getting back to work, including vocational training, are explored. There are a number of active employment measures, including Job Plan Workshops, Jobclubs, Work Trials, and the Job Interview Guarantee scheme, which operate in the Coventry area, aimed specifically at long-term unemployed.

Two years ago, an Enterprise and Advice Centre was set up in Coventry, Hillfields, to encourage local residents to access training and education opportunities. The centre is a local partnership initiative between the ES, Training and Enterprise Council, Careers Service, Jobclubs and other community based organisations. In the three months up to February, the centre assisted over 1,200 local people.

There are also several local projects aimed at equipping ethnic minority and other disadvantaged groups with the skills needed to access training, education and job opportunities. Again, these partnership projects are funded centrally, but managed and delivered locally through community "outreach" facilities to ensure training and access provision is targeted at, and available to disadvantaged groups in areas of high and long-term unemployment.

From April, Coventry will pilot a new employer recruitment subsidy scheme known as Workstart. This initiative, which will run for a year, is designed to test the effectiveness of encouraging employers to recruit people unemployed for two years or more by paying them a subsidy.

With regard to more general recruitment in Coventry, Barclays Bank is creating between 500–1000 new jobs for its national telephone banking headquarters—BarclayCall, in the Walsgrave area of the city. The ES is already assisting Barclays with its vacancy filling by delivering job preparation courses for prospective employees and have so far placed 50 clients into jobs, 31% of whom were long-term unemployed jobseekers.

I hope you will find this labour market information about the Coventry area helpful.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of public funds devoted to reducing unemployment are devoted to the long-term unemployed.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department's forecast expenditure for 1994–95 is £3.7 billion. Of this, some £1 billion is directed specifically to helping long-term unemployed people. This includes £693 million on training for work in England and around £300 million for the range of assistance offered by the Employment Service, such as community action, jobclubs, jobplan workshops and restart.

In addition, the Department plans to spend some £95 million more over the next three years on the measures to help long-term unemployed people find work, such as jobmatch, workstart and work trials. These measures were announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget statement on 29 November 1994, Official Report, column 1079.

Consultants

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list (a) the consultants, (b) the tasks for which they were employed and (c) the payments made to them from his Department's budget in (i) 1992–93 and (ii) 1993–94.

Miss Widdecombe: Information in the form requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

European Social Fund

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the allocation of the European social fund for the current programming period to (a) Government programmes, (b) each of the objective 1, 2 and 5b regions and (c) each of the non-Government sectors, giving distinctions between England, Wales and Scotland where appropriate.

Miss Widdecombe: Allocations to Government and non-Government sectors under objective 3 of the European Community structural funds for the 1994–95 programme period are shown in table 1. The allocations in respect of Government programmes form part of the objective 3 plan agreed last year with the European Commission. Non-Government sector allocations for 1994 and 1995 were subsequently settled with the objective 3 monitoring committee. Figures for 1996 will be agreed later this year.

Table 2 shows the European social fund components of the allocations to regions and sub-regions made under objectives 1, 2 and 5(b) of the structural funds. For the objective 1 regions, the programming period covers the years 1994 to 1999; for objective 2 the years 1994 to 1996.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the latest allocations of funds from the European social fund objective 3 for the United Kingdom.

Miss Widdecombe: The most recent allocations for Great Britain under objective 3 of the European Community structural funds are shown in the following table:

Employment Opportunities (Epileptics)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures are being taken by his Department to improve the employment opportunities of people with epilepsy other than his Department's booklet on the subject.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government have introduced the Disability Discrimination Bill which, if enacted, will make it unlawful for an employer to treat a disabled person, including a person with epilepsy, less favourably because of his or her disability, without justifiable reason.

The Department also has a wide range of initiatives and services which help enhance employment opportunities for people with disabilities, including those with epilepsy. We will continue our programme of educating and persuading employers to adopt good employment practices for disabled people. We will also continue to provide effective practical help to both employers and disabled individuals.

Sickness Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he is taking to combat sickness absenteeism in the Employment Service.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 9 March 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the measures being taken to combat sickness absenteeism in the Employment Service (ES).

A sickness absence management initiative has been in place in the ES since 1991. This came about because of concerns about sickness levels in the organisation at that time and the need to manage it more effectively.

The main elements of the initiative included:

(a) the provision of a leaflet for people returning to work about sickness absence and a requirement for managers to talk to such staff, to check what the problem was, whether they were fully fit for work, and find out whether additional support and advice was needed; and

(b) a requirement for individuals to phone in by an agreed time on the first day of their illness, to tell their manager they were ill, so that cover for their job could be arranged during their absence.

The rationale behind the initiative was to provide more effective help to those who really needed it, and to take a firmer line with those whose absences may have been questionable. Sickness absence has fallen from around 7% in 1991 to around 4% in 1994.

More recently, the success of this initiative has been developed further with a number of changes being made to the ES Personnel Handbook. One of the changes to the inefficiency procedure was a reduction in the number of days sickness absence which an employee can take before consideration is given to inefficiency action. Previously, the limits were 14 or 21 days in a 12 month period, depending on age. Since 31 October 1994, the new trigger point has been 12 working days for everyone irrespective of age and also includes part day sickness absences.

A full evaluation will be conducted in the autumn, when the arrangements have been in place for a full year.

I hope this is helpful.

South Thames Training and Enterprise Council

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what arrangements he will make to ensure that individual contractors which submitted claims for work carried out for STTEC are reimbursed in full.

Mr. Paice: Whether contractors are paid for services contracted for with South Thames training and enterprise council will depend upon the source of the funding and the timing of the work done. For Government-funded programmes—excluding employer investment in people—payments will be made to providers for properly substantiated claims for work done since 7 November 1994. Employer investment in people contractors will be paid for work done after 21 December 1994—the date of the appointment of the receiver. Payment for discretionary programmes funded from TEC reserves after 21

December 1994 are a matter for the receiver. All contractors are unsecured creditors to the TEC for payments relating to work on Government programmes—excluding employer investment in people—before 7 November 1994 and all other forms of contract and employer investment in people prior to 21 December 1994.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total amount of money which was pledged by the South Thames TEC to training providers based in the Dulwich constituency for the financial year 1994–95.

Mr. Paice: The information is not held by the Department.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total amount of money owing to individual contractors which submitted claims for payment for work carried out for South Thames TEC before the appointment of the receiver.

Mr. Paice: The total amount of money owing to individual contractors which submitted claims for payment for work carried out for South Thames training and enterprise council, before the appointment of the receiver, is a matter for the receiver.

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what arrangements he will make to ensure that Waverley school in Dulwich receives the £75,000 it was promised by the South Thames TEC before going into receivership.

Mr. Paice: The £75,000 referred to in the question breaks down into six separate programmes. Two of these, compact and careers initiative, are Government-funded programmes covered by the comfort arrangements so the school will receive funding for these programmes for work undertaken since 7 November 1994. However, for any moneys owing for activities undertaken before 7 November, the school is an unsecured creditor. Investors in people is Government-funded, but comfort has not been extended to this programme as it benefits organisations rather than individuals. The school is an unsecured creditor to the training and enterprise council for this programme before 21 December, the date of the receiver's appointment. Claims for work done after 21 December should be submitted to the receiver.

The school effectiveness pilot and the technology bid are South Thames TEC initiatives funded from the TEC's own reserves. The Government are not committed to continue to fund discretionary programmes financed from the TEC's reserves. The Waverley school is an unsecured creditor to the TEC for the two latter programmes for payments relating to work done prior to the receiver's appointment on 21 December. Whether invoices for any such work done after 21 December are paid is a matter for the receiver. The personal effectiveness programme initiative is Government funded. It offers the use of a consultancy service rather than providing funding direct to the school. This service will continue to be delivered under the normal conditions.

Jobcentres

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what training is given to district managers in the Employment Service on the geographic locations of jobcentres, the constituencies they fall in and the communities they serve; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

World Wide Web

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make provision for (a) political parties and (b) hon. Members to place material in a specifically designated section of the World Wide Web server www.open.gov.uk in order to contribute to political debate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Horam: The World Wide Web server, www.open.gov.uk, provides Internet access to the CCTA Government information service. This service is intended specifically for Government information to be placed there by CCTA on behalf of Departments of State. There are no plans to extend its use to include political material from either parties or individuals.

However, the Government fully support the principle of open political debate, and the CCTA Government information service has a number of collaborative open groups that are designed to encourage such discussion, through electronic mail. Details can be found at the World Wide Web address:

www.open.gov.uk/cogs/coglist.htm.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those studies by the Medical Research Council into a genetic risk factor in late-onset Alzheimer's disease.

Mr. Horam: The details of the relevant research projects funded by the Medical Research Council are as follows:

Direct support through MRC's own units:

MRC Laboratory of Molecular Biology, Cambridge

Project Title: Understanding pathogenesis of Alzheimer's disease.

Indirect support through grants to researchers in higher education institutions:

Dr. J. Xuereb and Dr. C. M. Wischik

Dept. of Psychiatry,

Cambridge university

Project title: Cambridge Brain Bank's contribution to clinical/epidemiological studies of dementia and Alzheimer's disease research.

Professor D. Brock

Dept. of Medicine

Edinburgh university

Project title: Mutation analysis in Alzheimer's disease

Professor P. Lantos and Professor C. D. Marsden

Dept. of neuropathology,

Institute of Psychiatry

London

Project title: A London brain bank for research on Alzheimer's and Parkinson's disease

Professor R. Williamson and Dr. M. Rossor

Dept. of biochemistry and molecular genetics

St. Mary's hospital medical school

London

Project title: Familial dementias and Alzheimer's disease

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much research into the causes and treatment of Alzheimer's disease was funded by the Government in 1993–94; and what is the expected level of expenditure in 1994–95 and 1995–96.

Mr. Horam: In the last financial year for which figures are available—1993–94—the Medical Research Council, which receives its funding from my Department, spent £4.5 million on research projects directly related to Alzheimer's disease and a further £5.3 million on projects which may in part have some relevance to the condition.

It is not possible to provide figures for the council's future funding of research proposals as this will depend on the quality and nature of research applications received. However, the council is always willing to discuss and consider sound, scientifically based proposals for research into Alzheimer's disease.

The universities and medical schools may also be funding research into Alzheimer's disease, although this information is not held centrally.

The Department of Health does not at present fund research specifically into the treatment of the disease.

Epilepsy

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much money the Medical Research Council plans to spend in 1995–96 and 1996–97 on (a) research into epilepsy and (b) research which may be relevant to the condition.

Mr. Horam: It is not possible to provide figures for the Medical Research Council's future funding of research proposals as this will depend on the quality and nature of research applications received. The council is always willing to discuss and consider sound, scientifically based proposals for research into epilepsy.

Security Classifications

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent changes have been made in the definitions of the security classifications "confidential" and "commercial in confidence" in the light of the Government's commitment to open government; and what guidance has been circulated to civil servants on the use of such classifications.

Mr. Horam: Until 3 April 1994, the definition of the classification "confidential" was:

"Information and material the unauthorised disclosure of which would be damaging to the interests of the nation".

Until the same date, "commercial in confidence" was one of a number of privacy markings and its purpose was to enable appropriate protection to be given to information relating to a commercial undertaking's processes or affairs and which may have been of commercial value to its competitors or to speculators. Following a review of protective security, the classification system and the privacy marking system were replaced by a harmonised system of protective markings.

The new definition of "confidential" is:

"The compromise of this information or material would be likely: materially to damage diplomatic relations—ie cause formal protest or other sanction—to prejudice individual security or liberty; to cause damage to the operational effectiveness or security of UK or allied forces or the effectiveness of valuable security or intelligence operations; to work substantially against national finances or economic and commercial interest; substantially to undermine the financial viability of major organisations; to impede the investigation or facilitate the commission of serious crime; to impede seriously the development or operation of major government policies; to shut down or otherwise substantially disrupt significant national operations".

Privacy markings, such as "commercial in confidence", have been abolished. They have been replaced by descriptors which can be used, normally in conjunction with any one of the four protective markings—top secret, secret, confidential, and restricted—to indicate what sort of sensitive material—commercial, staff, management, and so on—is being protected. Guidance about the use of the protective marking system has been issued to departments and agencies as part of wider guidance on protective security.

The new protective marking system is consistent with the code of practice on access to Government information. The guidance on interpretation of the code of practice, which has been issued to all Departments and agencies subject to the code and has been placed in the Library, makes it clear that the arrangements for marking information help to ensure the physical security of information which is exempt from disclosure under the code. It also makes clear that information does not need to be protectively marked to be exempt from disclosure under the code, and that a protective marking cannot be taken, without further examination, to mean that all the information contained in a document is properly exempt from disclosure.

DEFENCE

Road Traffic Regulations (Exemptions)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what exemptions his Department's vehicles and drivers are entitled to in respect of road traffic regulations.

Mr. Freeman: My Department's vehicles and their drivers are entitled to various exemptions under a wide variety of road traffic regulations. It is our policy, however, to comply with all regulations where operational effectiveness is not impaired.

No central record of the exemptions is maintained and this information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Sickness Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he is taking to combat sickness absenteeism in his Department.

Mr. Freeman: My Department is aware of the need to seek positive ways to combat sickness absenteeism. At present, initiatives include: a thorough absence reporting system; procedures for dealing with excessive absence; courses and seminars on stress management; a comprehensive welfare service; and education for line managers in occupational monitoring and improving staff attendance rates.

Albania

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what types of logistical support equipment

Albania has requested from the United Kingdom in the last five years.

Mr. Freeman: It is not our normal practice to make public the substance of intergovernmental discussions on potential military assistance. In the case of assistance to Albania, no decisions have yet been taken.

Mr. Harris and Mr. Wilmott

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total amount of time that Messrs. Harris and Wilmott were suspended from their posts as press officers in Plymouth; and what level of pay they received during their suspension;

(2) what was the total amount of money in dispute in the expense claims of Messrs. Harris and Wilmott which led to their suspension as press officers in Plymouth;

(3) what was the total cost of the investigation by his Department into the expense claims of Messrs. Harris and Wilmott who are employed by his Department in Plymouth as press officers; and who was responsible for conducting the inquiry;

(4) if he will place in the Library the report into the investigations of Messrs. Harris and Wilmott, press officers in his Department.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer Thursday 2 March 1995]: Mr. Harris and Mr. Wilmott were suspended from duty from 20 April 1994, until 8 November 1994 and 19 January 1995 respectively. They were paid full salaries during these periods.

Both cases involved investigation by the Ministry of Defence police, which, until 12 January 1995, was a mandatory requirement in cases that involved alleged fraud. Since then, line management has been granted a degree of discretion on police investigation and this is no longer mandatory in minor cases of alleged fraud. It was established, following independent inquiry, that no indication to defraud had existed in these cases. The length of time taken in these cases was partly accounted for by postponements of the hearings at the request of the defendants, and partly by the need for consultation between line management and MOD personnel specialists following the hearing to ensure fair treatment for both officers.

The total cost of the investigation could not be separately identified, but each was chaired by a member of staff outside the management structure of the officers concerned. It is not my Department's practice to make available confidential information on staff matters.

Defence Housing Executive

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) on what dates (a) the Crown Housing Trust will cease to exist and (b) the Defence Housing Executive will commence operating;

(2) where the Crown Housing Trust currently operates from; and where the Defence Housing Executive will be based.

Mr. Soames: The original proposal to set up a housing trust encountered difficulties, and the trust was therefore never formally established. The Defence Housing Executive is on course to assume responsibility for the management and maintenance of the married quarters estate from 1 April 1995. The staff initially recruited to set up the housing trust were originally accommodated in Ministry of Defence offices in London. From 1 August 1994, the staff involved, who have subsequently been working on setting up the Defence Housing Executive moved to other Government offices in central London. The Defence Housing Executive is also in the process of appointing regional and area staff throughout the country; as existing service or Ministry of Defence civilian personnel, these staff are accommodated in either Defence or common user estate property. It is expected that these arrangements will continue.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) who was responsible for appointing the employees of the Crown Housing Trust; and who will be responsible for appointing the employees of the Defence Housing Executive;

(2) if the chief executive of the Crown Housing Trust is eligible for consideration for the post of chief executive of the Defence Housing Executive.

Mr. Soames: The chief executive, designate, housing director, designate, and finance director, designate, of the trust were appointed by my Department following open competition and in accordance with the recommendations of an appointments board chaired by the First Civil Service Commission. Other staff of the embryo trust organisation were serving civil servants and agency support staff. Arrangements for the appointment of a chief executive for the Defence Housing Executive have yet to be finalised. The other staff of the executive are being drawn from the Department's civilian and service personnel resources; it is envisaged that a limited number of appointments will in due course be made by means of open competition where the required expertise is not available within Government personnel resources.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department will be setting annual targets for the Defence Housing Executive for the number of vacant dwellings among Ministry of Defence-owned properties.

Mr. Soames: In common with all Government Departments holding residential property, my Department agrees annually with the Department of the Environment a target for a reduction in the number of void properties it holds. Achievement of the target to be agreed for my Department for 1995–96 will be the responsibility of the Defence Housing Executive.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people have signed contracts to work with the Defence Housing Executive.

Mr. Soames: Arrangements for the appointment of a chief executive for the Defence Housing Executive have yet to be finalised. The other staff of the executive are being drawn from my Department's civilian and service personnel resources; it is envisaged that a limited number of appointments will in due course be made by means of open competition where the required expertise is not available within Government personnel resources.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cost of renting office accommodation for his Department's housing trust and Defence Housing Executive; where are the offices; and for how long they have been rented.

Mr. Soames: The staff initially recruited to set up the housing trust were originally accommodated in Ministry of Defence offices in London. From 1 August 1994, the staff involved, who have subsequently been working on setting up the Defence Housing Executive, moved to other Government offices in central London. The rental cost to the end of February 1995 is some £191,000. The Defence Housing Executive is also in the process of appointing regional and area staff throughout the country; as existing service or Ministry of Defence civilian personnel, these staff are accommodated in either defence or common user estate property. It is expected that these arrangements will continue.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will specify the total payments to date made to (a) Coopers and Lybrand, (b) NatWest Markets and (c) Savills for work carried out in respect of his Department's plans for the married quarters housing stock; and whether this work is still continuing;

(2) if he will provide a breakdown for the total cost to date of his Department's plans for the married quarters housing stock;

(3) what is the total annual cost of legal advice for work associated with the Defence Housing Trust and Defence Housing Executive.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total amount spent on the Crown Housing Trust since its establishment.

Mr. Soames: The total cost to date of work on new arrangements for the married quarters estate is some £5.4 million. Much of this investment is being realised in the establishment of the Defence Housing Executive, and much of it is also relevant to any form of transfer of the married quarters estate to the private section. The breakdown of these costs is as follows:

£ thousand

	Financial year 1991–92	Financial year 1992–93	Financial year 1993–94	Financial year 1994–95	Total
Internal costs	—	—	312	857	1,169
External costs
Legal advice	—	3	102	825	930
Other professional fees	8	13	462	2,852	3,335
Total	8	16	876	4,534	5,434

Notes:
1. All costs shown are outturn prices exclusive of VAT for external costs. VAT is refunded to the Department on "contracted-out services" such as legal advice, agency staff and other professional services.
2. Internal costs are primarily salary costs and office accommodation, but cover also such items as office machinery, computers and stationery.
3. External costs for financial year 1994–95 take account of invoices received to date.

Payments to individual companies are commercially confidential. The possibility of further work for such companies depends on the outcome of the competitive selection of financial and other advisers which we are at present carrying out, and on any future need for advice which may be identified.

Severance Payments

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of all cases in which employees of his Department have received severance payments in excess of (c) 100,000 after less than 12 months service for each of the last three years.

Mr. Soames: There have been no such cases.

Menwith Hill Station

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many GCHQ staff have been placed at Menwith Hill station in each year since 1992, to date and on what basis; what are their primary duties; to whom do they report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: There is a significant GCHQ presence at Menwith Hill station. It is not Government policy however to give more detailed information on the deployment of GCHQ staff. I refer the hon. Member to the Adjournment debate of 25 March 1994 concerning Menwith Hill station, Official Report, columns 609–16.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about GCHQ staff at Menwith Hill station intercepting domestic and international telephone calls.

Mr. Soames: None.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will permit right hon. and hon. Members to visit Menwith Hill station in north Yorkshire to inspect the station and to be briefed on the activities currently undertaken there; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: For operational and security reasons, such visits are not allowed.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the progress by the National Security Agency of America, in respect of complaints made by Ms Lindis Percy, of Bradford, about her treatment by American military personnel when detained by them at Menwith Hill station; what rights Ms Percy has to take legal action against American military personnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: I am unaware of any incidents at Menwith Hill station in which Ms Percy has been detained by American military personnel. It is not for my Department to advise Ms Percy on her legal rights.

Hospitality

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what types of hospitality members of his Department have been forbidden to receive from companies bidding for defence contracts; on what date the restriction was imposed; and if he will specify the instructions provided to members of his Department concerning hospitality and receiving gifts from defence contractors.

Mr. Freeman: The principles of conduct which govern how members of my Department should react to offers of gifts and hospitality have been in place for many years. They are brought to the attention of all staff in a publication which is issued annually. Staff must not accept hospitality which includes overnight accommodation, transport costs, or offers of such things as holidays and the use of vehicles. Invitations of a social kind should normally be declined unless attendance can be demonstrated to be in the interests of the Department. Trivial gifts may be retained, where they are occasional and where acceptance would not give rise to public concern.

Western European Union

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what occasions in the last year he has met (a) his French and (b) his German counterparts to discuss his Department's ideas for the development of the Western European Union; and what were the outcomes of these meetings.

Mr. Soames: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has regularly met his French and German counterparts over the past year to discuss a wide range of issues that have on occasion included matters concerning the Western European Union.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will specify the actions his Department are promoting to develop the Western European Union's planning and command and control capacities.

Mr. Soames: The actions we are promoting are those stated in the memorandum on the United Kingdom's approach to the treatment of European defence issues at the 1996 inter-governmental conference, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. These includes provisional offers of assistance in developing the handling of intelligence and the creation of a situation centre.

Nuclear Weapons Register

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the reasons which led his Department to reject the German Government's proposals in December 1993 for a nuclear weapons register; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 13 December 1994, Official Report, columns 621–22.

European Procurement Collaborations

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy concerning the creation of joint project offices for European procurement collaborations.

Mr. Freeman: The management arrangements for each collaborative defence equipment programme are considered on their merits, with our partners, on a case by case basis. Where there is judged to be the most effective approach, a joint project office may be established.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy concerning the use of capability and cost to determine a country's share of work in joint European procurement collaborations.

Mr. Freeman: In negotiations with partners in a collaborative programme, the Department takes into account a number of factors relating to workshares, on a case-by-case basis, consistent with the aim of obtaining value for money. The Department believes that this aim is best achieved by maximising competition in the programme, allowing companies in each partner nation the opportunity to win work on technical and commercial merit.

Ship Charters

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many ships were chartered by his Department in each of the last 10 years; and how many of these ships were registered in Britain in each of these years.

Mr. Freeman: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy in the Library of the House.

Combined Joint Task Force

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if NATO's combined joint task force initiative is now operational; and on which occasions this initiative has been put into operation.

Mr. Soames: NATO is continuing work, in co-ordination with the WEU, on the development and implementation of the combined joint task force concept.

European Nuclear Deterrent

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy towards a European nuclear deterrent for the Western European Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The independent nuclear forces of the United Kingdom are committed to NATO and already contribute to overall deterrence and security within Europe. This was recognised by all WEU members at the Noordwijk summit in November 1994.

Nuclear Weapons

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy towards transparency in relation to the possession of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Soames: Our policy is to be as open about our nuclear deterrent as is possible without revealing information which might diminish the effectiveness of the system and so the credibility of our deterrent.

European Defence Industry

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy on the rationalisation of the European defence industry.

Mr. Freeman: In principle, I welcome the closer ties which many United Kingdom defence companies are forging with those in Europe and north America. Industrial rationalisation is a process which is primarily for the companies and the markets, subject of course to regulation by the relevant competition authorities. My Department considers mergers which may be of interest to it on a case-by-case basis, taking into account the possible effects on future competition and any security considerations.

Operation Granby

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's estimate of the cost of fraud incurred by Britain during Operation Granby.

Mr. Soames: There are no proven cases of fraud associated with Operation Granby. A number of suspected cases concerned with the supply of shipping have been investigated, some of which remain the subject of civil or criminal action.

Compulsory Drug Testing

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel have been tested under the new compulsory drug testing procedures in (a) the Army, (b) the Royal Navy including the Royal Marines and (c) the Royal Air force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The Army is the only service to have introduced a compulsory drug testing programme. Tests began in January, and by 1 March 436 Army personnel had been tested. The Royal Navy has recently completed an anonymous trial to determine whether there is a need for compulsory drug testing of naval personnel, including the Royal Marines, and a report will be submitted to the Admiralty Board shortly. The RAF does not consider that there is a need to introduce compulsory drug testing at present, but is keeping its position under review.

Consultants

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, if he will list (a) the consultants, (b) the tasks for which they were employed and (c) the payments made to them from his Department's budget in (i) 1992–93 and (ii) 1993–94.

Mr. Freeman: In addition to those placed by the central contracts branches, consultancy contracts may be placed as part of a larger project and by individual budget holders where the overall value of the contract is low. Such contracts are placed under delegated contractual authority without reference to the central contracts branches and so cannot be identified centrally.

In view of this and the fact that the Department's central contracts branches have placed in excess of 500 contracts with consultants in each of the last few years, an answer to the hon. Gentleman's question could only be provided at disproportionate cost and effort.

Post Traumatic Stress Disorder

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of those service personnel who have served in Northern Ireland since 1969 are suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is not available, as medical data in the services are not recorded in a way which allows episodes of illness or injury to be linked with operational deployment.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the date, location and circumstances of each incident involving inadvertent release of weaponry from military aircraft outside weapons range areas in the United Kingdom over the last three years.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is shown. All four occurrences involved inadvertent release of inert practice weapons into areas where public access is controlled because of known military activity.

Date	Location	Circumstances
Royal Air Force
25 January 1993	RAF Marham	Practice bomb fell from a Tornado GR1 during take-off and landed on the runway.
Fleet Air Arm
6 October 1992	English Channel (Portland Exercise Area)	Drill missile released from a Lynx in error during simulated attack.
30 March 1993	English Channel (Plymouth Exercise Area)	Drill missile released from a Lynx in error during simulated attack.
19 May 1994	Firth of Clyde (Clyde Exercise Area)	Practice torpedo slipped from recovery equipment during transit by Sea King to beaching site.

Golf Course, Wyton

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the involvement of his Department in the creation of a golf course at Wyton; and what estimate he has made of the cost of this project.

Mr. Soames: It is understood that the Royal Air Force Golf Association, which is a non-public body, is examining the possibility of constructing a golf course on surplus land at RAF Wyton in Cambridgeshire. Should the association decide to proceed with this proposal, the costs, including the purchase of land from my Department, would be met by it.

Helicopter Flying Training

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the future of helicopter flying training in the three services.

Mr. Soames: Proposals for a defence helicopter flying school were issued on 8 December in a consultation document. During the consultation period, my Department received 14 responses to our proposals.

All these responses have received careful and sympathetic scrutiny. There have been understandable local concerns but widespread general support for the main thrust of the proposals. No significant new defence related arguments have, however, emerged, nor have any new suggestions been made which have caused us to alter our original proposals.

I can therefore confirm that we shall now move to develop our plans along the lines indicated in the consultative document. We shall establish a single tri-service school to provide pre-operational helicopter flying training at Shawbury with effect from April 1997.

Training undertaken by 705 Naval Air Squadron at Culdrose will move to the joint school in 1997. However,

I am pleased to announce that the Royal Navy's fleet requirement and air direction unit will move to Culdrose in December this year when the existing contract at Yeovilton comes to an end. This will help to ensure that Culdrose continues to operate at a very high capacity and its long-term future remains assured as the main operating base of the Merlin anti-submarine warfare helicopter.

I am also pleased to confirm that Middle Wallop will remain the home of Army aviation with responsibility for operational training on all Army aircraft. Moving the Army basic helicopter training to the defence helicopter flying school has released space at Middle Wallop. I can therefore confirm that, in line with our policy of consolidating defence activities, Army activity at Netheravon will be relocated with all Army Air Corps flying moving to Middle Wallop. Netheravon itself will remain in the defence estate and possible alternative uses are being considered.

Much work needs to be done in order to establish the defence helicopter flying school at Shawbury in 1997 and we have therefore put in place a team to effect all elements of the implementation process. We shall continue to consult the trades unions on the details of our plans as they unfold.

DEFENCE

Gulf War Veterans

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the investigations his Department is conducting into Gulf war veterans suffering deleterious health effects following return from Operation Granby have examined the possibility of a relationship between the innoculations and NAPS tablets given to soldiers and health care personnel sent to the Gulf, and the development of motor neurone disease and leukaemia.

Mr. Soames: My Department considers all postulated causes of the alleged Gulf war syndrome. The possibility of a relationship between innoculations and NAPS tablets and the development of motor neurone disease and leukaemia has been examined. No evidence has been found within the body of medical knowledge to support such a connection.

Training Flights

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many overland training flights down to 100ft above ground level were conducted by the aircrew involved in the radar tracking trials using DA20 aircraft from West Freugh on 14 December 1994, prior to carrying out the trials flying; what was the location of the training flights; and what was the involvement of the Royal Air Force instructors in the training;

(2) how many flights below 250ft above ground level were conducted by DA20 aircraft on radar trials from West Freugh during December; and what was the minimum authorised altitude for these flights.

Mr. Soames: Only one sortie below 250ft above ground level was flown by this aircraft, on 19 December; this involved a number of passes over the airfield at West Freugh. No sorties were flown below 250ft above ground level on other dates in December, nor were Royal Air Force instructors involved. The aircraft was operating under civil aviation regulations, and was authorised to fly down to a minimum authorised altitude of 100ft above ground level by the Civil Aviation Authority.

Italian Tornados

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the deployment of Italian Air Force Tornado aircraft to RAF Cottesmore in early December 1994; how many aircraft took part; which Royal Air Force unit hosted the visit; whether the visit was a NATO-sponsored unit exchange; how many low-level sorties were undertaken by the aircraft during the deployment, and at what minimum permitted altitudes; how many of these sorties included use of the Spadeadam range; and what breaches of flying regulations have been reported in respect of flying by the aircraft involved in the deployment.

Mr. Soames: Eight Italian Air Force Tornado aircraft were deployed to RAF Cottesmore, which hosted the visit, from 5 to 9 December; the purpose was to utilise the electronic warfare tactics range at RAF Spadeadam and carry out low-flying training within the United Kingdom low-flying system. The deployment was not part of a NATO squadron exchange. A total of 19 low-level sorties were flown, 11 of which involved the use of the Spadeadam range; the authorised minimum separation distance for each sortie was 500ft. There have been no reported breaches of flying regulations.

Sea Service

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the numbers of commissioned officers of each rank in the Royal Navy, differentiating between male and female officers of equivalent rank and indicating how many of the officers in each group have served at sea (a) at that rank or (b) at a lower rank.

(2) if he will list the numbers of petty officers and ratings of each rank in the Royal Navy, differentiating between male and female personnel of equivalent rank and indicating how many in each group have served tours of duty at sea.

Mr. Soames: The information is not available in the precise form requested. A table showing the number of personnel serving on the trained strength of the Royal Navy—indicating chaplains and medical and dental officers—as at 1 January by rank and gender, together with the percentage of those personnel who have served at sea, is as follows. It should be noted that drafts and appointments to some ships—in refit or extended readiness, for example—do not count as sea service, and have been excluded. Additionally, some records which pre-date computerisation, particularly those of the more senior officers, may not be complete.

Plutonium

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what complaints he has received about heavy goods vehicles carrying plutonium in police convoys travelling at over 70 mph on motorways.

Mr. Soames: I have received no such complaints.

Employees, Hampshire

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people were employed in the defence industry in Hampshire in each year since 1989.

Mr. Freeman: The numbers of United Kingdom regular service and Ministry of Defence civilian personnel working in Hampshire in 1 July in the years in question are set as follows. Figures for employment in defence-related industries are not available below the level of economic planning region.

	Service[1]	Civilian[2]	Total
1989	36,715	20,397.5	57,112.5
1990	34,254	20,112.0	54,366.0
1991	33,412	20,111.0	53,523.0
1992	31,742	19,532.0	51,274.0
1993	29,794	18,168.5	47,962.5
1994	29,092	18,473.0	47,565.0

[1] The 1994 figure for UK regular service personnel is provisional.
[2] Permanent staff counted as full time equivalents. The figure for 1992 is at 1 October.

Defence Land Agency

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement regarding the outcome of investigations by Ministry of Defence police into the activities of certain employees of the Defence Land Agency relating to the disposal of Ministry of Defence property in south-west England, described in his answer of 12 April 1994, Official Report, column 148.

Mr. Soames: This matter is still under investigation and papers now rest with the Crown Prosecution Service.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Women Ministers

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, pursuant to his answer of 23 February, Official Report, column 333, by how much the Commissioners' allocation to stipends has been reduced in the current year as a result of providing for resignations under the Ordination of Women (Financial Provisions) Measure 1993; what are the expected cuts in the allocation to stipends for this reason in each of the next three years; and if he will give his latest estimate of the cost of financial provision under the Measure on the same basis as the figures given to the Ecclesiastical Committee on 11 March 1993.

Mr. Alison: The commissioners are currently engaged, with dioceses, on a programme of cuts in diocesan support amounting to £32 million by 1997 to bring their expenditure and income back into balance. Those cuts are not directly related to the costs of financial provision arising from the ordination of women legislation, although those costs have had an impact—relatively modest—on the scale of cuts required. The commissioners' latest estimates of those costs to be met from their income average around £3 million per annum over the period 1995–97.

Actual expenditure in 1994 and illustrative costings based on a possible total of 350 resignations are set out in the following table. These reflect the pattern of expenditure incurred to date.

Illustration of costs for 350 resignations

Year	Gross costs to be met from CC income £	Housing capital (funded by CC) £	Net costs for Church £	New housing capital (Funded by CC) £
1994	2,452,000	5,011,000	747,000	5,011,000
1995	3,439,000	4,770,000	1,872,000	4,770,000
1996	3,216,000	1,370,000	1,899,000	1,370,000
1997	2,434,000	355,000	1,226,000	54,000
1998	1,731,000	213,000	706,000	(100,000)
1999	1,250,000	111,000	433,000	(215,000)

2009	217,000	—	216,000	(361,000)
2010	221,000	—	221,000	(375,000)

Illustration of costs for 350 resignations

Year	Gross costs to be met from CC income £	Housing capital (funded by CC) £	Net costs for Church £	New housing capital (Funded by CC) £
2011	226,000	—	226,000	(390,000)
2012	233,000	—	233,000	(406,000)
Total	19,834,000	12,189,000	10,488,000	6,138,000

Notes:
(a) The number of resignations shown (350)is a broad estimate, and the final costs may vary substantially.
(b) Actual costs based on 232 resignations are shown in respect of 1994. A similar pattern of costs has been assumed for future years.
(c) The figures make allowance for future increases in house prices and stipends.
(d) It has been assumed that 50 per cent. of resigners will require housing assistance.
(e) The net figures take account of such variables as stipends savings (assuming at least a temporary reduction in the payroll), allowance for retirement housing provision which would otherwise have arisen on retirement, and the possibility of some people redeeming loans or leaving rented accommodation once they have obtained alternative employment.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics, Harrogate

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set out the level of average rate of unemployment in the Harrogate travel-to-work area for the most convenient date in the year since 1979.

Mr. Oppenhein: The information requested is available monthly from June 1983 and can be obtained, on the unadjusted basis only, from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Training

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the number of jobs that will be lost due to the re-defined criteria for payment to training providers of training for work programmes; and what provision will be made for trainees unable to complete their study.

Mr. Paice: I can make no estimate of the overall change in staffing amongst training providers. Individual training and enterprise councils determine both the training providers they fund and the nature of the payment arrangements to those providers. TECs have a contractual responsibility to ensure that trainees are given the opportunity to undertake suitable alternative training should a provider no longer be able to offer training for work.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many participants are transferring annually from employment training or training for work schemes to supported self employment.

Mr. Paice: In 1993–94, 5 per cent. of all training for work trainees in Great Britain were self-employed six months after leaving. No information is held centrally about how many of these people or their businesses receive some form of support.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what mechanism there is to fund new training providers wishing to replace those training managers who can no longer justify their existence under existing rules.

Mr. Paice: Training and enterprise councils are free to fund new training providers who satisfy their requirements.

Professional Executive Services

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a list of all Employment Service offices indicating those which (a) will be using the services of the professional executive services team in 1995–96 and (b) need its services in 1994–95 and, in the case of each office, the estimate made of the number of unemployed people for whom these services would be useful.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from R. M. Phillips to Mr. John Denham, dated 13 March 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me, in the absence of the Chief Executive, to reply to your question asking for a list of all Employment Service (ES) offices, together with information on the Professional Executive Services Team.

The ES has over 1,350 offices throughout the country and to list them would not be practical. I have however provided details of the offices involved with the Professional and Executive Services Team which I trust you will find useful.

The Professional and Executive Services Team offers specialist advice to executive level jobseekers on jobsearch activities. It was created at a time of rising unemployment to help unemployed executives in Hampshire and Isle of Wight. It was a local initiative in response to a rise in the number of unemployed executives in the area. Under this initiative executives were offered a half-day seminar on jobsearch techniques and an opportunity to include their pen picture in an occasional brochure which was distributed to local employers.

With falling unemployment, the provision of this service has been reviewed and it will remain available during the coming operational year within the ES Portsmouth District. This District covers ES Jobcentres at Portsmouth, Newport, Ryde, Shanklin, Cosham, and Havant.

During the current operational year these services have also been available within three other ES Districts; Southampton, Fareham, Winchester and Portsmouth. These Districts cover ES Jobcentres at Andover, Basingstoke, Petersfield, Winchester, Hythe, Lymington, Southampton, Woolston, Eastleigh, Fareham, Gosport.

Specialist services to unemployed executives will continue throughout the ES with Executive Jobclubs and Executive Job Search Seminar programmes.

While it is difficult to predict the future level of success of the scheme, I can advise that approximately 20 vacancies were taken by the Professional and Executive Service Team in Southampton between April 1994 and January.

I hope this is helpful.

Jobcentres

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will investigate the actions of the Employment Service in misascribing the constituency which the jobcentre in the Firth park area of Sheffield serves to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Attercliffe (Mr. Betts).

(2) who is responsible for decisions in relation to the closure of the jobcentres; if it is his policy that the local Member of Parliament should be consulted or informed with regard to any changes to the availability of such a service; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will investigate the proposal to close the Firth park jobcentre facility in Sheffield and the cost involved in clients having to travel to alternative facilities.

Miss Widdecombe: I regret the error which occurred and I have asked the chief executive of the Employment Service for a full explanation. I will write to the hon. Member in due course.

TREASURY

Derivatives Dealing

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what dates discussions took place between Treasury officials and Japanese officials on the incidence of off-exchange dealings in derivatives in Japan by non-Japanese nationals in the last two years.

Mr. Nelson: Japanese, United Kingdom and United States securities markets regulators met in Tokyo on 22 April 1994 in one of a series of trilateral meetings to discuss co-operation and regulatory issues in financial services. One of the issues discussed was the over-the-counter derivatives business. It was agreed to co-operate on a trilateral basis in further study.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has about the value of pensions business currently handled by United Kingdom building societies; what information he has concerning the extent to which such societies are trading in derivatives; what steps he is taking in the light of the Baring affair to issue guidance to such derivative-trading building societies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 9 March 1995]: The volume of pensions business handled by building societies is very small both in relation to the size of their operations overall, and to the total volume of pensions in the United Kingdom. Under the Building Societies Act 1986, societies may use a limited range of derivatives, but only for the reduction of risk arising from changes in interest rates, currency rates or other prescribed factors. They do not have the power to trade or speculate in derivatives. The Building Societies Commission has issued prudential guidance on the use of derivatives. The commission keeps its prudential guidance under review. If further guidance is needed in the wake of recent events at Barings, the commission will provide it.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps are being taken by the Building Societies Commission to ensure that building societies do not become involved in derivatives trading; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 9 March 1995]: Building Societies may enter into only a restricted range of derivative contracts, solely for the purpose of reducing loss. They do not have the power to trade or speculate in derivatives.

Manufactures

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects United Kingdom relative export unit values for manufactures to fall to the fourth quarter 1986 level; and if he will list United Kingdom relative export unit values for manufactures for each quarter since the fourth quarter of 1986.

Mr. Nelson: The latest Treasury forecast for relative export unit values for manufactures is shown in chart 3.18 of the November 1994 "Financial Statement and Budget Report", together with historical data back to 1975.

Quarterly data for relative export unit values for manufactures can be found in the "Monthly review of External Trade Statistics" published monthly by the Central Statistical Office.

Civil Servants

Mrs Maddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of those accepted for fast-stream entry for which his Department is responsible (a) in 1991, (b) 1992, (c) in 1993 and (d) in 1994 were women.

Mr. Nelson: Details for 1991 and 1992 are given in the civil service commissioners report for the relevant year. Copies of the reports are available in the Library. The information for 1993 and 1994 is as follows.

Year	Male	Female	Total
1993	13	4	17
1994	8	5	13

Interest Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish full details of the transmission mechanism through which increases in interest rates reduce the rate of inflation.

Mr. Nelson: A change in interest rates is likely to affect the pressure of demand in the economy and hence inflation, through several different channels. It affects investment, stockbuilding and consumption directly by changing the cost of capital and the cost of borrowing. It also affects these expenditures indirectly by changing the incomes of borrowers and creditors and the value of assets, such as housing. It may also affect the inflation rate by changing the exchange rate and hence sterling import prices. Some of these effects can be quick acting; others occur over a longer period.

Quantifying the aggregate effect is difficult. The estimates produced by the major United Kingdom macroeconomic models, including the published Treasury model, are regularly compared and published by the Economic and Social Research Council Macroeconomic Modelling Bureau at the University of Warwick. The latest comparison was published in the August 1993 "National Institute Economic Review," a copy of which is in the Library.

Bank of England

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the names and tenures of the governors and deputy governors of the Bank of England over the last 30 years.

Mr. Nelson: The information requested is as follows.

	Tenure
Governors
Lord Cromer	1 July 1961 – 30 June 1966
Lord O'Brien	1 July 1966 – 30 June 1973
Lord Richardson	1 July 1973 –30 June 1983
Lord Kingsdown	1 July 1983 –30 June 1993
E A J George	1 July 1993 –
Deputy Governors
Lord O'Brien	1 March 1964 – 30 June 1966
Sir Maurice Parsons	1 July 1966 – 28 February 1970
Sir Jasper Q Hollom	1 March 1970 – 29 February 1980
C W McMahon	1 March 1980 – 31 December 1985
Sir George Blunden	1 January 1986 – 28 February 1990
E A J George	1 March 1990 – 30 June 1993
R L Pennant-Rea	1 July 1993 –

Tourism

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the balance of payments on tourism for (a) 1976, (b) 1977, (c) 1993 and (d) 1994 to-date in 1994 prices.

Mr. Nelson: The travel account balances at 1990 prices are:

Year	Balance (million)
1976	+3,882
1977	+4,832
1993	–2,691

Constant price estimates are routinely based on 1990 prices. Full data for 1994 are not available.

EU Membership (Economic Benefits)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list and quantify the economic benefits which will flow to the United Kingdom from membership of the European Union, together with the beneficiaries.

Mr. Nelson: I have nothing to add to the replies I gave to the hon. Member on 17 March 1994, Official Report, column 822, on the 30 June 1994, Official Report, column 680, and on 19 September 1994, Official Report, column 941, and to the reply my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave on 18 May 1994, Official Report, column 470, the reply my hon. Friend the Paymaster General gave on 25 November 1994, Official Report, column 468, and the reply my right hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad), the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, gave on 29 November 1994, Official Report, column 583 in response to very similar questions from the hon. Member.

Imported Goods

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Government are opposed to an increase in the price of imported relative to home-produced goods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The Government are committed to permanently low inflation. We are not opposed to an increase in the price of imported goods relative to domestic goods unless this signals rising inflation.

Return on Capital

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give his assessment of (a) the rate of return on capital employed in manufacturing and non-manufacturing in 1993 and 1994 and (b) the connection between rate of return and investment in increased manufacturing capacity.

Mr. Nelson: The net real rate of return on capital employed by manufacturing companies in 1993 was 5.8 per cent. For all industrial and commercial companies—ICCs—it was 8.4 per cent. Data for 1994 are not yet available, but the forecast published last November in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" showed the net real rate of return for all ICCs rising to 10 per cent. in 1994, with some further increase in 1995. Increases in rates of return contribute to an improved climate for investment. Evidence of this is beginning to emerge. For example, manufacturing investment in plant and machinery in the fourth quarter of 1994 was $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. up on the previous quarter and $7\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. up on a year earlier.

Tax Fraud

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much the Government have spent on the detection of tax fraud for each year since 1979.

Sir George Young: The costs of investigating tax offences which actually amount to fraud are not separately identifiable. However, the costs of investigations carried out by the Inland Revenue into tax evasion, which includes fraud, during the last five years, were as follows:

Year	Spending £ million
1989–90	89
1990–91	103
1991–92	115
1992–93	124
1993–94	137

Comparable figures for earlier years are not available.

Valuation Office

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has reached a decision on the prior options in relation to the current three-year review of the Valuation Office as a next steps agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: Treasury Ministers have now considered the options for the future of the Valuation Office agency, taking into account views expressed in response to the public consultation. We have concluded that the Valuation Office should continue as a next steps agency in the public sector and within the Inland Revenue.

The next stage of the review, which it is hoped will be concluded by the end of April or very shortly thereafter, involves completing the evaluation of the agency's performance to date, reviewing the detailed framework within which the agency operates and considering the appropriate senior management structure for it.

The next stage will in particular examine the potential for involving the private sector to a greater extent in the agency's non-core work; develop proposals for securing future improvements in efficiency, effectiveness and quality in the tasks it undertakes; and consider whether trading fund status would be appropriate for the agency.

We expect to publish the results of the review in due course.

Financial Institutions

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what directions the Bank of England has given to United Kingdom financial institutions in relation to the separation of responsibilities between the front office and the settlements or back office areas of the trading units within such institutions.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 6 March 1995]: The Bank of England does not issue directions to banks on how they must conduct their internal trading and settlement operations but would generally expect the functions of authorisation, execution, valuation, reconciliation, custody and recording to be handled separately.

Permanent Secretaries

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which permanent secretaries have left his Department's employment in the last five years; and which public positions they have been appointed to subsequently.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 8 March 1995]: Sir Peter Middleton and Sir John Anson have retired as permanent secretaries from the Treasury in the five years from 1 March 1990. They have not been appointed to any public positions.

Cefn Lea Park Christian Centre

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the rateable value of the Cefn Lea Park Christian holiday centre, Dolfar, Newton in 1994–95; what it will be in 1995–96; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 8 March 1995]: The rateable value for this centre is £9,400 in 1994–95 and will be £27,535 for 1995–96.

The Government have introduced transitional arrangements to phase in assessments which have been increased. For properties with a new rateable value of £10,000 or more, increases in rate bills will be limited to 10 per cent. plus inflation. The same limits on increases will continue to apply for each year up to and including 1999–2000.

Ratepayers who are dissatisfied with their new assessments may appeal after the new lists come into effect on 1 April 1995.

Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he is taking to combat sickness absenteeism in (a) the Office of the Paymaster, (b) the Central Statistical Office, (c) the Royal Mint and (d) the Treasury.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 9 March 1995]: All four Departments are alert to the need to keep sickness absence to a minimum, and have introduced a range of initiatives to help improve the health of their staff and reduce sickness absence. They each have a separate dedicated welfare officer and a health and safety officer. All adopt widespread no-smoking policies, provide health screening, eye and eyesight tests for those who use display screen equipment and special leave for domestic emergencies.

In addition (a) the Office of the Paymaster has introduced a "look after your heart scheme", cancer screening for women, a workplace nursery and holiday play scheme arrangements; (b) the Central Statistical Office held health screening programmes in both 1992 and 1993, makes health promotional videos available in its Library, has organised presentations from the national physiotherapy service and provides holiday play scheme arrangements; (c) the Royal Mint has an on-site occupational health service, a health screening programme and access to a fitness centre; (d) the Treasury also has a fitness centre, provides holiday play scheme arrangements, provides awareness seminars for new VDU users and carries out workstation risk assessments for all DSU users and regular risk assessment of the workplace. In addition, contractors are asked to provide a copy of their health and safety policy statement and are briefed on best safety practice in the workplace.

All four departments have systems in place to record and monitor sickness absence; to manage staff with unacceptable levels of sickness absence; and to take appropriate action if it proves impossible to bring attendance back to acceptable levels. These systems are kept under review.

Performance-related Pay

Ms Coffey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the annual cost to the Exchequer in foregone revenue of performance-related pay schemes for the latest year for which figures are available.

Sir George Young [holding answer 27 February 1995]: There is no tax relief for performance-related pay.

PRIME MINISTER

Executive Remuneration

Mr. Burden: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to ensure co-ordination between Ministers and regulatory bodies in monitoring levels of executive salaries and share options in privatised industries and services.

The Prime Minister: The role of regulators is to protect consumers. Regulators cannot be expected to judge the merits of individual board members, set their pay effectively and determine the appointment of boardroom executives. We await the conclusions of the Greenbury committee on the best practice for companies on executive remuneration.

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Prime Minster what is the cost of his Department's expenditure on water and sewerage in (a) the current year and (b) each of the previous years.

The Prime Minister: For this purpose my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service and Science.

Ministerial Resignations

Dr. Wright: To ask the Prime Minister if he will provide a list of those ministers who have left his Government since 1992 and give in each case the reason for their departure.

The Prime Minister: The following Ministers have resigned from the Government since the end of 1992:

The right hon. Norman Lamont MP
The right hon. Tristan Garel-Jones MP
The right hon. Sir Archie Hamilton MP
Edward Leigh MP
Sir Kenneth Carlisle MP
Robert Jackson Esq. MP
Michael Mates Esq. MP
The right hon. the Lord Hesketh
Tim Yeo MP
The right hon. the Earl of Caithness
Michael Brown MP
The right hon. the Lord Wakeham
The right hon. John MacGregor OBE, MP
The right hon. Peter Brooke CH, MP
The right hon. John Patten MP
The right hon. Sir Timothy Sainsbury MP
The right hon. Sir Wyn Roberts MP
The right hon. Sir Peter Lloyd MP
The right hon. Sir Nicholas Scott KBE MP
The right hon. Sir John Cope MP
The hon. Sir Mark Lennox-Boyd MP
Patrick McLoughlin MP
Robert Key MP
Sir Irvine Patnick OBE, MP
Earl of Strathmore and Kinghorne
Viscount St. Davids
Lord Annaly
Tim Smith MP
Neil Hamilton MP
Earl of Arran
Allan Stewart MP
Charles Wardle MP
Robert G. Hughes MP

There were a number of differnt reasons for these resignations.

G7 Summit

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Prime Minister when he expects to respond to the letter to him of 3 March from the Secretary of the Japanese Labour Camp Survivors Association concerning its attendance at the G7 summit in July; and what his response will be.

The Prime Minister: A reply will be sent shortly. The arrangements for the G7 summit are in the hands of the Canadian authorities, who hold the chair at the moment, but there would normally be no objection to the presence in Halifax of non-governmental groups and organisations.

Animal Protection, South Korea

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if he will raise the issue of the illegal cat and dog meat industry operating in South Korea when he meets the President of Korea later this month; if he will press the President of Korea to introduce stricter animal protection laws; and what action he has taken to stop the illegal cat and dog meat industry in South Korea.

The Prime Minister: I met the President of the Republic of Korea on Wednesday 8 March. We discussed bilateral trade and investment, science and technology, and other issues of mutual interest. We did not discuss the issue of animal protection but the South Korean Government are aware of the concerns of the British public on this issue.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

International Development Association

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy, in relation to negotiations on the 11th replenishment of the International Development Association to propose that the accountability of IDA to both donor Governments and projected beneficiaries is improved, and that the 1993–94 reforms on information disclosure must be fully implemented.

Mr. Baldry: We will work with other donors during the negotiations on the 11th replenishment of IDA on the issues of strengthening IDA's accountability and implementation of its information disclosure policy.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy, in the negotiations on the 11th replenishment of IDA, to propose that (a) the objective of poverty reduction is fully incorporated into IDA loans, (b) social impact assessments are completed for all IDA projects, assessing social outcomes of loans as well as predicted adverse social impacts and (c) the proportion of IDA lending allocated to programmes of targeted intervention should be increased to at least 50 per cent.

Mr. Baldry: Poverty reduction is IDA's central objective, and we are ready to support measures which will enhance IDA's effectiveness in helping borrowers to implement this objective, including expanded use of social impact assessments to improve the quality of IDA's lending. We are not persuaded, however, that global targets are an efficient way of achieving this. The composition of IDA's lending as made clear in the IDA-10 donors' report, should reflect the needs of individual countries.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy, in relation to negotiations on the 11th replenishment of IDA, to propose that (a) stringent procedures for evaluating the World bank's compliance with replenishment conditions should be agreed and (b) annual evaluations of IDA should be undertaken.

Mr. Baldry: Donors already require IDA management to report annually on progress made in implementing policy agreed under particular replenishments.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to agree to the 11th replenishment of IDA only if he believes that the funds will be used in line with the objectives set out in his overseas development programme.

Mr. Baldry: IDA's priority objectives of poverty reduction, sound economic management and environmentally sustainable development closely match those of the UK aid programme.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy, in relation to the negotiations for the 11th IDA replenishment, that there should be no use of IDA funds to pay off the multilateral debt of recipient countries.

Mr. Baldry: We and other donors support continuation of IDA's fifth dimension facility, which is financed through reflows on past IDA loans and allocates additional resources to eligible IDA recipients which are on-track with their reform programmes, in proportion to interest payments due on their International Bank for Reconstruction and Development debt. We are also ready, in the context of the 11th replenishment negotiations, to consider whether there are other ways IDA might assist those few countries which have an unsustainable burden of multilateral debt, building on the suggestions made by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer at the annual meetings of the IMF and World bank in Madrid last October.

Indonesian Police

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 3 February, Official Report, column 883–84, what mechanisms he has put in place to ensure that no officers of the Indonesian police force who have been involved in activities relating to human rights abuses in Indonesia and East Timor receive scholarship awards in the United Kingdom or other training financed by his Department; and how many of those proposed as trainees by the Indonesian police force have been excluded from (a) scholarship awards in the United Kingdom and (b) other forms of training financed by his Department on these grounds in each year since 1990.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 8 March 1995]: All applicants for training under the Indonesia police project provide biographical details, have their work performance assessed, and are interviewed before selection. No officers proposed for training have been rejected on grounds of involvement in human rights abuses.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Rugby Offences

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to seek a review of the law as it relates to offences on a rugby field.

Mr. Maclean: The Law Commission is currently considering the application of the criminal law to acts of violence committed in sport, as part of its inquiry into consent as a defence to offences against the person. The Government have no plans at present to review the law in this area.

Passport Fraud

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases of false (a) full passports and (b) British visitor's passports in the past five years it has been discovered that a living person's identity has been duplicated

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The total number of fraudulent passport applications in each of the last five years was:

	Full passports	British visitor's passports
1990	854	210
1991	1,037	151
1992	984	126
1993	1,162	159
1994	1,031	116

Separate figures are not available for the number of those applicants who used false identifies posing as a living person.

Immigration Control

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to maintain immigration control-effectiveness at Dover.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Immigration officers apply a document check to all passengers arriving at Dover, and examine non-EEA nationals to assess their admissibility under the immigration rules.

In addition, immigration officers conduct surveillance on car and freight traffic to combat clandestine immigration by concealment in vehicles and containers. The number of clandestine entrants detected in the Dover area increased form 256 in 1993 to 379 in 1994.

Al Fayed Brothers

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the reasons for refusing British nationality to (a) Mr. Mohammed Al-Fayed and (b) Mr. Ali Al-Fayed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: No. It is not our practice to comment on individual applications for naturalisation.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library copies of his correspondence with the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton) concerning the Al-Fayed's.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his question on 7 March 1995, Official Report, column 116.

Asylum Seekers

Mrs. Barbara Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for asylum were determined in 1994; in how many cases (a) the applicant was granted asylum, (b) the applicant was refused and (c) the application was refused under paragraph 345 of the immigration rules.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Information on decisions taken on applications for asylum in 1994, is in the table.

Decisions[1] [2] on applications received for asylum in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, by type, 1994

Number of applicants

	[3]1994
Total Decisions	20,990
Recognised as a refugee and granted asylum[4]	825
Not recognised as a refugee but granted exceptional leave to remain	3,660

Refused asylum and exceptional leave after full consideration	12,655
Refused on safe third country grounds[5]	865
Refused under paragraph 180F of Immigration Rules[6]	2,985

[1] Decisions do not necessarily relate to applications made in the same period.

[2] Information is of initial determination decisions, excluding the outcome of appeals or other subsequent decisions.

[3] Provisional figures rounded to the nearest 5.

[4] Excluding South East Asian refugees.

[5] Refusals under para 345 of the Immigration Rules since 1 October 1994.

[6] Para 340 refusals since 1 October 1994. For failure to provide evidence to support the asylum claim within a reasonable period, including failure to respond to invitation to interview to establish identity.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers have been removed to France on safe third country grounds since 26 July 1993; and how many of those so removed have been returned to the United Kingdom by the French authorities.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Available records show that 153 asylum seeker have been removed to France on safe third country grounds since 26 July 1993. Of these, 80 have been returned to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give a breakdown by country of origin of current applicants for asylum, of the duration of their application, the time spent in detention and the proposed action, if any, by his Department.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The available information on the number of applications for asylum awaiting an initial decision as at 31 December 1994, by nationality, is given in the table. Information on the length of time these applicants have been waiting for an initial decision is not available.

As at 30 January 1995, 139 persons who were awaiting an initial decision on their application for asylum were detained.

[1] Provisional information pending the analysis of late data.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if those seeking asylum in Britain are entitled to legal aid in order to apply for (a) a writ of habeas corpus and (b) a judicial review.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have been asked to reply. Civil legal aid is available for both of these proceedings, subject to the statutory means and merits tests.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people who are seeking asylum in the United Kingdom have been detained in the past 12 months, in (a) Campsfield, (b) Haslar holding centre, (c) Rochester and (d) Rickmansworth.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Welsh Police

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers were employed full-time by Welsh police forces in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The total number of officers in Welsh forces is set out in the table. The available information does not distinguish officers employed on a full-time basis.

Year As at 31 December	Number of officers
1990	6,399
1991	6,424
1992	6,480
1993	6,438
1994	6,373

Drugs (Deaths)

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of recorded deaths from (a) methadone and (b) heroin overdose for each coroner's area of the United Kingdom last year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not collected centrally. In 1992, the latest year for which information is available, 76 notified drug addicts in the United Kingdom died because of an overdose of methadone, and 129 addicts died because of an overdose of heroin, morphine or other unspecified opiate drugs.

Data Processing Contract

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what were regarded as the relative (a) advantages and (b) disadvantages of (i) the ED5 in-house team bid and (ii) the Sema bid for the data processing contract in his Department; and on what basis he made his decision;

(2) if he will list the senior managers within his Department who were responsible for data processing work prior to the recent privatisation; and if he will indicate what has happened to them, in career terms, since the award of the contract to Sema;

(3) if his Department has paid towards the cost of redundancies of employees working on data processing at Corby who are likely to be re-employed in similar work at the site; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will make a statement about how the bids from (a) the ED5 in-house team and (b) Sema for the data processing contract were evaluated; what assumptions were made about each bid including assumptions about aspects not directly contained in the bids; if the cost of the redundancies to be paid for by his Department was added to the Sema bid; and if he will make a statement;

(5) if the evaluation process for the data processing contract covered all the services that were being undertaken on this work within his Department; and what adjustments were made in considering and comparing the bids for (a) the ED5 in-house team and (b) Sema to ensure an accurate comparison;

(6) what was the period of time between the submission to this Department of best and final offers for the data processing contract and the announcement of the decision; and what factors underlay the length of time of this interval.

Mr. Howard: In the market test of the Home Office administrative information technology services division—ED5—the final competition was between Sema Group plc and an in-house team, in association with a private sector partner. Other bidders had been eliminated at earlier stages of the market test. Following detailed negotiations with Sema Group plc and the in-house team, both submitted "best and final offer" bids which were received on 9 June 1994. Both these bidders were considered technically capable of providing the required services and their bids were compared on the basis of a final evaluation which showed that the Sema bid represented better value for money offering estimated annual savings of about £4.8 million.

The evaluation was undertaken on the basis of information put forward by the bidders in submitting their best and final offers. The evaluation covered all the services in the contract; other information technology supplies and services provided to the Home Office which are outside the scope of the contract are purchased separately.

In evaluating the offers, a number of adjustments were made to both bids to ensure that the total costs to the Home Office were being compared. The replies given to the hon. Member on 13 February, Official Report, columns 491-92, explained that details of bids and related evaluation arrangements are commercially confidential but the maximum potential costs to the Home Office of the transitional and restructuring costs in the Sema Group bid were used in the evaluation.

It took 40 days to evaluate the bids, including consideration by Ministers and officials, and arrange the announcement which was made on 19 July 1994.

The reply given to the hon. Member on 23 January at column 50 explained that with some limited exceptions staff in the undertaking were transferred to the Sema group. Subsequent redundancies are a matter for Sema plc who will meet the associated costs. Those staff in the undertaking who were redeployed before the transfer were found posts in the same grade elsewhere in the Department or in other Government Departments.

Prisoners (Mental Illness)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements generally obtain in respect of prisoners for the treatment of a prisoner for mental illness who lived in one district health authority but is imprisoned in a prison covered by another district health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Graham Allen, dated 13 March 1995.

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about arrangements for the treatment for mental illness of prisoners who are detained in establishments away from their usual districts of residence.

The general rule under which the Prison Service has operated for many years is that it meets the costs of a prisoner's health care inside prison walls itself. That would include any treatment for mental illness. If a prisoner needs to be taken to an outside hospital for treatment for mental illness, the decision as to which hospital he/she is referred to is one for the clinicians involved in his/her care. The costs of treatment are a matter for his/her usual district of residence, except where the transfer to one of the special hospitals is concerned, as they are funded centrally by the Department of Health.

Guidance issued by the NHS Management Executive states that the health authority responsible for funding the treatment of a prisoner/patient is determined by the address at which he or she was resident immediately before detention. Where that cannot be determined satisfactorily, responsibility falls on the district in which the offence, or alleged offence, in respect of which the prisoner is detained was committed.

Crime Victims Hotline

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many calls the telephone hotline for crime victims has received; how many of those calls have led to action being taken; and if he will specify the action.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 10 February 1995]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Barbara Roche, dated 13 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the Victim Helpline.

Up to 8 March this year, the Helpline had received 86 calls since its inception on 5 December 1994. The work of the Helpline is confidential and it is not possible to give details of individual calls. Of the 86 calls, sixty have been passed to prison governors for any necessary further action, such as the investigation of alleged unwanted contact from a prisoner. A further 26 calls were asking for advice on how the helpline operated.

Parole

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prisoners in the last year for which figures are available experienced a delay in their parole; what was (a) the average delay and, (b) the delay for each prisoner; and what has been (i) the total cost to public funds of these delays and, (ii) the cost for each prisoner;

(2) how many prisoners are currently experiencing a delay in their parole; and what is the cost to public funds of keeping those people in prison.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 13 February 1995]: The Parole Board and parole unit are currently dealing with 569 cases involving prisoners where decisions on parole have been delayed beyond parole eligibility date or its anniversary. It is not possible to estimate the cost to public funds until these cases have been dealt with, and it is clear (a) in which cases parole will be granted, and (b) how long after the parole eligibility date a decision is notified to the prisoner.

I regret that the information requested in relation to delays in parole during a complete year is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chechnya

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Russian Government concerning the war in Chechnya; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary raised our concerns with the Russian Prime Minister in London on 2 March.

My right hon. Friend told him that Chechnya had been a setback to Russia's relations with the west, stressed the importance of ending the fighting and reaching a negotiated settlement and urged the Russians to guarantee free access for humanitarian aid.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the cost to the Russian Government of the campaign in Chechnya; what assessment he has made of the estimate of the economist Andrei Illarionov; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is very difficult to make an accurate estimate of the costs of the Chechnya campaign.

We are aware of Illarionov's estimate of $5 billion. It is one of a number of widely varying estimates and is based on extrapolation from a limited amount of data.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the Russian Defence Minister General Pavel Grachev's call for a new offensive in Chechnya.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We continue to urge the Russians to end the fighting in Chechnya and pursue a negotiated settlement. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary made these points most recently when he saw the Russian Prime Minister on 2 March.

St. Helena

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy in respect of discrimination on wage rates for employment in Government services on St. Helena between ex-patriates from the United Kingdom and St. Helenians; in what instances in the last 10 years different wage rates were paid to each category of person for the same work; what were the wage rates; and if he will put in the Library documents which are used in the application of such a policy in St. Helena.

Mr. David Davis: There is no such policy. Pay scales offered by the Government of St. Helena to its employees do not discriminate between those recruited in the United Kingdom and St. Helenians recruited locally. An expatriate may be paid a supplement by us in addition to the local salary to bring him or her into line with UK salary levels if he or she is recruited as part of the UK's aid effort at the request of the St. Helena Government in order to fill a post for which no suitably qualified St. Helenian is available.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, how many St. Helenian males leave their families on St. Helena to work for over one year elsewhere.

Mr. David Davis: The total number of unaccompanied St. Helenian males working away from St. Helena on contracts of more than 12 months is 90, the vast majority being on Ascension island.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy in respect of censorship of radio stations in St. Helena; and if he will place the documentation which sets out that policy in the Library.

Mr. David Davis: There is no censorship of Radio St. Helena, which is the only radio station on the island.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what Government censorship policy applies to St. Helena Television.

Mr. David Davis: There is no policy of censorship of television on St. Helena. A television station will soon start and will operate under licence by Cable and Wireless. The company is required under the terms of the licence to notify the Governor of details of the services to be offered. The licence controls the broadcast of obscene or seditious material or material that would endanger security or public morals.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many St.

Helenian mothers leave their families on St. Helena to work for over one year elsewhere.

Mr. David Davis: The total number of unaccompanied St. Helenian mothers working away from St. Helena on contracts of more than 12 months is 22.

Chelsea Fans, Bruges

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British citizens were deported from Belgium as a result of the Bruges versus Chelsea football match; how many were arrested; how many have been charged; and how many have been or are likely to be prosecuted.

Mr. David Davis: Approximately 1,000 Chelsea fans, either without tickets or with forged tickets or with invalid tickets for the Bruges fans area of the stadium were deported from Belgium as a result of the Bruges v. Chelsea football match. Forty-two fans were detained for disorderly behaviour and one fan was arrested and charged with assault. None were prosecuted and all were released within 24 hours.

Middle East

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with other permanent members of the UN Security Council on ways of resuscitating the middle east peace process; and what were the conclusions.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During the debate in the UN Security Council on 28 February on Israeli settlement building in the occupied territories, we reiterated our continued support for the peace process and our condemnation of settlement building. Separately, on behalf of the EU, the French Foreign Minister wrote to the United States Secretary of State about the Troika's recent visit to theregion in support of the peace process.

Iraq

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support or co-operation the Iraqi-British interests group delegation to Iraq had from his Department.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Iraqi-British interest group neither requested nor received assistance from my Department for its visit to Iraq. However, at least one member of the group called, in a personal capacity, on our embassy in Jordan after the visit, and the normal courtesies were extended.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on levels of military activity in Iraq between Government forces and various rebel groups.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are aware of reports of clashes that have taken place between Iraqi Government forces and opposition groups over the past few days, mainly in the areas of Kirkuk and Irbil. It is difficult to assess the level of activity. Fighting appears to have broken out following the Iraqi opposition reports of Iraqi troop movements and shelling of Kurdish villages. We are continuing to monitor the situation closely.

Burma

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries which are known to him as supplying arms to Burma.

Mr. Goodlad: Together with our EU partners we imposed an arms embargo on Burma in July 1991. That remains in force.

We have no reliable information about the sale of arms to Burma by other countries.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made regarding attacks by the Burmese forces on the Karen people.

Mr. Goodlad: Together with our EU partners we have expressed our concerns about recent developments directly to the ruling military regime in Burma, the State Law and Order Restoration Council—SLORC. We called in the Burmese ambassador on 17 February to reinforce the EU action and to urge the SLORC to call an immediate halt to the current offensive. On 10 March the EU issued a statement condemning the attacks and calling upon the SLORC to find a swift and peaceful solution to the ethnic minority problem in Burma.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from other Governments critical of British attempts to stimulate trade links with the SLORC regime in Burma.

Mr. Goodlad: None.

Angola

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to send military and police observers to assist the UNAVEM III peacekeeping operation in Angola.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to contribute military or police observers to UNAVEM III. As my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement told the House on 23 February, we have agreed in principle to a United Nations request to provide a logistics battalion to the peacekeeping operation in Angola.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what specific international initiatives are being taken to try to stabilise the internal security position in Sierra Leone.

Mr. Baldry: We are working to bring greater international attention to the conflict; in particular with the UN and Commonwealth. We are in close touch with EU and African partners. Last month the UN and commonwealth secretaries-general sent their special representatives to Sierra Leone to examine ways of bringing about a settlement.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what timetable has been drawn up by the Government of Sierra Leone for the return of the country to democratic rule.

Mr. Baldry: The existing timetable of the Government of Sierra Leone provides for parliamentary elections before the end of 1995. Although the internal security situation may lead to some delay, we expect the Government to press ahead with the transition to civilian rule as rapidly as practicable.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance the Government of Sierra Leone has sought from the international community to deal with its internal disorder.

Mr. Baldry: In response to requests from the Government of Sierra Leone, the UN and commonwealth secretaries-general have sent special representatives to Freetown to explore ways of bringing about a settlement. We have given our strong support to these initiatives.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what improvements are planned to assist in the identification of parliamentary questions and answers.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: A new method of identifying written parliamentary questions by attaching a unique number to each question has been developed by the House authorities, in conjunction with Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

With the wider use of questions in electronic form and the need to relate the electronic version to the printed page, the Committee has agreed that an identifying number should in future be shown beside each question when it appears on the Notice Paper and the Order Paper. As questions with an identifying number begin to be answered, the number will also start to appear in the Official Report.

The number will not exceed five digits, and the sequence of numbers will begin afresh at the beginning of each parliamentary Session. The number will not be used to "count" individual Members' questions, but will simply reflect the current total of questions tabled in the House.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage by how much the money disbursed by the Football Trust has been reduced since the introduction of the national lottery.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 7 March 1995]: Details of the weekly revenue made available to the Football Trust for distribution in the current financial year were given in response to a written question from the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry) on 2 February, Official Report column 778. The national lottery was introduced on 14 November 1994. A table detailing the trust's revenue since the start of 1995 is as follows.

			Football Trust Income
Week ending	Reduction in pool betting duty (£)	Spot the Ball (£)	Total (£)
7 January 1995	393,654	189,906	583,560
14 January 1995	404,662	205,343	610,005
21 January 1995	408,250	206,575	614,825
28 January 1995	408,357	197,103	605,460
4 February 1995	401,609	204,514	606,123
11 February 1995	398,305	200,988	599,293
18 February 1995	398,545	195,498	594,043

Performance Targets

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his oral answer of 27 February, Official Report, column 680, if he will publish the performance targets for the key areas in which services are delivered by his Department together with the results that have been achieved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 6 March 1995]: Details of the achievement of key performance targets by my Department appear in our annual report, which was published on 9 March, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. My Department's agencies and sponsored bodies produce their own reports.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the cost of his Department's expenditure on water and sewerage in (a) the current year and (b) each of the three previous years.

Mr. Horam: The cost to my Departments of water and sewerage in the current year to date and in each of the three previous years is as follows:

	Cabinet Office £	COI £	HMSO £
1991–92	62,069	52,623	70,762
1992–93	73,952	32,106	111,602
1993–94	66,766	3,128[2]	98,266
1994–95[1]	98,798	n/a	102,290

[1] This is a part-year figure as not all invoices to the end of the year have yet been submitted.
[2] The charging regime changed from rateable value to metered supply costs in 1993–94.

Civil Service

Mr. Trend: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement about changes in the arrangements for recruitment to the civil service.

Mr. Horam: The Command Paper "The Civil Service: Taking Forward Continuity and Change (CM 2748)" indicated the Government's intention to reinforce the principle of selection on merit and to enhance the role of the independent civil service commissioners. The approval of the Privy Council is currently being sought to a revised civil service Order in Council to give effect to these new recruitment arrangements. Copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

From 1 May 1995 the civil service commissioners will be responsible for interpreting the fundamental principle of selection on merit on the basis of fair and open competition for all civil service recruitment, including the circumstances in which exceptions to the principle can be made within the parameters of the Order in Council; publishing a simple, but binding, recruitment code; auditing departments' and agencies' systems for compliance with their recruitment code and publishing on account of their audit in their annual report. They will continue to approve appointments from outside the civil service to the new senior civil service, but not to appointments immediately below that level and to the fast stream entries. Such appointments, like all other recruitment, will be subject to the commissioners' new recruitment code.

Departments and agencies will be required to publish information about their recruitment systems and their use of the permitted exceptions to fair and open competition. This will make information available publicly about recruitment to the civil service and the extent to which exceptions to the recruitment principle are made, apart from very short-term appointments.

Making these changes now does not, of course, prejudice the commitment in the Command Paper to consider legislation on the civil service to put the powers of the civil service commissioners and the Minister for the Civil Service on a statutory basis at a later date.

Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what measures he is taking to combat sickness absenteeism in (a) the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency, (b) the Civil Service Occupational Health Service, (c) Chessington Computer Centre and (d) the Central Office of Information

Mr. David Hunt: Management of sickness absence at next steps agencies is the responsibility of chief executives. I have therefore referred the hon. Member's question to the chief executives of the four agencies concerned, who will be writing to him separately.

Letter from Thea Harvey to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 9 March 1995:

Michael Geddes has asked me to reply to your PQ on sickness absence.

The Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency formally monitors the sickness absence level of its staff on a monthly basis.

However, the initial responsibility lies with line managers who are required to meet informally with staff when the attendance level is unsatisfactory.

If there is no improvement, formal procedures begin which, ultimately, would end with dismissal as a result of irregular attendance.

Letter from E. C. McCloy to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 8 March 1995:

Your question to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on measures taken to combat sickness absence in the Civil Service Occupational Health Service has been referred to me to reply directly.

Hitherto, line managers initiated investigations on receipt of sickness absence records triggered from central records at Chessington at 14 days in 1 year for those under 45 years and 21 days in 1 year for those over 45 years.

Over the last year a small number of staff developed serious medical conditions which resulted in unavoidable long periods of absence. In a small agency, 120 full time staff, the effect of a few individuals with long term absence on the overall percentage sickness absence can be misleading. In 1993, 75 staff had no recorded sickness absence. The corresponding figure for 1994 was 92.

The apparent rise in percentage absence has led us to review our management procedures. Line managers will, in future, initiate informal review of absence after 7 days of self certificated absence or 14 days of certificated or combined certificated/self certificated absence in any one year.

Where such action fails to resolve the situation, discussion with senior managers will result, where appropriate, in a request for an assessment by an occupational physician independent of line managers. Where absence continues thereafter at and unacceptable rate formal procedures for inefficiency will be instigated in accordance with OHSA policy.

Letter from R. N. Edwards to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 2 March 1995:

I refer to your enquiry of 1 March to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster regarding the measures being taken to combat sickness absenteeism at Chessington Computer Centre.

The Centre's procedures for the monitoring and control of sick absence were reviewed during 1994. As a result, new guidance notes for line managers were issued in September 1994 formally introducing new procedures. The changes in procedure introduced were intended to emphasise the line manager's role in the control of absence. Return to work interviews have been formally introduced, and warning letters to staff, whose absence levels exceed that normally expected, are to be issued by line managers rather than by personnel managers.

These steps have been taken in addition to the measures already in place which include the provision of a welfare service for staff, and the use of the Occupational Health Service for advice on medical and health care issues.

Absence levels across the centre are monitored on a monthly basis and measured against set targets. Over the last year there has been a downward trend in overall absence rates. Progress towards targets will continue to be observed closely and procedures reviewed and revised as necessary.

Letter from Mike Devereau to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 6 March 1995:

The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has asked me to respond to your PQ about managing sickness absenteeism.

You are already aware, from my 26 January letter to you, of our figures over recent years. When compared against other organisations, our absence record might be regarded as not being a case of especially serious concern. However, I am by no means complacent and I do, of course, fully recognise that any reduction in sickness levels can contribute directly to our successful year-on-year achievement of efficiency gains.

We have recently carried out an internal pilot study, which has been a valuable overall indicator, but now recognise that more analytical work needs to be carried out if we are to achieve meaningful benchmark comparisons. We believe that we need to build up a more complete picture of absences analysed by grade; by age range; by sex; staff with no absences; distribution of illness by length of absence; types of illness, and comparison across various work areas. This further analysis is in hand.

We are also awaiting report of a Health Screening exercise, in which —on a voluntary basis—a high percentage of staff recently underwent physical and lifestyle checks. This screening was carried out for us by an independent external organisation, and we have asked that they report back to us on their overall findings—including details of health profiles, smoking and drinking patterns, and any observations they can provide on matters such as stress levels.

Health screening is one of a number of initiatives taken by COI in recent years to improve health standards. Other initiatives have been the introduction of 'no smoking' policies; provision of a small fitness centre; eyesight testing for VDU users; and training in safe manual handling procedures.

Depending on the further analysis work referred to above, it is likely that our action plan will encompass:

(i) setting up better monitoring systems;

(ii) carrying out regular benchmarking against 'best practice' organisations;

(iii) providing more detailed guidance to line managers, so as to encourage them to take even greater personal responsibility for controlling absences;

(iv) if appropriate, provide training for line managers in the management of sickness absence;

(v) providing more counselling to staff with comparatively poor sickness records, and developing our system so that—even after a single day's absence—staff are formally interviewed by the manager to welcome them back and discuss the nature of the illness.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Register of County Court Judgments

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will amend the Register of County Court Judgments Regulations so as to exempt hon. Members carrying out their public duties from having to pay for searches of county court judgments.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There are no plans to change the requirement to pay a fee for searches of the register of county court judgments.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on what date his Department transferred its responsibility for logging county court judgments to Registry Trust Ltd.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Although the Lord Chancellor retains statutory responsibility for the register of county court judgments, responsibility for the day-to-day operation of the register was passed to Registry Trust Ltd. on 30 December 1985.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department in what way payments for search requests on county court judgments by hon. Members carrying out their public duties have changed since the Lord Chancellor's departmental responsibility for these matters was transferred to Registry Trust Ltd.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No changes have been made to the requirement to pay a fee for searches of the register of county court judgments since Registry Trust Ltd. assumed responsibility for the operation of the register.

Civil Enforcement

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the report on the future of civil enforcement, which was lodged with him in early 1994.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor undertook a public consultation in 1992 on whether the law in this area should be changed. He is currently considering the outcome of that consultation.

Court Summonses

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make it his policy to ensure that court summonses in the county court are served by first class post; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor recently conducted a public consultation exercise on the policy of serving summonses by first class post. The responses to this consultation are currently being evaluated.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Internet

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consideration his Department is giving to the use of an encryption key which would allow the state access to all information on the Internet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Internet is an open and unrestricted environment for information exchange, in which encryption is currently little used. The Government, along with other member states, are currently discussing the future use of encryption in such networks, taking account of both commercial needs and the interests of security and public order.

Italian Car Taxation

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has made to the European Commission concerning the Italian Government's proposals to reintroduce the imposta straordinaria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Government are very concerned about the difficulties which Italian car taxation has been causing exporters to Italy of luxury cars. This problem has been raised at regular meetings of the Internal Market Advisory Committee, which is chaired by the European Commission. In addition, I wrote to the Italian Finance Minister last month, urging the Italians not to reintroduce the imposta straordinaria, which we understood was then under consideration. We were pleased to learn that the Italian Government subsequently published their budget without including this tax.

BSkyB

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the Office of Fair Trading's decisions on 7 March relating to the packaging and pricing of BSkyB programming to cable operators.

Mr. Jonathon Evans: I welcome the success of the Director General of Fair Trading in securing undertakings from BSkyB which meet his concerns.

Exports to Gibraltar

Mr. Bennett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the export licence application refused for the export of goods to Gibraltar in 1993 was for equipment specified as ML3 in group 1 of part III of schedule 1 to SI 1992 No. 3092.

Mr. Ian Taylor: No. The equipment in question was specified as ML15.

It has not been the practice of successive Governments to reveal details of licences or applications unless the requirements of confidentiality are outweighed by the public interest.

Petrol Pumps

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to continue the requirement for petrol pumps to be checked by trading standards officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Trading standards officers have the power to test petrol pumps, as items of weighing or measuring equipment in use for trade. TSOs test petrol pumps before first use and from time to time during use; the frequency of this subsequent testing will depend on the local situation.

Plans have already been announced—in the booklet "Deregulation—Cutting Red Tape", January 1994—for a scheme to allow manufacturers to self-verify their own production if they so choose. This would not affect the in-use testing by TSOs.

Plantsbrook Group plc

Mr. David Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report into the Service Corporation International plc Great Southern/Plantsbrook acquisition will be published.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission is due to report on the acquisition of Plantsbrook Group plc by Service Corporation International on 24 March. The Department aims to publish MMC merger reports within 20 working days of receipt.

Voluntary Agreements

Mr. David Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what powers he or the Director General of Fair Trading have to review voluntary agreements entered into to avoid references to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Director General of Fair Trading has a continuing responsibility to keep commercial activity under review. That can extend to voluntary agreements or undertakings and the degree of compliance with them. Where he considers it appropriate, the director general can make a reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Gas Consumers Council

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the reduction in the Gas Consumers Council's budget for 1994–95; and what assessment he has made of the impact of these cuts on the staffing of the council.

Mr. Eggar: The Gas Consumers Council grant-in-aid for 1994–95 is £2,711,000, a reduction of £209,000 on the previous year. it is for the council to decide how best to use its resources, including staffing levels, to carry out its duties.

Gas Bill

Mr. Nigel Griffiths : To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will provide additional resources to (a) the Office of Fair Trading, (b) the Office of Gas Supply, and (c) the Gas Consumers Council to reflect their increased work load as a consequence of additional responsibilities contained in the Gas Bill.

Mr. Eggar: I do not believe that the Gas Bill will add materially to the responsibilities of the Office of Fair Trading and the Gas Consumers Council. The number of Ofgas staff will rise by about 50 when the Director General of Gas Supply takes over the DTI's functions for gas metering as envisaged under the Gas Bill. In addition, some 10 to 20 posts plus consultancy support may be needed at Ofgas to manage the transition to a competitive market, although this should fall once a fully competitive market is established.

Newspapers

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will consider the increased carriage charges faced by retail newsagents from monopoly supplying wholesalers;

(2) what representations he has received about the examination by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission of the newspaper industry in respect of carriage charges.

Mr. Jonathan Evans [holding answers 9 March 1995]: The National Federation of Retail Newsagents has raised this matter in correspondence, as has Lekkerland UK.

The MMC report on the supply of newspapers in England and Wales gave no adverse public interest finding in respect of carriage charges, and no power arose to act on them.

However, a reference to carriage charges was included in the voluntary code of practice to govern the supply of national newspapers agreed with the industry following publication of the MMC report., This reference ensures that such charges are not used as a means of circumventing the prohibition on refusal to supply, by making supply economically unattractive to new applicants.

If new retailers feel that their carriage charges are incorrect, they should take the matter up in the first instance with the wholesaler. If this does not resolve the dispute the retailer should make use of the arbitration procedure set out in the code of practice.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will reconsider the matter of carriage charges in the newspaper trade following the recent increases.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission's 1993 report on the supply of newspapers in England and Wales included no adverse public interest findings in respect of carriage charges, and therefore no power arose to act on them.

However, a reference to carriage charges was included in the voluntary code of practice to govern the supply of national newspapers, agreed with the industry following publication of the MMC report. This ensures that such charges are not used as a means of circumventing the prohibition on refusal to supply by making supply economically unattractive to new applicants. If new retailers feel that their carriage charges are incorrect, they should take the matter up in the first instance with the wholesaler. If this does not resolve the dispute, the retailer should make use of the arbitration process set out in the code of practice.

Electricity Bills

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the percentage of unpaid electricity bills last year overall and in each of the electricity company areas.

Mr. Page: This is a matter for the companies concerned.

Gas Bills

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the percentage of unpaid gas bills last year overall and in each of the gas company areas.

Mr. Page: This is a matter for the companies concerned.

Rom-Data

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the circumstances that led to Rom-Data in Cornwall receiving a grant; and what steps he is taking to recover the money.

Mr. Page [holding answer 9 March 1995]: My officials lodged an invoice with the liquidator of Rom-Data in January seeking recovery of the grant paid to the company. Otherwise, I have nothing to add at present to the answers given to earlier questions from the hon. Member.

Companies House

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the full cost of the consultancy work carried out by SRU/MMD Ltd. on the privatisation review of Companies House since it was appointed in October 1992 until he made his announcement on the future of Companies House on 20 December 1994, Official Report, column 1046.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The cost of the consultancy work was £283,000 excluding VAT. I have already written to the hon. Member correcting my earlier answer on this subject and a copy of that letter has been placed in the Library of the House.

Northern Electric

Mr. McWilliam: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what contact Sir Charles Powell had between 1984 and 1991 with civil servants in connection with the Trafalgar House bid for Northern Electric; with whom he was in contact; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jonathan Evans [holding answer 9 March 1995]: None.

Mr. McWilliam: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what contact or communication Ministers or officials in his Department had with Sir Charles Powell as non-executive director of Trafalgar House, in connection with (a) the Trafalgar House bid for Northern Electric and (b) the subsequent decision not to refer the bid to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jonathan Evans [holding answer 9 March 1995]: At a meeting on 1 December 1994, Sir Charles Powell advised my right hon. Friend for Energy and Industry of the possibility of Trafalgar House making a bid for Northern Electric and asked whether the Government had any plans for early redemption of the special shares in regional electricity companies.

On 15 December, my right hon. Friend confirmed that the Government would retain their special shares in the RECs until 31 March 1995 and that they would not be redeemed early. In his role as Minister with responsibility for the energy industry, my hon. Friend met Mr. David Morris, chairman of Northern Electric, on 19 January 1995 and Sir Charles Powell, on behalf of Trafalgar House, on 23 January.

At both meetings, and in accordance with our usual procedures, my right hon. Friend made it clear that he could listen only to the companies' views about the bid and could not discuss the bid itself. In addition to these meetings, a number of letters were received from Sir Charles and others on behalf of Trafalgar House, and from Northern Electric and others on behalf of Northern Electric.

Sir Charles also made a number of telephone calls to officials in the office of my right hon. Friend about procedural matters relating to the bid. The content of these calls was not referred to Ministers. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade was not involved in any of these contacts between Sir Charles and the Department.

Mr. McWilliam: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions or communications Mrs. Annabel Keswick, political adviser to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, had with Ministers and civil servants in the Department of Trade and Industry in respect of the Trafalgar House bid for Northern Electric.

Mr. Jonathan Evans [holding answer 9 March 1995]: None.

Mr. McWilliam: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what account was taken of the recommendations of the Foreign Affairs Committee on its third Session report of Session 1993–94, HC 271, on the Pergau dam relating to Trafalgar House in evaluating that company's bid for Northern Electric;

(2) what evaluation he made of the relationship between Trafalgar House and Jadine Matheson when deciding not to refer the Trafalgar House bid for Northern Electric to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jonathan Evans [holding answer 9 March 1995]: In making his decision not to refer the bid to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade took account of all relevant factors. His decision was in accordance with the advice of the Director General of Fair Trading.

Coach Companies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will refer the activities of (a) Stagecoach and (b) Badgerline to the Office of Fair Trading on the grounds of predatory pricing.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Director General of Fair Trading will consider any complaints of anti-competitive behaviour which the hon. Member puts to him.

Arms Sales (Burma)

Mr. Miller: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the value of British arms sold to Burma since 1990.

Mr. Ian Taylor: For reasons of commercial confidentiality, it has been the policy of successive United Kingdom Governments not to disclose details of defence trade with individual countries.

"Energy Paper 65"

Ms Ruddock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assumptions he has made in "Energy Paper 65" concerning the amount of coal likely to be burnt in English and Welsh power stations in the year 2000; and what was provided by RJB Mining to prospective investors as likely to be sold to English and Welsh power stations in 2000.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 7 March 1995]: The amount of coal burnt in power stations is not an assumption, but rather a result of the modelling process described in "Energy Paper 65" paragraph 2.26. Estimates of the coal tonnage burnt in 2000 in English and Welsh coal power stations vary between 23 to 38 million tonnes. I understand RJB Mining plc prospectus contains its estimates.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what levels of gross domestic product growth are assumed in the central forecasts to 2000 in "Energy Paper 65"; and how this figure compares with current Treasury forecasts.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 7 March 1995]: In the central GDP growth scenarios in "Energy Paper 65", gross domestic product is assumed to grow by an average rate of approximately 3.1 per cent. per annum between 1994 and 2000. This compares with a current Treasury assumption of an average GDP growth rate of about 3.2 per cent. per annum over the same period.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what evaluation his Department has made of the discrepancies between the central forecasts for United Kingdom carbon emissions in 2000 made in "Energy Paper 65" and those published by DRI/McGraw Hill on 13 February.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 7 March 1995]: The detailed assumptions which underlie DRI's forecast for the UK have not been made public.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what independent peer review process he has undertaken before publishing "Energy Paper 65".

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 7 March 1995]: In the course of developing the models used for the projections in "Energy Paper 65", discussions took place with various experts in the energy modelling field. In addition the following two papers have been published which discuss the research then in progress:

Hodgson, Derek and Miller, Keith (1995) "Modelling UK energy demand", in Barker, T., Ekins, P. and Johnstone, N. (eds) "Global Warming and Energy Demand", London: Routledge.

Miller, Keith (1993) "The DTI Energy Model", in Hawdon, D. (ed) "Recent Studies of the Demand for Energy in the UK", Guildford: Surrey Energy Economics discussion paper series.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assumptions have been made regarding the contribution of combined cycle gas turbines to the generation mix in 2000 in "Energy Paper 65"; and what proportion is assumed to be operating at baseload.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 7 March 1995]: It is estimated that between 16 and 18 GW of CCGT capacity will be in place in 2000. In most of the scenarios all the CCGT capacity runs on baseload. The details of electricity supply industry capacity are given in annexe C.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has included within "Energy Paper 65" any carbon emissions from energy extraction processes within the North sea.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 7 March 1995]: The treatment of offshore emissions in "Energy Paper 65" is consistent with the national atmospheric emissions inventory and takes into account offshore carbon dioxide emissions from gas flaring and from fuel used for production.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made in "Energy Paper 65" of the likely carbon savings which the Energy Saving Trust will achieve in 2000.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 7 March 1995]: In "Energy Paper 65", 1.6 million tonnes of carbon are assumed to be saved by the Energy Saving Trust in 2000.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made in "Energy Paper 65" of the likely carbon savings which will occur by 2000 within industry; and if he will provide a breakdown of the contribution that will be made by each relevant Government initiative.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 7 March 1995]: By 2000, it is estimated that savings of between 2 million and 2.5 million tonnes of carbon will be made within the business sector, which comprises industry and commerce. "Energy Paper 65" estimates show that the energy saved is likely to be less carbon-intensive than was assumed in the original climate change programme. The carbon savings comprise emissions saved directly in the business sector through lower consumption of fossil fuels and indirectly in the electricity supply industry through lower electricity demand from businesses.

"Energy Paper 65" does not separately distinguish all the individual Government initiatives in the business sector.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what independent research he has commissioned to assist him in the preparation of "Energy Paper 65".

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 7 March 1995]: The development by the science policy research unit of a boiler and combined heat and power model was part funded with the private sector. This model has been run by DTI as part of the "Energy Paper 65" exercise. In addition, both DTI and DOE have various on-going research programmes with the Building Research Establishment and energy technology support unit.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assumptions he has made in "Energy Paper 65" concerning the likely output of Magnox power stations in 2000.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 7 March 1995]: The Magnox stations owned by Nuclear Electric and British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. are assumed to be producing around 20 TWh in 2000.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what implications for local environment air quality he envisages as a consequence of the increased diesel car usage in 2000 forecast in "Energy Paper 65".

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 7 March 1995]: "Energy Paper 65" does not assess local air quality, but a recently published report by the energy technology support unit—"UK Petrol and Diesel Demand: Energy and Emissions Effects of a Switch to Diesel"—commissioned by the Departments of Transport and Trade and Industry, projected significant overall reductions in both national and urban emissions of carbon monoxide, hydrocarbons, oxides of nitrogen and particulates from vehicle exhausts by the year 2000, compared with 1990. These projections took into account the expected improvements from tighter emission standards already agreed, as well as projections of traffic growth and vehicle mix in line with those of "Energy Paper 65".

Ms Ruddock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assumptions are made in "Energy Paper 65" regarding the relationship between the growth in domestic product and the growth in energy demand; and how these differ from the assumptions made in "Energy Paper 58".

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 7 March 1995]: The growth in gross domestic product is one of a number of factors influencing energy demand. Paragraphs 3.4 to 3.16 of "Energy Paper 65" provide details of the GDP growth rate assumptions used in both "Energy Paper 65" and "Energy Paper 58". The primary energy ratio gives an indication of the overall relationship between the GDP an energy demand. Paragraphs 6.8 to 6.9 describe the energy ratio in the new projections. This can be compared with "Energy Paper 58", where the primary energy ratio declined by 0.1 to 1 per cent. per annum between 1990 and 2005.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the methodology employed in the collection of carbon emission figures in "Energy Paper 65" is identical to the methodology employed by the intergovernmental panel on climate change.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 7 March 1995]: The emissions projections in "Energy Paper 65" are based on the United Kingdom's national atmospheric emissions inventory and are consistent in almost all respects with the methodology recommended by the intergovernmental panel on climate change. The net effect on the projections of the differences in methodologies is broadly neutral.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made in "Energy Paper 65" of the likely carbon savings which the imposition of 8 per cent. value added tax on domestic fuel will achieve in 2000.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 7 March 1995]: The central estimate from the "Energy Paper 65" projections for the likely carbon saving brought about by the imposition of 8 per cent. VAT on domestic fuel is approximately 0.4 MtC in 2000.

Post Offices

Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guidelines he has approved between Post Office Counters and the Post Office Users National Council concerning the relocation of Crown post offices; and if he will list cases where such guidelines have not been followed.

Mr. Page: This is a matter for the Post Office and the Post Office Users National Council.

A. F. Budge Ltd.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he (a) received the report from the receiver and (b) expects to make a decision in respect of A. F. Budge.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: A report under the provisions of the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 was received from the joint administrative receivers of A. F. Budge Ltd. on 28 September 1993.

Proceedings for disqualification against three directors of A. F. Budge Ltd.—Anthony Frederick Budge, Mrs Janet Budge and Michael Austin Yates—were commenced on 8 December 1994.

Regional Assistance

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whom he consulted in respect of regional assistance given by his Department within the remit of the Industry Act 1972.

Mr. Page: Regional assistance is now given under the Industrial Development Act 1982. My officials consult as necessary to establish whether a project is eligible to be considered for assistance and whether the project meets the criteria of the regional selective assistance scheme.

Construction Tile Industry

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which consultants and at what cost advised his Department in respect of sector analysis of the construction tile industry in each of the last five years.

Mr. Page: My Department is not the sponsor Department for this sector. However, in maintaining a body of market analysis for a range of departmental work, my Department uses the published material of a number of market research consultancy firms.

Interreg

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much money there has been allocated by way of the Interreg II fund from the EU for projects in (a) Wales, (b) England, (c) Northern Ireland and (d) the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Eggar: The Commission divided Interreg's 2,900 mecu budget between 2,300 mecu for the objective 1 areas and 600 mecu for the rest. Within each of these totals, the poorer eligible areas have larger allocations per head. The figures are:

	Allocation £ million	Population thousands	Per capita £
Objective 1
All	1811	22,146	82
Northern Ireland	52.7	1,358	36
Republic of Ireland	105.1	1,735	61
Other
All	472.4	46,859	10
Wales	10.6	595	18
England	22.3	2,238	10

Pensions (Derivatives)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has about the value of pensions business currently handled by United Kingdom insurance companies; what information he has concerning the extent to which such insurance companies are trading in derivatives; what steps he is taking in the light of the Baring affair to issue guidance to such derivative-trading insurance companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jonathan Evans [holding answer 9 March 1995]: Premium income received by UK insurance companies during 1993 in respect of personal and occupational pensions business was estimated to be £14.6 billion.

United Kingdom insurance companies may be end users of derivatives but should not be traders. Provided they have adequate controls over their use, insurance companies may prudently use derivatives for the purposes of reducing the investment risks inherent in their portfolio or for efficient portfolio management. My Department issued guidance to all UK insurers in December 1994 setting out the objectives which an adequate system of control over their investments, including derivatives, must be able to satisfy. At the same time, we asked companies for a state of play report on the extent to which their systems complied with the guidance and, where necessary, on what remedial action they had put into effect. We are currently reviewing the responses and will take such follow-up action as is necessary.

HEALTH

Nebulisers

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if nebulisers are available on prescription in (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales.

Mr. Sackville: Hand-operated nebulisers are available on general practitioner prescription. It is for health authorities to make decisions about the best use of their resources on the basis of clinical priorities and local needs. Hospital consultants may prescribe equipment such as powered nebulisers as part of national health service treatment. Health authorities may provide equipment prescribed as part of NHS treatment either permanently or on loan and in these circumstances no charge may be made.

Epilepsy

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement about research into sudden unexplained death in epilepsy.

Mr. Bowis: The Department is aware of issues and concerns surrounding sudden unexplained death in epilepsy. However, I am not aware of any current research on this subject. The main agency through which the Government support medical and related biological research in the United Kingdom is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and is always willing to consider scientifically sound proposals. The council has considerable relevant work on neuroscience research and has identified neurological disabilities, including epilepsy, as an area in which it wishes to encourage applications.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths were attributed to epilepsy in the United Kingdom for each year since 1990 in each health authority for which information is available.

Mr. Bowis: Information on the number of deaths, by health authority, will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on co-operation with the Department for Education in ensuring that all schools have an active epilepsy policy.

Mr. Bowis: My officials will be consulting Department for Education officials as part of my Department's initiative on epilepsy, which I announced in the House on 17 January.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans her Department has to encourage an increase in the number of brain operations for intractable non-lesional epilepsy.

Mr. Bowis: Decisions on treatment are the responsibility of the doctors concerned, who are required to exercise their clinical judgment, informed by a patient's medical history. Health authorities and trusts are responsible for ensuring that the full range of services is available, taking account of their priorities and resources.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what training is given to medical practitioners and their staff to ensure that there is a minimum of risk to (a) expectant mothers with epilepsy, (b) mothers with epilepsy and (c) children of mothers with epilepsy.

(2) what advice her Department gives to health authorities in respect of carers for children with epilepsy requiring the best possible training; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The education and training of health professionals is a matter for the relevant royal college. However, as part of the programme that I announced on 17 January, we shall be seeking to raise epilepsy awareness among general practitioners and primary care teams.

Asbestos

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment the Chief Medical Officer of Health has made of health dangers associated with asbestos; what new steps her Department proposes to take; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The principal diseases caused by exposure to asbestos are asbestosis, a pneumoconiosis; primary carcinoma of the lung; malignant mesothelioma; and diffuse mesothelioma. Asbestos-related diseases take a long time to develop and are nearly always the result of occupational exposure to asbestos fibres.

Asbestos-related diseases are prescribed as industrial diseases. Such diseases occurring now largely reflect past industrial exposure before the introduction of the controls, enforcement of which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Older People (Health Care Costs)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much of the NHS annual budget is spent on people over 65 years of age in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Bowis: We estimate that around 42 per cent. of total hospital and community health service expenditure is on people aged 65 and over, who comprise about 16 per cent. of the population.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total amount recouped by her Department through prescription charges in (a) 1992, (b) 1993 and (c) 1994; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the right hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 9 December 1994 at column 397. Prescription charges provide valuable additional income to the national health service at a time of competing demands for resources.

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in respect of what proportion of prescriptions the patient claims exemption from prescription charges, what checks are made to monitor the accuracy of such claims; and what proportion of such claims are found to be false.

Mr. Malone: In 1993, 82 per cent. of prescription items were dispensed free of charge by community pharmacists and appliance contractors to patients who declared that they were exempt or entitled to remission of charges under the national health service low income scheme. Regular checks of patients declarations carried out by family health services authorities indicate that about 1.5 per cent. are incorrect. I am determined to take action to stamp out this abuse and all other forms of fraud against the NHS.

Sight Tests

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients had their eyes tested in each year since 1991; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: The number of national health service sight tests paid for by family health services authorities in England is shown in the table:

Year	millions
1990–91	4.154
1991–92	4.979
1992–93	5.528
1993–94	5.935

The number of private sight tests is not available.

Measles Rubella Vaccine

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many yellow card reports of suspected adverse reactions linked to the autumn measles rubella vaccination campaign have been received by the Committee on the Safety of Medicines and Medicines Control Agency since 9 December 1994.

(2) if she will list the complications notified by the yellow card reports linked to the autumn measles rubella vaccination campaign received since 9 December 1994 in respect of (a) the number of individuals affected, (b) the number of signs and symptoms, (c) the number of more serious reactions, (d) the number of allergic reactions, (e) the number of reported convulsions and (f) the number with late neurological damage.

Mr. Sackville: Since 9 December 1994 the Medicines Control Agency has received a further 50 yellow card reports of suspected adverse reactions to measles rubella vaccine. A report for a suspected reaction does not necessarily mean that the vaccine caused the reaction. Signs and symptoms described in these reports have been classified as reactions. One hundred and fifty affected children were reported as having 281 reactions, of which 87—affecting 67 children—were considered to be serious. There were 15 allergic reactions, eight convulsions and seven late-onset neurological conditions, five of whom have recovered and two are recovering. Further information is being sought for some of the reactions to investigate their relationship with immunisation. It is estimated that eight million children have been immunised. Reporting of serious adverse reactions to date is therefore low.

Generic Prescribing

Mr. Elfyn Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total expenditure on prescribed generic drugs in (a) 1993 and (b) 1994; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: The net ingredient cost—that is, the basic cost of drugs, less discount and excluding dispensing fees, container cost on cost allowance, oxygen payments and value added tax—of drugs prescribed and dispensed generically in England in 1993 was £341.6 million. For the first three quarters of 1994 the cost was £345.4 million.

Asthma

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the mortality rates for asthma for each of the last five years, broken down by ethnic origin.

Mr. Sackville: Data on asthma deaths by ethnic origin are not available centrally.

The mortality rates for asthma for the last five years for which data are available are shown in the table:

Mortality rates[1] for asthma (ICD [2] code 493), England and Wales, 1988–92

Year	Rates
1988	4.0
1989	3.9
1990	3.6
1991	3.7
1992	3.5

[1] Deaths per 100,000 population.
[2] International Classification of Diseases, 9th Revision.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of cases of asthma reported in each family health service authority for each of the last five years, broken down by ethnic origin.

Mr. Sackville: Data on newly diagnosed episodes of asthma are not available by ethnic origin or family health services authority. Aggregated data from returns submitted to the Birmingham research unit of the Royal College of General Practitioners are available in the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys annual reference volume, "Communicable Diseases—Series MB2", copies of which are available in the Library. The latest data published are for the year 1992.

Glaucoma

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of glaucoma were diagnosed in (a) 1990, (b) 1991, (c) 1992, (d) 1993 and (e) the last 12 months; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available in the precise form requested. It is estimated that in England 101,000 patients suffering from glaucoma were treated by general practitioners during 1991–92—source: "Morbidity Statistics from General Practice". Comparative figures are not available for the other years requested. For hospital in-patients, the numbers of finished consultant episodes, ordinary admissions and day cases, during the latest available period of five years, were as follows:

Year	Number
1992–93	22,802
1991–92	19,826
1990–91	17,534
1989–90	17,427
1988–89	15,373

Source:
Hospital Episode Statistics.

Information on numbers of out-patient cases with glaucoma is not available centrally.

Birth Certificates

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many full and short version birth certificates are issued each year by the Registrar General; and how many applications are made by a person who is not the individual on the certificate nor related to them.

Mr. Sackville: In 1994 the Registrar General issued 245,961 full birth certificates and 12,469 short birth certificates. The Registrar General does not distinguish between applicants who are the subject of the certificate or their relatives and other applicants.

Arachnoiditis

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what further representations she has received about arachnoiditis and the use of Depo-Medrone;

(2) if she will make a statement on arachnoidits.

Mr. Sackville: We have received a number of representations about Depo-Medrone and arachnoiditis. Depo-Medrone is licensed for use by certain specified routes of administration only and is not recommended for epidural or spinal administration. If a doctor, however, believes that use of a licensed drug in an unlicensed manner is the only suitable treatment for a patient he or she may supply or administer the drug, having obtained informed consent from the patient.

Dental Services

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is taking to reverse the present shortages of NHS dentists in the south-west.

Mr. Malone: At 31 December 1994 the number of dentists under contract to family health services authorities in the south-west was 1,245, 32 more than at 30 June 1992.

Family health services authorities can apply for permission to appoint salaried dentists in areas where there are shortages. We have recently given approval for two salaried dentists to be appointed by Devon family health services authority and for one salaried dentist to be appointed by Gloucestershire family health services authority.

The Green Paper, "Improving NHS Dentistry", proposes a wider role for the community dental service to treat those who cannot have ready access to general dental services.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many family health services authorities have appointed salaried dentists; how many salaried dentists have been appointed since July 1992; for what additional provision district health authorities have contracted; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: The number of family health services authorities that have employed salaried dentists and the number employed are shown in the table. In addition to those family health services authorities listed, Berkshire, Devon, Dorset, Hampshire, Hereford and Worcester, Kingston and Richmond, Northamptonshire, Gloucestershire and Solihull have also been granted permission to employ salaried dentists. At 30 September 1992 there were 2,191 whole-time equivalent hospital and community health service staff in England, excluding hospital practitioners and clinical assistants who also work as general and dental practitioners.

Table 1 number of salaried dentists for whom a contract has opened since 31 July 1992 by family health service authority

This is the count of the number of salaried dentists who have contracts with FHSAs.

This is not the number of salaried dentists employed at the requested dates.

(Some salaried dentists have "open contracts" with FHSAs.

This means they are ready to work when required but are not actually working).

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many letters concerning problems in gaining access to NHS dentistry have been received by her Department from individuals in the last five years; and if she will list those organisations that have written to her on the subject.

Mr. Malone: Since February 1990, the Department of Health has received approximately 350 letters from members of the public which were exclusively concerned with problems in gaining access to national health service general dental services.

The Department has also received a similar number of letters from hon. and right hon. Members, community health councils, local authorities, professional organisations and patient groups.

Family health service authorities continue to be the best source of information on the local availability of general dental services, and all authorities report that they are able to help patients to find NHS dentists.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total sum paid out to general dental practitioners working with the NHS in each month since April 1991.

Mr. Malone: The information is shown in the table.

Payments to general dental practitioners working with the national health service in England in each month since April 1991

Month	1991–92 £ million	1992–93 £ million	1993–94 £ million	1994–95 £ million

Notes:

1. The data are for England only and are drawn from monthly cash-based financial information system reports submitted by family health services authorities and the Dental Practice Board. The January data are the latest available for 1994–95.

2. Expenditure figures show the total of all general dental service payments in each month, including payments for salaried dentists and emergency dental service clinics. The figures also include the cost of employers' superannuation contributions.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost per course of (a) NHS dental treatment, (b) private dental treatment and (c) all dental treatments for an adult patient in 1993–94, 1992–93, and 1991–92.

Mr. Malone: The available information is shown in the table. Information on private treatment is not available centrally.

Note:
1. The information refers to the general dental service only. The cost shown is the fee paid to the dentist.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average annual number of courses of dental treatment for an adult patient in England; and what is the average cost to (a) the NHS and (b) the patient.

Mr. Malone: The information requested is shown in the table.

Information for courses of treatment completed in the year ending 31 March 1994

Average number of courses of treatment per adult patient	1.62
Average annual cost to the NHS of treatment per adult patient	31.34
Average annual cost to the adult patient	£27.27

Notes:
1. The average number of courses of treatment per patient has been estimated from a sample of 70,000 courses of treatment.
2. The costs shown are the costs of adult treatment. Regular continuing care payments are not included.
3. The average to the patient represents the average for all adults, not the average to charge payers alone.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what level of satisfaction was recorded by the British social attitudes survey about NHS dentistry in each year since 1993.

Mr. Malone: "British Social Attitudes: the 11th Report", 1994–95 edition, found that 58 per cent. of respondents surveyed in 1993 were satisfied or very satisfied with national health service dentists. A further 18.6 per cent. were neither satisfied nor dissatisfied. The comparable figures from the 9th report, 1992–93 edition, were 75.3 per cent. and 16.2 per cent.

Family health services authorities report that they can help patients to find national health service dentists. The Government meet over two thirds of the cost of the general dental service. All those under 18 get free treatment and a quarter of treatments are provided free or at reduced cost.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in each family health services authority, and in total, have requested help in finding a dentist since July 1992.

Mr. Malone: The information will be placed in the Library. Family health service authorities consistently report that they can help patients to find national health service dentists.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by how much payments to dentists have exceeded Government estimates for each year since 1987; and how much was paid by Government and how much by patients.

Mr. Malone: The information is shown in the tables.

Overpayment of general dental practitioners fee income, 1987–88 to 1993–94, Great Britain

Notes:

1. Column (1) shows the difference between actual gross fee payments made to dentists in the financial year and the estimates made of sums due to GDPs in the Dental Rates Study Group. The estimates include allowances for GDPs expenses. For 1993–94 an expenses allowance was not formally agreed but a notional amount decided upon for administrative and monitoring purposes.
2. Column (2) shows the difference between target net income (after balancing) and the actual net income, allowing for the practice expenses incurred. This is calculated using information from a special exercise carried out by the Inland Revenue.
3. DRSG principals are essentially general dental practitioners who have worked in the GDS for the whole of the financial year in question.
4. The overpayment sums have been allocated to patient and Government by using total net and gross expenditure figures.
5. Payments made under determinations 11-1X of the Statement of Dental Remuneration (eg maternity payments, seniority payments and direct reimbursement of expenses) are not included in the above.
6. The net payment figures for 1987–88 excludes the balancing adjustment for associate dentists (£225 "underpayment" per principal; £3.37 million in total). Subsequent to 1987–88 this adjustment was not required.
7. The figures in columns (2) and (4) for 1993–94 are provisional, and are subject to revision.

Adoption

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement about the timetable for adoption law reform.

Mr. Bowis: The Government intend to introduce new adoption provisions along the lines of the White Paper,"Adoption: The Future", published in November 1993, as soon as parliamentary time permits.

Smoking

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures have been undertaken by her Department to monitor the effects of the no-smoking campaign.

Mr. Sackville: The national three-year no-smoking campaign, which was launched in December 1994, is being undertaken by the Health Education Authority on behalf of the Department of Health. It is being evaluated in terms of its effectiveness in changing knowledge, attitudes and behaviour in the general population.

Individual components of the campaign will also be monitored for impact among specific groups.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the reduction in treatment costs of smoking-related diseases since the beginning of the current no-smoking campaign; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: It is not possible to relate recent reductions in smoking prevalence to current levels of smoking-related disease. Many smoking-related diseases have a lengthy development period and most of these manifesting themselves now are related to the smoking habits prevailing some 20 or 30 years ago.

Intensive Care (Children)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the review of intensive care for children undertaken by regional health authorities and regional branches of the NHS Executive.

Mr. Sackville: The reviews confirm that plans have been made to improve the provision of paediatric intensive care. The Department is consulting on the further work required to guide the implementation of these plans towards achieving an accessible and cost effective service nationally.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to identify children's intensive care as separately defined within purchaser-provider service arrangements.

Mr. Sackville: The specification of contracts agreed between purchasers and providers for supplying children's intensive care service is a matter for local determination.

Heart Disease

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to initiate research into hypertrophic cardiomyopathy; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council which receives its grant-in-aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the cardiac diseases researched by her Department and the amount spent on each, for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: The list of research projects recently commissioned by the Department of Health on coronary heart disease—cardiac disease—and their cost is as follows:

Recently completed research

the effects of passive smoking: review and analysis of data on the contribution of passive smoking to coronary heart disease (1-11-93 to 30-4-94—£24,335);

British Regional Heart Study: prediction and prevention of cardiovascular disease (1-10-85 to 31-12-95—£311,807);

Lipids and coronary heart disease (1-1-87 to 31-3-92—£25,000);

Coronary heart disease: the role of the GP (1-10-90 to 30-9-92—£181,232);

Randomised controlled trial of coronary risk factor intervention (1-1-93 to 31-12-93—£299,192);

National Study of Health and Growth: assessing coronary disease risk factors and bronchial reactivity in children (1-12-91 to 31-12-92—£30,123);

(All the amounts quoted for research are for the entire duration of each project).

Ongoing Research

Nottingham Heart Attack Register (1-8-88 to 31-3-98—£657,283);

Whickham revisited: cardiovascular proposal (1-3-93 to 28-2-95—£83,000);

Prospective markers of anti-oxidant status in relation to future cardiovascular disease, lung and stomach cancer (1-4-93 to 31-3-95—£183,972);

CSAG: Waiting times for coronary revascularisation (1-10-94 to 31-1-95; £38,489);

Development and validation of a weight-losing dietary intervention to reduce the risk of diabetes and CHD in South Asians (1-7-94 to 31-12-96—£176,987).

Figures for on-going projects are estimates.

Ambulance Response Times

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the numbers and percentage of emergency ambulance calls, in each ambulance service area, which took (a) up to 14 minutes, (b) each subsequent minute up to 60 minutes and (c) over 60 minutes, since April 1994.

Mr. Sackville: Information on calls up to 14 minutes in urban areas can be found in the patients charter, copies of which are available in the Library. The remaining information is not available centrally.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what amount of compensation has been paid to members of the public by the London ambulance service due to delays in reaching patients calling the emergency service in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Nutrition Task Force

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures she has taken to ensure that the targets of the Government's nutrition task force are met; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The nutrition task force was established to help meet "The Health of the Nation" diet and nutrition targets. The task force's "Eat Well!" programme comprises a number of projects for this purpose. The ministerial Cabinet committee, chaired by my right hon. Friend the Lord President of the Council, and the Chief Medical Officer's health of the nation working group, play a role in ensuring that progress towards targets is being made.

Prescription Forms

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations she has received about the information required to be obtained by those in pharmacies from those presenting prescription forms; what assessment she has made of the intrusiveness of the information required; and what arrangements are being made to print prescription forms in larger type and in ethnic minority languages;

(2) which professional bodies were consulted about the design and content of the prescription forms to be issued shortly; on which dates such consultation took place; if consultation resulted in favourable reaction to the content; how many prescription forms have been printed to date; how many remain to be printed; what is the total cost of printing and distribution; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: From 1 April 1995 the already wide-ranging national health service prescription charge exemption and remission arrangements presently covering 81 per cent. of prescription items will be further extended to include all recipients of disabled working allowance who had less than £8,000 capital at the date of their claim. The prescription form FP10 must be amended to reflect that.

I am also taking the opportunity to amend the declaration to make it applicable to all patients. In doing so the Government are responding to concerns of both the Health Select Committee and the Audit Commission, who have suggested that the laxity of the present patient declarations leave the way open for fraudulent claims. By asking all patients to sign the patient declaration we are taking an important first step in stamping out that abuse.

We are currently discussing with the general medical services committee of the British Medical Association and the pharmaceutical services negotiating committee about incorporating these changes into their terms of service. I hope to lay amending regulations in the summer.

There have been no additional printing and distribution costs. The changes were incorporated into the form during a regular print run. It has never been our practice to print prescription forms either in large print or in ethnic minority languages.

Special Hospitals

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many special hospital patients are currently awaiting discharge to medium-secure units.

Mr. Bowis: The Special Hospitals Service Authority is responsible for special hospitals services; the hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the authority.

Autism

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of autism have been recorded for each year since 1990.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally. It is estimated that the prevalence rate of classic autism is between 0.04 and 0.05 per cent. of the population and that about 0.21 per cent. may exhibit some features of autism.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of autism treatment in the NHS for each year since 1990; and what is the projected cost for 1995.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally. District health authorities are funded for purchasing health services for people with autism through their general allocations.

The table shows expenditure on the purchase of health care for people with learning disabilities, which includes autism, by health authorities in England. Expenditure for 1990–91 is not available.

Year	£
1991–92	936,503,244
1992–93	1,068,035,565
1993–94	1,132,665,837

Edgware General Hospital

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of ambulances reach a patient in Barnet within the patients charter target of 14 minutes; and what proportion of emergencies were taken to (a) Edgware general hospital and (b) Barnet general hospital in each year since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to contact the chief executive of the London ambulance service, Mr. Martin Gorham.

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what are the estimated cost and future savings of closing the accident and emergency unit at Edgware general hospital;

(2) what is the population currently served by (a) Edgware general hospital and (b) Barnet general hospital;

(3) what plans there are to treat sufferers of dementia by the creation of a new unit at Edgware general hospital; and what representations she has received from the Barnet branch of the Alzheimer's Disease Council on the subject.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Barnet health authority, Mr. Brian Salinger, for details. I have no record of a representation from the Barnet Alzheimer's Disease Council.

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from the Wellhouse Trust concerning the level of resources at Barnet general hospital in the light of the increase in the number of in-patients from the Edgware area.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Drug Overdoses

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of recorded deaths from (a) methadone and (b) heroin overdoses in each of the past three years.

Mr. Sackville: The data are published in table 10 of the publication, "Mortality statistics, injury and poisoning, England and Wales", series DH4, Nos. 16–18, copies of which are available in the Library.

Minor Accident Treatment

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of patients attending a minor accident treatment unit are subsequently referred to an accident and emergency department.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available centrally.

Eating Disorders

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines she has issued to health authorities and trusts in relation to the employment of nurses or assistants who are or have suffered from anorexia nervosa, bulimia or other eating disorders.

Mr. Malone: Guidance on pre-employment assessment of prospective national health service employees is contained in HSG (94) 51, "Occupational Health Services for NHS staff", copies of which are available in the Library.

Neuro-Surgery Units, London

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the neuro-surgery units situated in (a) Greater London, (b) South Thames region and (c) North Thames region; and what were their capacity and occupancy rates on the night of 6 March.

Mr. Sackville: The information is as follows:

Neuro-surgery units situated in Greater London:

Greenwich Healthcare NHS Trust, The Bethlem and Maudsley NHS Trust, St. George's NHS Trust, The Hammersmith Hospitals NHS Trust, The Hospitals for Sick Children, Havering Hospitals NHS Trust, The National Hospital for Neurology and Neurosurgery, The Royal Free Hampstead NHS Trust and The Royal Hospitals NHS Trust.

Neuro-surgery units in South Thames:

Greenwich Healthcare NHS Trust, The Bethlem and Maudsley NHS Trust, St. George's NHS Trust and Mid Sussex NHS Trust.

Neuro-surgery units in North Thames:

The Hammersmith Hospitals NHS Trust, The Royal Free Hospital Hampstead NHS Trust, The Hospitals for Sick Children, Havering Hospitals NHS Trust, The National Hospital for Neurology and Neurosurgery and The Royal Hospitals NHS Trust.

Information on units' capacity and occupancy rates on the night of 6 March is not available centrally. South Thames regional office is conducting an urgent investigation into the circumstances surrounding the tragic death of Malcolm Murray, and capacity and occupancy levels is one of the areas being investigated.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the neuro-surgery units which were contacted by Queen Mary's hospital, Sidcup, on the night of 6 March in relation to the case raised by the hon. Member for Woolwich in his letter dated 7 March; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. William Wells, chairman of South Thames regional health authority.

South Thames regional office is conducting an urgent investigation into the circumstances surrounding the tragic death of Malcolm Murray.

ENVIRONMENT

Waste, Drigg

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the dates of each seizure and checking of waste consignments to Drigg made by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution during the year 1990; which of these consignments breached the Drigg authorisation; and if he will give the nature of the breach.

Mr. Atkins: One seizure was made at the Drigg site on 31 August 1990. The consignment was found to include one aerosol can with free liquid, and a dry cell battery. This constituted a very minor breach of the Drigg disposal authorisation.

Mr. Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the waste consignment for Drigg seized by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in December 1994 conformed to all the conditions within the Drigg authorisation; and when Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution report was completed and delivered to his Department.

Mr. Atkins: Results of the waste consignment for Drigg seized in December 1994 are not yet known.

Countryside Commission

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the annual emolument paid to members of the Countryside Commission; and what are the total emolument and expenses paid to each current serving member since his or her appointment.

Mr. Atkins: As chairman of the Countryside Commission, Sir John Johnson's remuneration is £37,065 for a three day week. The remaining commissioners each receive remuneration of £5,320 based on a minimum input of two days per month, although a number of commissioners regularly devote more time than this.

Expenses are paid in line with standard civil service terms and conditions. Total expenses claimed by each commissioner from April 1993 to date are as follows. Earlier figures are not readily available.

Sir John Johnson KCMG	10,779.07
Rachel Thomas	10,361.00
David Fletcher MBE	5,033.90
Professor Allan Patmore CBE	2,814.97
Sir Richard Carew Pole	2,194.86
Lord Denham[1]	1,593.46
Sarah Ward	1,345.55
Rodney Swarbrick CBE[1]	805.03

[1] Appointment from 1 August 1993.

Exhaust Cleaning

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from local authorities requesting Government assistance to fund the fitting of test exhaust cleaning devices on (a) buses, (b) public sector vehicles, and (c) other vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My Department has had initial discussions with one local authority about the possibility of providing Government support for assessment and monitoring work associated with the experimental fitting of particulate trap assemblies to public sector vehicles. There are no plans, however, to provide funds for the fitting and operation of such devices.

Information Technology

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to encourage local councils to adopt a strategic approach to making the new information and communications technologies available to the local community.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: None. It is for individual councils to determine their own local priorities and strategies, including about such matters as the use of information and communications technologies.

Rents

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average rent for new lettings by housing associations; and what was the equivalent figure for 1989.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Information collected by the National Federation of Housing Associations shows that the average rent for housing association new lettings in the quarter ending 30 September 1994 was £45.63.

The equivalent figure for 1989 was £23.64.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average rent paid by tenants of (a) private landlords and (b) local councils: and what were the equivalent figures in each category for 1978–79 in actual and real terms.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Estimates of average rents paid before deduction of housing benefit or its earlier equivalent are as follows. The latest figures for private rents are for 1993–94 and so local authority rents are shown for the same year:

	Tenants of local authorities	Tenants of private landlords £ per week
1993–94 actual	33.70	60.00
1978–79 actual	5.90	6.30
1978–79 at 1993–94 prices	16.90	18.10

Local Government Reorganisation

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses have been received by his Department from residents of Dorset, excluding Bournemouth and Poole, since the Local Government Commission published its preferred options for reorganisation; and how many (a) supported the proposed changes and (b) rejected them.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: As at 6 March, we had received 1,776 letters from members of the public residing in Dorset outside Bournemouth and Poole. Of these 69 support the Local Government Commission's final recommendations for Dorset and 1,707 are against the recommendations.

Trust Councils Initiative

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research his Department has undertaken into, and what assessment has been made of, the trust councils initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We have no plans for a trust councils initiative.

Packaging Waste

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how his Department intends the producer responsibility industry group plan to be financed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Government have introduced enabling powers in the Environment Bill to place an obligation on businesses to recover and recycle packaging waste. Individual businesses may choose to discharge this obligation by acting alone or by collaborating with others in an "exemption scheme" which will deliver targets on their behalf. The internal financing of exemption schemes is a matter for business, subject only to satisfying the requirements of competition legislation and the registration requirements of the environment agencies.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what progress has been made to produce a plan for recovering between 50 per cent. and 75 per cent. of all packaging waste by the year 2000;

(2) what are the criteria by which his Department judged the plan for reducing waste produced by the producer responsibility industry group.

Mr. Atkins: The producer responsibility group was formed in 1993 to respond to the challenge to businesses concerned with packaging to develop an industry-led approach for delivering recovery and recycling targets for packaging waste. Among the objectives which Government set the PRG were the need for an effective organisation, spanning all the relevant business sectors, which can both draw up a plan and put it into action; and the need for a commitment by business that it will meet the costs necessary to fund new collection and processing capacity, together with a mechanism for raising the necessary finances.

The PRG produced its final report in November last year and has now disbanded. Work on refining its approach and the ways in which industry might organise itself to meet recycling targets has been taken forward by the VALPAK working representative advisory group—V-WRAG.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what legislation the Government have introduced to reduce packaging.

Mr. Atkins: Having considered the request from businesses in the packaging industry, we have included three clauses, numbers 76-78, in the Environment Bill which will, subject to parliamentary approval, establish enabling powers to promote or secure the re-use, recovery and recycling of products or materials when they become waste. We propose to apply these powers to packaging waste.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates have been made of the rise in packaging over the last 10 years.

Mr. Atkins: No estimates exist as to variations in the amount of packaging as a whole over the last 10 years. The Department of the Environment "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics", however, does include statistics for consumption of some types of recyclable packaging. This publication is available in the Library.

Sulphur Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what measures have been introduced to ensure the United Kingdom meets the targets for the 70 per cent. reduction in sulphur dioxide emissions by 2005 and 80 per cent. by 2010, as agreed under the UN Economic Commission for Europe's second sulphur protocol;

(2) what action his Department has taken to reduce sulphur dioxide emissions;

(3) what measures he has introduced to ensure the United Kingdom meets its targets for the 40 per cent. reduction in 1980 level of sulphur dioxide emissions by 1998 as agreed under the Brussels directive of 1990.

Mr. Atkins: The Secretary of State published the United Kingdom national plan for the reduction of sulphur dioxide and nitrogen dioxide emissions in December 1990. The plan aims to deliver the UK commitment, under the 1988 large combustion plants directive, to a 40 per cent. reduction in 1980 levels of sulphur dioxide emissions from large combustion plants by 1998.

My Department is preparing a national sulphur strategy to meet the targets for reduction in total sulphur dioxide emissions to which the UK is committed under the UN Economic Commission for Europe's second sulphur protocol and will be consulting on the strategy in due course.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the level of sulphur dioxide emissions in the United Kingdom in each year since 1979.

Mr. Atkins: The list following gives estimated emissions of sulphur dioxide, by source, for 1979–1992.

Estimated emissions of sulphur dioxides (SO_2) by source category for 1979–1992

Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics No. 16 1994

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been carried out by his Department into the effects of sulphur dioxide emissions.

Mr. Atkins: The Department has undertaken a large programme of scientific research over several years into the effects on the environment of sulphur dioxide emissions. The scientific findings have been reviewed by several of the Department's expert advisory groups, including the review group on acid rain, the terrestrial effects review group and the critical loads advisory group. Copies of their reports are available in the Library of the House.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the differences in the sulphur dioxide emissions produced by hazardous waste incinerators and those produced by cement kilns.

Mr. Atkins: All operators of the hazardous waste incinerators and cement plants are required to monitor sulphur dioxide emissions. Cement plants produce higher amounts of sulphur dioxide. This is because hazardous waste incinerators dispose of wastes that mostly contain no sulphur, while cement plants use fossil fuels and raw materials that contain significant amounts of sulphur.

Local Government Finance

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his oral statement of 2 March on the explicit promises made by county and district councils about improved co-operation and delegation of functions, if he expects such promises to involved more or less local government expenditure; and what account he will take of such promises in future local government finance settlements.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We would expect better co-operation and delegation to enable local services to be improved at no extra cost.

Alkyl Phenol Ethoxylates

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been carried out by his Department on the effects of alkyl phenol ethoxylates on human health.

Mr. Atkins: We and the Department of Health have commissioned the Institute for Environment and Health to review current information on possible oestrogenic effects of chemicals, including alkyl phenol ethoxylates, entering the environment. It is expected to be completed by mid 1995.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been carried out by his Department on the level of alkyl phenol ethoxylates in British rivers.

Mr. Atkins: The report from our current research on the effects of sewage effluent on fish, will include some data on levels of alkyl phenol ethoxylates in rivers. This report is expected to be completed by mid 1995.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action his Department has taken to phase out the use of alkyl phenol ethoxylates.

Mr. Atkins: In accordance with a recommendation of the Paris Commission the United Kingdom is committed to phasing out by the year 2000, those uses of nonyl phenol ethoxylate which lead to discharge to water. This recommendation was agreed in 1992 and, in the UK, is pertinent for uses of nonyl phenol ethoxylate in industrial cleaning agents; it has not been used in domestic cleaning agents for the last 15 years. As part of the phase-out, the UK has surveyed all the main uses of ethoxylates. We are now considering the substitution of materials which are less damaging to the aquatic environment.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the allocation of the European regional development fund to each of the objective 1, 2 and 5b regions in England for the current programming period.

Mr. Curry: The amount of European regional development fund grant available under each objective 1, 2 and 5b area in England for the current programming period is set out in the table. The programme documents for each objective area contain financial details in ecus. The table shows the sterling equivalent, at the current exchange rate, for the European regional development fund.

New Households

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new households are projected in the west midlands; and if this figure is in line with the regional guidance plan.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The recently-published 1992-based household projections indicate 2,338 million households for the west midlands by 2011. This is an increase of 295,000 over the number in 1991. The draft regional planning guidance for the west midlands was based on earlier—1989-based—projections, which showed an increase of 244,000 households between 1991 and 2011. The Secretary of State is considering the need for any revision of the guidance in the light of the new figures.

Standard Spending Assessments, Dorset

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what have been the increases in the various categories of standard spending assessments for Dorset compared with inflation for each year since 1990.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The information requested is as follows:

Percentage change in Dorset County Council's Standard Spending Assessment 1990–91 to 1995–96 by major service block

	Service Block								Change in GDP deflator[3]

[6]Dorset Police Authority will be responsible for providing police services in the Dorset area from April 1995.

Housing

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to develop an energy efficient growth in housing in the west midlands; and if he will make it his policy to take greater account of environmental factors in respect of housing developments.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Measures to secure greater energy efficiency in housing and to take account of energy efficiency and other environmental factors when housing is being planned are part of the Government's strategy for sustainable development.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the number of new housing starts in January and February; and what was the figure for these months in 1994.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: It is estimated that in Great Britian there were 13,200 new dwellings started during January 1995 and 15,400 in January 1994, on a not seasonally adjusted basis. In February 1994 16,600 dwellings were started.

These figures are as reported to the Department together with estimates for those local authorities which have not sent in statistical returns for their districts. They cover the total of housebuilding by private builders, housing associations and the public sector.

Figures for February 1995 are not yet available.

Nirex

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the role of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution at the planning inquiry into the application by Nirex to build a rock characterisation facility at Longlands farm.

Mr. Atkins: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has no formal role at the planning inquiry into the application by Nirex to build a rock characterisation facility at Longlands farm.

Housing, Wandsworth

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the chief executive of Wandsworth council, Mr. Gerald Jones, on the report of Mr. Rowland Little, the appointed auditor for the council, on the council's housing, homeless, and temporary accommodation policies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: There have been no such discussions. This is a matter between the local authority and the district auditor.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the present number of homeless families from the London borough of Wandsworth who have now been placed in bed-and-breakfast or temporary accommodation outside the borough.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The information requested is not available in the Department.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many council properties that have been sold in the London borough of Wandsworth in each year since 1980;

(2) how many local authority properties in the London borough of Wandsworth have been sold under the priority sales scheme in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Tables presenting latest available information on total sales of council homes reported by each local authority from 1979–80 to March 1994 are in the Library. These also show the number of sales made under right-to-buy legislation, but information collected on other sales does not identify individual schemes within a local authority.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authority houses or flats were built in the London borough of Wandsworth in each year since 1980.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The publications "Housebuilding in England by Local Authority Area: 1980 to 1989" and "Local Housing Statistics" show estimates of housebuilding completions in local authority areas of London. They show completions by sector, including activity by local authorities.

"Housebuilding in England by Local Authority Area: 1980 to 1989" shows figures for the period 1980 to 1984. "Local Housing Statistics" shows figures for later years: Issue No. 103 covers the years 1985 to 1990; No. 105 covers 1991; No. 106 covers 1992; and No. 110 covers 1993. Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Local authorities' primary housing tasks are now the efficient management of their own stock of housing and enabling other organisations to provide new housing, and Housing associations are the main providers of new social housing.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the number of registered homeless families in the London borough of Wandsworth in each year since 1980.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The information requested is available in a table in the Library which summarises the reported data on homeless households accepted for permanent rehousing by each local authority in England for the years 1979 to 1993.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people were on the housing waiting lists in the London borough of Wandsworth in each of the last five years.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The annual housing investment programme—HIP—returns submitted by Wandsworth show the following numbers of households on their housing waiting lists on the 1 April in each of the last five years:

1990: 7,292
1991: 7,027
1992: 7,384
1993: 6,913
1994: 6,561

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the present number of empty council-owned properties in the London borough of Wandsworth;

(2) how many local authority properties in the London borough of Wandsworth are for sale.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The latest information held by my Department relates to dwellings vacant on 1 April 1994 when Wandsworth borough council reported a total of 615 vacant dwellings, of which 439 dwellings were to be sold. The data comes from its 1994 housing investment programme return, a copy of which is in the Library.

Objective 1 Projects

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evaluation he has made of the delivery and adequacy of support to small and medium-sized enterprises via objective 1; and whether the range of support on offer meets their needs.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to him on Monday 20 February, Official Report, column 93.

It is early days to make an evaluation of that support, since projects are only starting to get underway. We will be monitoring and evaluating objective 1 projects closely.

Social Housing

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, columns 685–86, on what date he expects the background information on the need for new social housing lettings to be published.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We will make the information available as soon as it is possible.

Housing Associations

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if housing associations are regarded by his Department as subject to management supervision by his Department or by the Housing Corporation for the purpose of the EU public procurement directive.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: No, but the Government are considering the position of housing associations in the light of a recent ruling by the European court regarding similar bodies in another state, and legal opinions brought to my Department's attention. I will write to the hon. Member when we have completed this further consideration.

Hampshire County Council

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people have been employed by Hampshire county council each year since 1979.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The information is as follows.

Number of people employed by Hampshire County Council in General Services (excluding Law & Order services) at June of each year:

Year	Numbers employed
1979	51,748
1980	47,419
1981	48,669

Notes:
(i) Polytechnics and higher education institutions were transferred from the local authority sector in April 1989.
(ii) Further education institutions became the responsibility of the Further Education Funding Council in April 1993.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the annual expenditure of Hampshire county council each year since 1979 expressed in cash terms, real terms and as a real term percentage increase or decrease on 1979 and on the previous year.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The available information is as follows. There were two changes in the system of financing authorities in the period covered by the figures in the table, along with a number of changes in local authority responsibilities. In particular, in April 1989 responsibility for polytechnics was taken out of local authority control, and in April 1993 responsibility for further education was transferred to the Further Education Funding Council. Net revenue expenditure increased in 1994–95 through expenditure financed by the care in the community special grant. For these reasons it is not always valid to make comparisons either between financial systems, or between years within a financial system.

County Council Reserves

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in rank order the amount of cash reserves held by each of the county councils.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The latest available estimates of the level of reserves as at 1 April 1994 are as follows. The authorities are ranked by order of reserves excluding those held by schools, non-LMS; schools' reserves are shown separately, LMS. The first column, non-LMS reserves, includes funds, which may be substantial, held for specified purposes which may not be available to the council for general use, for example funds to finance capital projects to which the authority is committed; and insurance funds where the authority is bearing its own insurance risks. These estimates are subject to amendment as authorities finalise their accounts. Compatible data on the use of balances in 1994–95 which would be needed to derive an estimate of the level of reserves at 1 April 1995 is not yet available.

Student Accommodation

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to bring in a system of national licensing for those properties in multiple occupation which are inhabited by students.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The period for responses to my Department's consultation paper on the case for licensing houses in multiple occupation closed on 18 February. Several of these responses drew attention to the particular problems associated with student accommodation. We are now considering what action to take in the light of these responses and an announcement will be made in due course.

Local Government Conduct

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines he issues regarding the part councillors who declare an interest in a planning application can take in making decisions on that application.

Sir Paul Beresford: We have issued guidance on disclosure of members interests in DOE circular 8/90—"The National Code of Local Government Conduct", and in DOE circular 9/92—"Pecuniary Interests of Members of Local Authorities".

Water Bills

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the percentage of unpaid water bills last year overall and in each of the water company's areas.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is not collected either by my Department or the Office of Water Services.

Northumberland Coast

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the present position with regard to the proposed special protection area on the Northumberland coast; if he will make a statement; what plans he has to introduce restrictions on the collection of bait from the foreshore on the north-east coastline; and what powers he has to designate an area for protection when it is to the seaward side of the mean low water mark.

Sir Paul Beresford: My officials are consulting owners and occupiers. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to introduce any restrictions on bait digging above those currently in force at the Lindisfarne national nature reserve. The Conservation (Natural Habitats, &c.) Regulations 1994 provide for the designation of European marine sites.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sites of special scientific interest have been (a) damaged and (b) destroyed by (i) development and (ii) other means in England in each year since 1979.

Sir Paul Beresford: The information is not available in the form requested. Statistical information on damage to SSSIs in Great Britain between 1 April 1984 and 31 March 1991 is set out in the annual reports of the former Nature Conservancy Council. Since 1 April 1991, similar detail for England is contained in English Nature's annual reports. Copies of annual reports are in the Library.

Hedgerows

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what length of hedgerow has been lost in England each year since 1979.

Mr. Atkins: Reliable figures are not available in the form requested. However, two surveys carried out for my Department covering the periods 1984–1990 and 1990–1993 indicated net losses of hedgerow in England of 85,000 km and 49,000 km respectively. These figures include losses caused by lack of management as well as by deliberate removal. The latest survey showed that the rate of removal of hedges during 1990–93 more than halved compared with 1984–90.

Homelessness

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households have been accepted as homeless in each local authority in rural areas in England in each year since 1979.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The data collected from local authorities on homeless households accepted for permanent re-housing does not differentiate between households from rural and non-rural areas. A summary print showing the reported acceptances in each local authority area in England for the years 1979 to 1993 is in the Library.

Eland House

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement concerning facilities and arrangements for disabled people working in or visiting his Department's new building, Eland house.

Sir Paul Beresford: Eland house is currently under construction and will then be fitted out by my Department. It is my policy that we should follow best practice in providing facilities for disabled persons and we will ensure that the facilities and arrangements for disabled persons at the new building comply fully with code of practice, BS5810, and part M of the Building Regulations 1991.

Enterprise Zone, Tyneside

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, when he expects to announce the location of the proposed enterprise zone on Tyneside following the closure of Swan Hunter's shipyard, following the oral statement of 12 May 1993, Official Report, columns 801–02.

Sir Paul Beresford: The three local authorities concerned, and the Tyne and Wear development corporation, have submitted a package of sites for consideration. This is currently being examined by Ministers and an announcement will be made as soon as possible.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the implications for the protection of the environment which will result from the agreement reached between British Nuclear Fuels plc and Scottish Nuclear, for the long-term management and reprocessing of spent thermal oxide nuclear fuels at Sellafield.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 7 March 1995]: Any contract entered into by British Nuclear Fuels is a matter for that company, but any operations at Sellafield which result from such a contract will have to comply with the limits and conditions of the site discharge authorisations. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is satisfied that compliance with these authorisations will fully protect the environment.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Parliament Buildings, Stormont

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to restore the Assembly chamber at Parliament buildings, Stormont, after the fire; and if the new chamber will be a replication of the previous design and decor.

Mr. Moss: Following the completion of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and forensic investigation, the process of salvaging material which might assist with restoration has begun, as has a detailed examination of the extent of the damage. When these exercises are completed, a decision will be taken on the restoration of the chamber.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to receive the report from Sir Reginald Doyle on the fire and related matters at the Parliament buildings, Stormont.

Mr. Moss: My right hon. and learned Friend expects to receive the report from Sir Reginald Doyle before the end of March.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide a breakdown by age of the members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Sir John Wheeler: The age distribution of members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary as at 1 March 1995 is set out.

Citizens Charters

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the costs of production and distribution of the Northern Ireland charter and where copies can be obtained by the public.

Sir John Wheeler: The Northern Ireland citizens charter which was published on 5 February 1992 cost £30,000 to produce and £4,200 to distribute. It is sold through HMSO at a cost of £8.50 per copy. A free summary guide is available from the Northern Ireland citizens charter unit on a freephone number, 0800 243174, and by using a freepost address, Freepost BE111 Belfast BT4 3SX, and at libraries and citizen's advice bureaux offices.

Copies of the main charter can be inspected at libraries and citizen's advice bureaux offices.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the costs of production and distribution of, and the availability of the charters of the Government Departments in Northern Ireland, with special reference to (a) the patients and clients charter, (b) the Social Security Agency charter, (c) the Training and Employment Agency charter, (d) the Northern Ireland Housing Executive charter (e) the Northern Ireland railways charter, (f) the Royal Ulster Constabulary charter, (g) the Ulsterbus and Citybus charter, (h) the Child Support Agency charter, (i) the Driver and Vehicle Licensing (Northern Ireland) charter and (j) the Courts and Compensation Agency charter.

Sir John Wheeler: The table gives details of the cost of production and distribution and the availability of the charters of the Government Departments in Northern Ireland.

Individual public service organisations are responsible for producing and distributing their own charters for those who use their services. The table shows costs and other details of production and distribution in so far as they are available centrally.

Forensic Science Laboratory

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much of the £4 million planned for the Forensic Science Laboratory in Northern Ireland in 1994–95 was spent preparing to become an executive agency.

Sir John Wheeler: Approximately £180,000.

Public Expenditure Plans

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reason there is a planned decrease in spending between 1994 and 1997 in (a) industry, energy, trade and employment, (b) transport and (c) environmental and miscellaneous services referred to in table 1.1 of "Northern Ireland Expenditure Plans and Priorities 1994–95 to 1996–97".

Sir John Wheeler: The planned decreases in Northern Ireland public expenditure cash plans in these areas is accounted for mainly by the completion of the privatisation payments to Harland and Wolff and Shorts—industry, energy, trade and employment; the completion of the Belfast cross-harbour bridge—transport; and a rephasing of capital expenditure on water and sewerage—environmental and miscellaneous services.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the four construction projects on which £25 million will be spent on the police building programme, referred to in table 4.3 of "Northern Ireland Expenditure Plans and Priorities 1994–95 to 1996–97".

Sir John Wheeler: Table 4.3 of "Northern Ireland Expenditure Plans and Priorities 1994–95 to 1996–97" shows the Police Authority for Northern Ireland's plans, as at 31 March 1994, to take forward work, on construction projects valued at more than £50,000 each, costing a total of £25 million in the 1995–96 year.

At that date, these plans included four new projects—three replacement police stations and a further phase of a regional support centre—costing a total of £6 million, in the 1995–96 year. The remainder of the planned expenditure for that year is in respect of on-going projects started in previous years.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the meaning of the term DRC in section 1.5 of "Northern Ireland Expenditure Plans and Priorities 1994–95 to 1996–97"; and for what reasons it needed an increase of £13 million allocated to it in 1993–94.

Sir John Wheeler: The term DRC stands for departmental running costs and is explained in paragraph 11.2 of the plans. The £13 million increase, relating to capital and DRC end-year flexibility carryover, was required in 1993–94 due to slippage in planned expenditure in 1992–93.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide a breakdown of the £7 million allocated each year to community relations in the years 1994–95 to 1996–97, mentioned in section 1.4 of "Northern Ireland Expenditure Plans and Priorities 1994–95 to 1996–97".

Sir John Wheeler: The resources available for community relations are directed at consolidating a range of major initiatives which are designed to increase cross-community contact and encourage greater mutual understanding and respect of different cultures and traditions. Since publication of the current edition of "Northern Ireland Expenditure Plans and Priorities 1994–95 to 1996–97", I have announced on 6 December 1994, that the resources available will be increased.

Over the period 1994–95 to 1996–97 these resources will be allocated as follows:

	1994–95 £000	1995–96 £000	1996–97 £000
Central Community Relations Unit[1]	4,414	5,307	5,457
Department of Education for Northern Ireland[2]	2,638	3,133	3,333
Department of Finance and Personnel (Policy, Planning and Research Unit[3])	250	300	305
Total	7,302	8,740	9,095

Notes:

[1]These resources will be directed to the Northern Ireland Community Relations Council, district council community relations programme, community reconciliation bodies, cultural traditions programme and capital programme.

[2] The main elements of DENI's programme are the cross-community contact scheme, cultural traditions programme and voluntary reconciliation bodies.

[3]This will support an information, evaluation and research programme.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reasons table 4.18 of "Northern Ireland Expenditure Plans and Priorities 1994–95 to 1996–97" does not contain projected expenditure on (a) the electoral service and (b) the state pathology service; and what was the actual expenditure on these services in 1994–95 and the projected expenditure in 1995–96 and 1996–97.

Sir John Wheeler: The statistics relating to the electoral service and the state pathology service contained in "Northern Ireland Expenditure Plans and Priorities 1994–95 to 1996–97" have customarily, in common with a number of other statistical tables in the report, dealt only with historic information.

The information requested is as follows:

£ thousands

	1994–95 (Estimated outturn)	1995–96 (Main estimates provision)	1996–97 (Planned expenditure)
Electoral service	1,225	1,254	1,232
State pathology service	874	910	892

Social Fund

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the allocation for the European social fund to Northern Ireland for the current programming period.

Sir John Wheeler: Under the single programming document 1994 to 1999, Northern Ireland will earn 354 mecu, approximately £274 million, from the European social fund. Around 24 mecu, approximately £18 million, will also be earned through the three Community initiatives which have now been agreed. Northern Ireland also expects to earn further ESF receipts from the remaining six Community initiatives and the peace initiative programme which have all still to be agreed with the European Commission.

"Frameworks for the Future"

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the costs to the Government of the peace process including (a) cost of printing and distributing "Frameworks for the Future", (b) the estimated costs of the on-going talks (c) the estimated cost of referendums and (d) the estimated costs of creating and running a Northern Ireland Assembly.

Mr. Ancram: On the cost of printing and distribution of "Frameworks for the Future", I would refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) on 2 March, Official Report, column 683.

The costs of on-going talks with Northern Ireland political representatives and the Irish Government have been met from existing departmental running costs and it is not possible to isolate the costs of this particular activity.

It will only be possible to offer reliable estimates on the cost of a referendums and of creating and running an assembly when the details of the arrangements have been discussed and agreed with the relevant Northern Ireland parties.

Civil Service Pensions

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the reasons for the reclassification of civil service pensions; and if the £17 million spent on doing this will be a one-off expense.

Sir John Wheeler: The reclassification of civil service pensions arose from the decision to allocate accruing superannuation liability charges to departments' budgets with effect from the 1994–95 financial year. This was designed to make the employment costs of staff more transparent. The reclassification was a technical adjustment which has been applied throughout the United Kingdom and which had no implications for the resources available to Northern Ireland.

Environment Legislation

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what grounds the Environment Protection Act 1990 was not extended to cover Northern Ireland; and when he intends to make a statutory provision for the protection of the environment here.

Mr. Moss: When this legislation was being considered, it was decided that, as with many such matters which could be expected to fall within the competence of a devolved legislature, it would be preferable to arrange separate provision by means of Orders in Council on the Northern Ireland statute book.

Legislation broadly equivalent to the 1990 Act is currently being introduced into Northern Ireland on a phased basis. Two Orders in Council dealing with litter and genetically modified organisms are already in place and a further two relating to the major issues of waste and industrial air pollution are at an advanced stage of preparation. The provisions of the 1990 Act dealing with radioactive substances, which applied on a UK basis, have been superseded by the Radioactive Substances Act 1993.

Private Finance Initiative

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much Government money was spent (a) in total and (b) on each project on the private finance initiative in (i) 1990, (ii) 1991, (iii) 1992, (iv) 1993 and (v) 1994.

Sir John Wheeler: The private finance initiative was launched by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in November 1992. The Government contribution to projects and programmes deemed relevant to the initiative, for the financial years since launch, is as follows:

£000

Project	1993–94	1994–95 Estimated Outturn
Urban Regeneration Grant	13,290	4,760
Housing Associations	30,800	25,600
Water Executive	15	122
Hospital Equipment Leasing	238	n/a
Total	44,343	—

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the allocation of the European regional development fund to the objective 1 region of Northern Ireland for the current programming period.

Sir John Wheeler: Under the single programming document 1994 to 1999, Northern Ireland will earn 676.82 mecu, approximately £525 million, from the European regional development fund. Around 64 mecu, approximately £50 million, will also be earned through the three Community initiatives which have now been agreed. NI also expects to earn further ERDF receipts from the remaining six Community initiatives and the peace initiative programme which have all still to be agreed with the European Commission.

Road Safety

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland's programme aimed at reducing the number of fatal and serious road accident casualties.

Mr. Moss: The Department of Environment (NI) is carrying forward a programme of road safety measures aimed at reducing the number of fatal and serious road accident casualties by one third by the year 2000. The main elements of the programme are as follows:

(a) Road Safety Plan The Department will be publishing its first plan later this year. It will set out how we will work together with other road safety bodies to achieve a one-third reduction in fatal and serious casualties by the year 2000.

(b) Publicity Campaigns The Department, with assistance from the private sector intends to mount two major campaigns this year on speeding and drink/driving.

(c) Road Safety Education in Schools The road safety education in schools will be continued although, due to resource constraints, the road safety education officer service is being reduced by approximately one third. Additional finance will be available for teaching materials. The cost of producing the annual road safety teaching aid calendar has been considerably reduced by competitive tendering, thereby improving value for money.

(d) Road Traffic Legislation Northern Ireland's road traffic legislation will be updated to strengthen it and also bring it more closely into line with Great Britain. The Road Traffic (NI) Order 1995 was published in January 1995 and is on target to complete its parliamentary process by mid 1995.

(e) Accident Remedial and Traffic Calming Measures In the last two years the Department has increased funding by 42 per cent. based on 1992–93 and 1994–95 (estimated figures). A further increase in funding of 16 per cent. is proposed for 1995–96.

(f) Commercial Vehicle Checking Enforcement Additional resources are being deployed to enable the Department to further strengthen its efforts to target "on-road" checking of roadworthiness and loading standards for commercial vehicles.

Sickness Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures he is taking to combat sickness absenteeism in (a) the Social Security Agency, (b) the Training and Employment Agency, (c) the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency (NI), (d) the Rate Collection Agency, (e) Ordnance Survey of NI, (f) his Department, (g) the Compensation Agency, (h) the Valuation and Land Agency (NI), (i) the Driver and Vehicle Testing Agency and (j) the Child Support Agency Northern Ireland.

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 9 March 1995]: The Northern Ireland Office, Northern Ireland Departments and agencies monitor their absenteeism regularly.

In 1994, the Northern Ireland civil service set up an inter-departmental working group to address the problem of absenteeism at a strategic/service-wide level. The group has developed

(i) software to enable absenteeism statistics to be extracted from the main NICS non-industrial human resource database which allows all departments and agencies in NICS to produce statistics on a frequency and of a type to meet their business needs. In addition, I receive, as a standard feature, a quarterly absenteeism report on the non-industrial staff in all departments;

(ii) a policy statement on attendance, a copy of which has been issued to every member of staff. This statement not only provides the general policy on attendance but also explains the standards which are expected and the procedures to be followed when absence occurs. A copy has been placed in the Library;

(iii) notes for guidance for line managers to assist them in the implementation of the policy; and,

(iv) advice on absenteeism briefing sessions.

Against this backdrop, individual departments and agencies are now able, where appropriate, to take their own local initiatives.

The Northern Ireland Office—home civil service—also produces printouts which indicate where staff have reached set limits of sick absence. Further action includes staff counselling, the monitoring of further absences and the issue of warnings. These procedures are currently under review.

Following a review of attendance levels in early 1993, the Social Security Agency introduced a "managing attendance" programme in November 1993 with the main objective of reducing absenteeism through sickness. One of its features requires line managers to monitor absences closely and to interview staff on their return to work. It also provides for the occupational health service to be brought in to help in appropriate cases and for disciplinary action to be taken where necessary.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the number of people suffering from Alzheimer's disease aged (a) 65 years and over (b) under 65 years in Northern Ireland, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moss [holding answer 9 March 1995]: Based on surveys of the prevalence of dementia elsewhere, it is estimated that in 1992 there were 11,500 people over 65 with dementia in Northern Ireland and some 750 people under 65 suffering from the disease. It is thought that about 70 per cent. of dementias are caused in whole or part by Alzheimer's disease.

The Department of Health and Social Services has recently undertaken a comprehensive scrutiny of its policy on dementia. The report of the scrutiny is to be published in May and a copy will be placed in the Library.

SCOTLAND

Tayside Flood

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail as precisely as possible the assistance, both direct and indirect, given by central Government sources to the Tayside flood areas in terms of (a) immediate help, (b) assistance with temporary accommodation, (c) assistance with restoring permanent accommodation, (d) the application of the Bellwin scheme, (e) flood prevention measures and (f) other costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. George Kynoch [holding answer 16 January 1995]: The Government's immediate response to the Tayside flooding in January 1993 was to trigger the Bellwin scheme of special financial assistance to local authorities. So far, nearly £1.679 million has been paid by way of grant under the scheme to affected authorities. This is made up of £1 million to Tayside regional council, £673,229 to Perth and Kinross district council and £5,524 to Dundee district council. I expect a further payment to the regional council to be made shortly of about a further £800,000, but discussions with the regional council are still to be concluded.

Perth and Kinross district council requested supplementary capital allocations of £1.11 million in 1992–93 and this was met in full. Within these resources £910,000 was made available specifically for temporary accommodation for people made homeless by the flooding. Further housing and non-housing allocations of £1.245 million and £200,000 respectively were made available 1993–94. The allocation for housing was in respect of repair of the flood damage to council stock.

Tayside regional council was given supplementary capital allocations totalling £1.48 million in 1992–93 for expenditure on water, sewerage and other programmes, including roads and transport. This met in full the request made by the region. Further capital allocations in consequence of the flooding, totalling £700,000 were issued in 1993–94.

As a further measure, the Scottish Office contributed £110,000 towards a comprehensive flood prevention study covering the River Tay catchment area, which the regional council is currently considering with a view to the implementation of flood prevention measures.

In addition, a special scheme of grants was introduced to assist farmers with the cost of repairs to breached floodbanks. The special scheme increased the normal grant rate from 50 per cent. to 75 per cent. and was available for the period from 1 February 1993 to 30 September 1993.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the relevant data in relation to the Bellwin scheme as it applied to regional and district authorities in Tayside following the most recent floods in relation to (a) total amounts claimed, (b) total amounts paid, (c) per capita central government expenditure in relation to the (i) general population and (ii) flood victims, (d) budgetary heads of claims, (e) items claimed but refused, (f) items claimed by reduced and (g) items which could have been claimed but which were not; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 16 January 1995]: Following the severe flooding in Tayside in January 1993, claims under the Bellwin scheme were received from three councils. Tayside regional council and Perth and Kinross district council have received interim payments of grant. The relevant figures for all councils are shown in the table: the figures for grant claimed are net of the threshold for each authority and are based on the normal grant rate of 85 per cent.

Authority	Grant Claimed £	Grant paid to date £
Tayside regional council	2,464,760	1,000,000 (interim)
Perth and Kinross district council	791,451	673,229 (interim)
Dundee district council	128,790	5,524 (final)
Total	3,385,001	1,678,753

Since the claim from Tayside region is yet to be finally settled, it is not possible to give per capita figures for expenditure, but it must be doubtful if such figures would be meaningful given the nature of the flooding.

The claims have been assessed on the basis of the normal Bellwin scheme rules. These are set out in Scottish Office finance circular 6/1990, a copy of which is in the Library.

I am not aware of there being any items of expenditure for which Bellwin grant could have been claimed but which the local authorities chose not to include in their claims. My officials have had lengthy discussions with the authorities concerned both before and after claims were submitted, and these discussions included guidance on what expenditure would and would not in principle be eligible for grant.

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will place in the Library a copy of the advice provided to him by the Scottish Enterprise Board on his consultation paper regarding the review of local enterprise company boundaries;

(2) when he will publish his views on the consultation paper regarding the review of local enterprise company boundaries.

Mr. Kynoch: My right hon. Friend will make known his decision on local enterprise company boundaries in due course, after he has received and considered the views of the Scottish Enterprise Board.

Nursing Home Bids

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many private nursing home beds there were in each health board area in Scotland as a whole in (a) 1979 and (b) 1993–94.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 March 1995]: The information on private nursing home[1] beds is as follows:

Health Board	[2]1987	1994
Argyll and Clyde	633	1,150
Ayrshire and Arran	670	2,064
Borders	180	723
Dumfries and Galloway	52	494
Fife	45	795
Forth Valley	207	860
Grampian	324	1,761
Greater Glasgow	626	2,299

Total	4,675	17,252

Notes:[1]

Private nursing homes and hospitals subject to the Nursing Homes Registration (Scotland) Act 1938, as amended.

[2] The first year in which comparable information was centrally available.

Urban Programme

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which geographic areas in Scotland are eligible to receive urban programme support in 1995–96; and how many enumeration districts within these areas are in the worst 10 per cent. based on the analysis of the 1991 census data.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am arranging for the information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the number of people suffering from Alzheimer's disease aged (a) 65 years and over or (b) under 65 years in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 March 1995]: This information is not available. The range of estimates which may be adduced from specific studies of the prevalence of dementia in the population is discussed in an article by Dr. P. W. Brooks which appeared in the March 1992 edition of the "Health Bulletin", a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Lanark Blue Cheese

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on Lanark blue cheese, setting out the United Kingdom and EC legal instruments governing its production and what assessment he has made of the application of the relevant legislation in France as respects French cheeses.

Sir Hector Monro: The hygienic production of cheese is regulated at present by the Food Hygiene (Scotland) Regulations 1959 as amended and by the provisions of the Food Safety Act 1990. All existing milk and dairies legislation is being consolidated into a new set of regulations which will also implement the EC milk hygiene directive 92/46/EEC.

Although as Minister I have no involvement with proceedings which have been instituted, I understand that on 6 March 1995 a justice of the peace approved an application by the food authority for the destruction of some Lanark blue cheese, that an interim interdict to halt that destruction has subsequently been granted to the manufacturer and that the matter is now before the courts.

My right hon. Friend has no information on which he can base an assessment of the application of legislation in France as respects French cheeses.

Discovery Project

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date approval was given to provide public funds from the Scottish Office budget for the tourist-related capital project at Discovery point, Dundee; and which Government Department or agency was responsible for approving the project.

Mr. Kynoch: Financial assistance was provided to the Discovery project from the Scottish tourist board and Scottish Enterprise Tayside. The provision of that assistance was in both cases within the delegated authority of the body concerned, and the question of Scottish Office approval did not therefore arise.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the value of public funds which have been spent on building the Discovery centre, Dundee; and if he will list the Government and local government share of these funds.

Mr. Kynock: The information requested is not held centrally.

Homelessness

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State how many households have been accepted as homeless by local authorities in rural areas in Scotland in each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of households accepted as homeless by rural local authorities is set out in the table. Rural authorities are as defined in the "Scottish Economic Bulletin" in 1985.

Operation of the homeless persons legislation households accepted as being homeless in rural areas

Year	Total number accepted

Tourism

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes have been made to the statutory provision for public support towards tourist-related capital projects with the transfer of responsibility from the Scottish tourist board to Scottish Enterprise.

Mr. Kynoch: None.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list by name and value tourist-related capital projects in Tayside in the last five years; and which Government body approved the projects;

(2) how many tourist-related capital projects in East Perthshire have received public support in the last five years.

Mr. Kynoch: The information requested relates to operational matters for the Scottish tourist board and Scottish Enterprise. I have asked the chairmen of those bodies to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the total cost to public funds of tourist-related capital projects in Tayside by funds under the control of Scottish Enterprise Tayside.

Mr. Kynoch: This is an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise. I have asked its chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date the statutory power for tourist-related capital projects was transferred from the Scottish tourist board to Scottish Enterprise Tayside; and what impact this had on projects under consideration by the Scottish tourist board.

Mr. Kynoch: The Secretary of State and HM Treasury approved the suspension of the arrangements for the giving of financial assistance under section 4(1)a of the Development of Tourism Act 1969 with effect from 29 June 1993. Those completed applications for assistance received by the Scottish tourist board on or prior to that date were considered by the board and approved or rejected in accordance with the provisions of the scheme. Incomplete applications held by the board on that date or those applications received after that date were passed to the relevant local enterprise companies.

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many inquiries he has received about tourist-related capital projects which have been affected by the change from Scottish tourist board approval to Scottish Enterprise Tayside approval.

Mr. Kynoch: The only inquiries on this matter received by my right hon. Friend have been those made by the hon. Member.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sites of special scientific interest have been (a) damaged and (b) destroyed by (i) development and (ii) other means in Scotland in each year since 1979.

Sir Hector Monro: Details of damage to sites of special scientific interest are published in the annual reports of Scottish Natural Heritage and the former Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland and Nature Conservancy Council, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Hedgerows

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what length of hedgerow has been lost in Scotland in each year since 1979.

Sir Hector Monro: Reliable estimates of hedgerow loss are not available in the form requested.

As part of the work on its national countryside monitoring scheme, Scottish Natural Heritage will be producing, by the end of 1995, further Scottish estimates for the period 1970 to 1988.

Forestry Commission Land

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what area of Forestry Commission (a) land and (b) woodland has been sold off in (i) England, (ii) Scotland and (iii) Wales in each year since 1979; and what area he now proposes for future sales.

Sir Hector Monro: The information is given in the table.

As announced in the Government's expenditure plans 1995–96 to 1997–98, the commission plans to sell 15,000 hectares of forest land in Britain in each of the next three years.

WALES

Heart Disease

16. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made towards the eradication of premature deaths caused by coronary heart disease in Wales.

Mr. Richards: The death rate from coronary heart disease for people aged under 65 decreased from 92 to 60 per 100,000 between 1985, when Heartbeat Wales was established, and 1992 the latest year for which figures are available. This extremely encouraging change has taken place against a background of reduced smoking prevalence among adults and other improvements in lifestyles.

Welsh Medium Education

19. Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to encourage the provision of Welsh medium secondary schools in Wales.

Mr. Richards: The pattern and level of Welsh medium provision is primarily a matter for local education authorities in fulfilment of their statutory duties. Authorities' proposals for Welsh medium education should be considered when they draw up schemes under the Welsh Language Act 1994, and they should take into account parental wishes when doing so.

South Wales Electricity

20. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to meet the chairman of South Wales Electricity to discuss the future of the company.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend will be meeting the chairman on 20 March.

Exports

21. Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has for stimulating Welsh exports in the coming months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office's programme of trade missions and trade fair representation continues to give small and medium-sized companies in Wales the opportunity to join sales missions to markets throughout the world. Visits will be made to 13 markets over the next 12 months and some of these will be led by Ministers. Representations will also be offered at trade fairs in Dubai and Kuala Lumpar.

Welsh Office staff will continue to mount seminars, workshops and other events and visit new and existing exporters to provide advice and information.

Youth Training Expenditure

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what public funds he has devoted to training the people aged 25 years and under in order to get them out of unemployment in each of the last five years.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 9 March 1995]: Figures covering youth training, youth credits and modern apprenticeships are given in the following table. These programmes are specifically aimed at people under 25 years of age. In addition, adult training schemes are available to people over 18 but figures are not available for expenditure on those aged 18 to 25 within these schemes.

Provision has fluctuated over the period concerned in line with demand and changes to the programmes. Reductions in the numbers of 16-year-olds and increases in the proportion staying on at school or entering further education have caused demand to reduce since 1991–92.

Funding has always been more than adequate to meet the youth guarantee by providing training and those young people up to the age of 18 who have required it; and 18 to 25-year-olds are treated as a priority group under the adult training for work programme.

Youth training, youth credits and modern apprenticeships provision in Wales

Year	£ million
1990–91	42.252
1991–92	48.897
1992–93	42.683
1993–94	40.424
1994–95	49.421

Notes:
[1]Figures for first four years represent outturn expenditure; that for 1994–95 is the level of provision available.
[2] Youth credits commenced in 1991–92 on a pilot basis and are now being progressively introduced by training and enterprise councils throughout Wales. Modern apprenticeships were introduced in 1994–95.

Cardiff Bay Advisory Committee

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation concerning the setting up of the Cardiff Bay advisory committee: what representations he has had concerning the delays in (a) choosing the members of the committee and (b) commencing its activities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 9 March 1995]: The establishment of the Cardiff Bay advisory committee is the statutory responsibility of the Cardiff Bay development corporation.

I understand that nominations have been received from the 12 organisations selected to be represented on the committee and that the first meeting will take place later this year.

Car Parking

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance he has given to hospital trusts and health authorities in relation to charging for the provision of car parking for the disabled for both out-patients and emergency admissions; and when this guidance was last reviewed.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 9 March 1995]: None. Charging for car parking on hospital sites is an operational matter for local management.

NHS Trust Funding

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make increased funding available to Powys Health Care NHS trust for 1995–96 and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Responsibility for purchasing health service from NHS trusts rests with health authorities and GP fundholding practices.

Class Sizes

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average class size in Wales for the school years (a) 1991–92, (b) 1992–93, (c) 1993–94, (d) 1995–96.

Mr. Redwood: The following table shows the average class size in Wales for both primary and secondary schools. Data are not available for 1994–95 and 1995–96.

Average class size as at (a)	September 1991	September 1992	January 1994
Primary schools	25.0	25.0	25.6
Secondary schools	21.5	21.4	20.1

(a) Average class size is calculated as the number of pupils divided by the number of classes. In the case of primary schools, the number of classes used is the number of registered classes whereas for secondary schools it is the number of classes in which the pupils were taught during a specified period on the day of the schools' census.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the change, in real terms, of standard spending assessment per pupil for Wales in (a) 1990–91, (b) 1991–92, (c) 1992–93, (d) 1993–94, (e) 1994–95 and (f) 1995–96.

Mr. Redwood: There are no standard spending assessments for education, or per pupil, for Welsh authorities.

The standard spending assessments for county councils in Wales, published in "The Local Government Finance Report (Wales) 1995–96", include provision for education.

Waiting Times

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to issue figures relating to the waiting times for routine out-patient waits; longest in-patient waits and combined waits for South Glamorgan health authority as at 31 December 1994, comparable with the information given for all other health authorities in the waiting times information bulletin, February 1995 edition, issued by Welsh Health Common Services Authority.

Mr. Redwood: As reported in the bulletin, hospitals in south Glamorgan have agreed to provide information on all the medical procedures involved for the next edition.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many consultants have been omitted from the schedule published in the Welsh Health Common Services Authority waiting times information bulletin of February for reasons of inability to comply with the current patients charter guarantees on maximum in-patient waiting times.

Mr. Redwood: Three consultants were not included in the February edition of the waiting times information bulletin.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for circulation of the operational guidance on the total waiting times guarantee, and what consultations he has had with the community health councils, local authorities and patient representatives concerning the form and circulation of the guidance document.

Mr. Redwood: The operational guidance on total waiting times will be distributed widely within the NHS in Wales, with copies being sent to all general practices, hospitals, health authorities and community health councils.

Comments on the draft were sought from all community health councils in Wales, and community health council representatives attended workshops arranged to discuss practical aspects of the new approach to reducing hospital waiting times.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his current estimate of when the next issue of waiting times information, given 31 March waiting time, will be published.

Mr. Redwood: The next edition of the waiting times information bulletin will be distributed to general practitioners in the first week of May. It will contain information gathered from hospitals in the last week of March 1995.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance he has given the chairman of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority concerning the inclusion of consultants in the waiting times information bulletin who are on extended leave of absence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: No specific guidance has been given on this point.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the draft operational guidance relating to the total waiting time guarantee to be effective from April; what representations he has had from health authorities, family health service authorities and trusts in relation to the form of the final guidance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: A copy of the operational guidance on total waiting times will be placed in the Library. It incorporates helpful comments made by health authorities, hospitals, general practitioners and community health councils.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received in relation to the inclusion of consultants in the schedule published in the waiting times information bulletin, who cannot meet current patients charter guarantees on maximum waiting times.

Mr. Redwood: One representation from an NHS general manager has been received, and in the light of this we are considering including details of all consultants in future editions.

Cardiac Surgery

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions and for what length of time the contract tender period for the market-testing competition for the cardiac surgery unit to Morriston hospital was extended, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The original contract tender period of 150 days was extended three times to 1 December 1994, 28 February 1995 and 14 March 1995.

Valleys Initiative

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the schemes under way as part of his valleys private finance initiative.

Mr. Redwood: All 20 sites contained in the "Investment Opportunities in the South Wales Valleys" portfolio are actively being marketed by the Welsh Development Agency and the Land Authority for Wales.

Detailed development briefs for Victoria, Navigation park, Llantarnam, Penllergaer, Parc Hendre and South Llanelli will be available from the Welsh development agency at the end of March.

Briefs for Hirwaun, Cwm Cynon, Mamhilad and the Merthyr Tydfil BR sites will be available in May or June.

Expressions of interest have been received from developers for the schemes at Brackla, Port Talbot, Ynysallan, Llantarnam, Mamhilad, South Llanelli and Merthyr Tydfil, and work is well under way at Victoria to create the new urban village.

NHS Staff Eating Disorders

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines he has issued to health authorities and trusts giving employment of nurses or nursing assistants who are, or have suffered from anorexia nervosa, bulimia or other eating disorders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Guidance on such issues are included in occupational health service guidance letters which are sent out by the Department to all health authorities and NHS trusts in Wales. The most recent guidance letter, DGM(95)13, was issued in February this year and, as a result of the Allitt inquiry—Clothier report—included a paragraph about pre-employment health assessments of staff with a history of behaviour that might give cause for concern. I am placing a copy in the Library of the House.

Building Signs

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about his plans to make it a requirement of Welsh Office funding that signs are erected, or promotional material made available, publicising the source of funding; how much money he will make available to fund such publicity; and from what budget this money will come.

Mr. Redwood: I should like the Welsh dragon to appear on construction signboards where the Welsh Office has contributed significant funding, and have asked my officials to draw up proposals to give effect to this policy. Money is already spent on signboards at each site from project funds.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many sites of special scientific interest have been (a) damaged and (b) destroyed by development and other means in Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. Gwilym Jones.: The information is not held centrally in the form requested. However, since the establishment of the Countryside Council for Wales on 1 April 1991 this data has been included in its annual reports. Prior to 1992 it was collated centrally for England, Scotland and Wales, by Nature Conservancy Council and was published in its annual reports. The annual reports of both organisations are in the Library of the House.

Hedgerows

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what length of hedgerow has been lost in Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. Gwilym Jones.: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on Monday 6 February Official Report, column 94.

Housing

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimates he has made of the extent of unmet housing need; and if he will make it his policy to collate figures on unmet housing need so as to qualify the requirements for (a) new housebuilding and (b) renovation activity.

Mr. Redwood: For the whole of Wales I have estimates of house condition, population growth and household formation. However it is the responsibility of local authorities to assess housing need in their areas. They are best placed to decide priorities, taking account of local factors, and to devise strategies drawing in developers, housing associations and others to meet housing need.

Prescriptions

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion and what number of prescriptions dispensed in Wales were written in Welsh in 1993–94; and what has been the change in the proportion of prescriptions written in Welsh in the last five years.

Mr. Redwood: This information is not available centrally. Prescriptions are communications between professionals in the NHS and may be dispensed in any part of the United Kingdom. For this reason the British National Formulary states that they should be completed in English, although some Latin abbreviations are acceptable.

TRANSPORT

Railway Track Maintenance

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that Railtrack maintains the same level of maintenance on main and branch line track, including track renewal, re-sleepering and re-ballasting, for 1995–96 as for 1993–94 and 1994–95; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: Railtrack operates within a regulatory and contractual framework, overseen by the rail regulator, which sets high standards of safety and performance for the rail network. Within that framework it is for Railtrack to determine the appropriate level of track maintenance and renewal necessary to meet the standards to which it is subject.

US-UK Aviation Relations

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 20 February, Official Report, column 4, on what date he visited Her Majesty's ambassador in Washington; what was the purpose of his visit; and which officials accompanied him.

Dr. Mawhinney: I visited Her Majesty's ambassador in Washington, unaccompanied by officials, on September 23 1994 to discuss US-UK aviation relations.

Vehicle Emissions

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to encourage the use of particulate emission control in heavy goods vehicles and public service vehicles and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Particulate emissions control has been a requirement of all new heavy duty goods vehicles and PSVs since 1 October 1993 by virtue of directive 91/542/EEC. This same directive applies further restrictions to apply to all vehicles registered from 1 October 1996. The Department is also working with the Commission to develop yet further controls from 1 October 1999.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what research his department is currently undertaking in respect of particulate pollution; and at what cost.

Mr. Norris: Research into air pollution is a matter for the Department of the Environment. Complementary research undertaken by the Department of Transport includes a £1 million joint study, in conjunction with the Department of the Environment and the motor industry, into means of identifying and analysing particulates by size and composition, and establishing typical levels emitted by petrol and diesel vehicles. A second £1.1 million departmental programme, aimed at improving control of particulate emissions from new heavy duty diesel vehicles, is developing an EC type approval test more representative of typical driving conditions. These programmes are in addition to others aimed at improved modelling—£225,000, and data collection—£200,000 per annum on-going, for better forecasting of all transport fleet emissions, including particulates.

Radioactive Materials

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 1 March 1995, Official Report, column 597, if he will give reasons for the delay in introducing regulations arising from the Radioactive Materials (Road Transport) Act 1991.

Mr. Norris: The matters to be dealt with in the regulations are of a complex nature and it was necessary to resolve a large number of technical details.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on vehicles carrying plutonium along the M6 and M40 on or around 23 February; if he will investigate them; and what assessment he has made of whether vehicle registration H254 FGM complied with road traffic regulations at all times.

Mr. Norris: I have received no such representations. If I receive any, I shall consider them. I have not made such an assessment of the vehicle referred to.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 1 March, Official Report, column 597, what effect the deletion of a higher executive officer post in the radioactive material transportation division has had on the work of that division; and what reorganisation has taken place.

Mr. Norris: The tasks of the post holder are being undertaken by other members of the division. The administrative branch of RMTD is now headed by an executive officer.

Orbital Motorway, Birmingham

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to make a further announcement on the progress of his plans for a tolled western orbital motorway around Birmingham; and whether he intends this road to be shadow-tolled.

Mr. Watts: There are no plans for a tolled wester orbital motorway around Birmingham. The Highways Agency is continuing preparatory work for a scheme which might prove suitable for private sector finance through the design, build, finance and operate initiative.

I expect to make a further announcement about progress on the scheme in due course.

Diesel Fuel

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what proposals he has to introduce incentives to increase the availability of sulphur-free diesel fuel.

Mr. Norris: None.

Oceanic Programme and Scottish Centre

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he now expects to make an announcement in respect of the Oceanic programme; and on what date he expects the new capability to commence;

(2) when he expects to make an announcement in respect of the new Scottish centre; and on what date he expects the new facility to be available.

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh) on 12 December 1994. There are no plans at present to make an announcement on the new Scottish centre, or on the new Oceanic flight data processing system.

M62 Relief Road

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to make a further announcement of the progress of his plans for the M62 relief road in northern Manchester.

Mr. Watts: On 22 June 1994, my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) announced further studies of the M62, which are now in progress. The studies are expected to take about two years to complete and their estimated cost is between £3 million and £5 million.

London Underground (Safety)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made into researching the potential development of the remote reversal of escalators to effect rapid evacuation of passengers from underground stations.

Mr. Norris: I understand that Her Majesty's railway inspectorate has commissioned a research project into this subject from the health and safety laboratory in Sheffield.

Safer Cycling

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the research projects currently being funded by his Department to promote safer cycling; and what is the budget for each research project.

Mr. Norris: The Department is currently funding the following research projects to promote safer cycling:

Title	£'000
Vulnerable Road Users	378
Innovative Cycle Schemes	240
Toucan Crossings and Cyclists	170
Cycle Helmets	137
Cycle Training	105

Illegal Operations Working Group

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what dates the illegal operations working group has met in the last 12 months; and what recommendations it has published.

Mr. Norris: The Department's illegal operations working group met on 25 August 1994 and 7 February 1995.

The working group's 1994 report is being drafted and will be circulated to those organisations with an interest in goods vehicle enforcement.

Train Skids

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many cases of trains skidding while in the course of braking have been recorded in each of he last 10 years; and how many in each year involved turbo trains.

Mr. Watts: Train skids are not statutorily reportable occurrences unless they cause an accident or dangerous occurrence, such as a buffer stop collision. Statistics on reportable incidents are published in Her Majesty's railway inspectorate's annual report on the safety record of the railways, copies of which are placed in the Library of the House.

Vehicle Inspectorate

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many clerical staff within the Vehicle Inspectorate are currently undertaking traffic examiner duties on temporary promotion;

(2) how many tachographs were examined by the Vehicle Inspectorate in each of he last 12 months; and how many prosecutions resulted from these checks;

(3) how many spot checks on vehicles were undertaken by the Vehicle Inspectorate at the ports of Dover, Hull, Felixstowe and Liverpool; and how many traffic examiners were stationed at each port in each of the last five years;

(4) how many vehicles were weighed by the Vehicle Inspectorate in each of the last 12 months; and how many prosecutions resulted from those checks;

(5) how many vehicles were examined at vehicle spot checks by the Vehicle Inspectorate in each of the last 12 months; and how many prosecutions resulted from these checks.

Mr. Norris: There are operational matters for the Vehicle Inspectorate Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Ms Joan Walley, dated 13 March 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions concerning various enforcement activities within the Agency for each of the last 12 months.

There are currently 2 clerical staff undertaking traffic examiner duties on temporary promotion. The posts are scheduled to be trawled and filled on substantive promotion in the near future.

Details of the number of tachograph examined, total number of roadworthiness spot checks and number of vehicles weighed in each of the last 12 months are shown in the attached annexes. Current details for the information on prosecutions is not available in the form requested. However, for 1993/94 there were 4,422 successful prosecutions for drivers hours offences, 5,521 for overloading offences and 5,620 other traffic offences. We have recently centralised and refined the handling of prosecution work within the Agency. This will improve the collection and availability of data.

The road transport enforcement work within the Inspectorate is broadly divided into 23 geographical "Areas" I have provided details of traffic examiner checks at or in the approaches of harbours for the areas in which Dover (Area 14), Hull (Area 21), Felixstowe (Area 17) and Liverpool (Area 6) are based. The figures include checks made at all harbours within the area, we do not have separate figures for each port. Traffic examiners are required to work throughout the area and are not "stationed" to work exclusively at the ports. The current numbers of traffic examiners for these 4 "Areas" are.

Night Flying Restrictions

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what review he has carried out of the night restrictions which currently apply at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted airports following the recent judicial review; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Since the judgment of 20 December. I have given very careful consideration to the night flying restrictions which were announced on 6 May last year. The Government recognise the need to ensure that local communities are not exposed to excessive levels of aircraft noise at night. We have decided not to propose any changes. This fulfils the Government's intention of keeping noise levels at Heathrow and Gatwick below those permitted in summer 1988.

The new consultation paper explains more fully what was meant in paragraph 34 of the original consultation paper of January 1993, to meet a point which was challenged in the High Court.

The consultation paper is being widely circulated to Members of Parliament, local authorities and environmental groups, as well as to the aviation industry. The Department is asking for comments on the proposals by 9 May; a copy has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Additionally, I am writing to the chief executive of BAA plc to ask him to consider carefully whether there is more that BAA or the airlines can do on a voluntary basis to reduce disturbance caused by night flights.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Invalidity benefit

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of people in receipt of invalidity benefit in the Merthyr/Rhymney/Cynon benefit district who are over the age of 58 years; and who will be exempt from the changes on the grounds of severe disability.

Mr. Hague: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Ted Rowlands, dated 9 March 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about Invalidity Benefit (IVB) recipients in the Benefits Agency's Merthyr/Rhymney/Cynon district.

All customers over the age of 58 on 13 April 1995 who have been continuously in receipt of IVB since 1 December 1993 will be automatically exempted from the new all work test for Incapacity Benefit.

An estimate has been made using information derived from a statistically valid sample obtained by computeer scrutiny of IVB caseloads on 21 January 1995.

The estimate of the number of people in the Merthyr/Rhymney/Cynon area in receipt of IVB over the age of 58 who will be exempt from the new all work test is 3,360.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently receiving invalidity benefit in the Merthyr/Cynon/Rhymney benefit district; what percentage this is of the total population of working age; and what are the average percentages for (a) the Welsh and (b) the English and Welsh averages.

Mr. Hague: The available information is in the table.

People in receipt of invalidity benefit and percentage of working population

	People in receipt of invalidity benefit	[3]Percentage of the working population
Merthyr/Cynon/Rhymney district	[1]23,834	17
Wales	[2]172,000	10
England	[2]1,184,000	4
England and Wales	[2]1,356,000	4

Notes:

[1]Figure obtained from a 100 per cent clerical count of cases in the Benefits Agency offices on the last working day of January 1995. The figure will include some people who have claimed but are not actually receiving invalidity benefit because they are in receipt of a higher overlapping benefit.

[2] Invalidity benefit recipients at 3 April 1993, based on a 1 per cent. sample of claimants, rounded to the nearest thousand.

[3] The working population has been taken to be 16 to 64 for men and 16 to 59 for women. Estimated mid-year population figures supplied by the population estimates unit, Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

Child Support

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many absent parents are paying the minimum weekly contribution towards child maintenance; and what proportion of assessments this figure represents.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 9 March 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State or Social Security about the number of minimum weekly contributions to child maintenance and the proportion of the number of child maintenance assessments made by the Child Support Agency this represents.

Information available following a sampling exercise of Child Support Agency cases conducted in October 1994, shows that 48,800 cases, 16 per cent. of assessments completed at that time, were assessed for the absent parent to pay the minimum weekly contribution. Information on the number of such cases where maintenance was actually being paid is not available.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what proportion of Child Support Agency cases where an assessment has been made no child maintenance has been paid; and what action he has taken.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 9 March 1995:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the proportion of cases where no maintenance has been paid following an assessment by the Child Support Agency.

As at the 3 February 1995 the Agency was dealing with a total of 179,000 accounts that had been set up for the collection of maintenance through the Agency collection service, following the completion of a maintenance assessment. In 42 per cent. of those cases no maintenance had yet been paid. Of course, a number of these accounts have only recently been set up, but of the remainder, interim maintenance assessments (IMA) have been made against the majority of the absent parents who have not met their obligation to pay child maintenance. Enforcement action will be considered against absent parents who still do not pay after the issue of an IMA.

The Agency continually reviews its accounting procedures to ensure that where a child maintenance assessment has been made and collection requested, that maintenance is collected. It has introduced a number of management action and implemented specially designed work packages to secure the collection of the maximum amount of maintenance.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the average reduction in the amount of child support bills caused by the changes announced in February 1994 and January 1995.

Mr. Burt: It was estimated that, for those absent parents who were affected by the February 1994 changes, the average reduction in maintenance would be £5 to £10 per week. For those who will be affected by the changes to the formula proposed in the recent White Paper, "Improving Child Support", the average reduction in maintenance is expected to be some £8. Any reductions due to the proposed departure system will be in addition to this.

Figures for average reductions do not indicate the range of reductions, which can vary significantly depending on the circumstances of individual cases.

Young People

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans he has to simplify the procedure by which young people can claim severe hardship payments;

(2) if he will instruct the Benefits Agency to improve the availability of information relating to young people's benefit entitlement and ensure that it is placed in locations which young people use, including schools, colleges and youth clubs;

(3) if he will instruct the Benefits Agency to ensure that (a) all staff are aware of young people's entitlement to claim for severe hardship payments and (b) young people are informed of this entitlement when they ask about benefits;

(4) what plans he has to ensure that compulsory training for Benefits Agency staff is enforced.

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Ms Tessa Jowell, dated 9 March 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about the availability of information and procedures for young people who wish to claim benefits.

Every Benefit Agency (BA) District Office is required to have a nominated benefit manager with responsibility for service delivery to 16–17 year olds. All local office staff have been made aware of young people's right to claim severe hardship payments and staff dealing with claims from 16–17 year olds will have completed specialist training. In addition, staff holding a Certificate of Authority from the Secretary of State to make severe hardship directions to pay Income Support, will have undertaken further specialist training in the handling of claims from young people.

A handbook "Income Support for 16–17 year olds", a copy of which is in the Library, is available in all offices. This details the procedures to be followed and contains a section on best practices. One of the recommendations is that offices set up local liaison groups with other Agencies and outside bodies with an interest in the welfare of 16–17 year olds. Many of these groups exist and work well to resolve local difficulties.

Consideration is being given to simplifying the process for claiming payments under the severe hardship provision from April 1996 through the delivery of the new benefit Job Seekers Allowance.

The BA is always looking at ways of improving its targeting of information. We are currently reviewing how the BA targets its main customer groups and the distribution of information to them.

Currently there are two leaflets specifically for young people. These are FB23 "Young people's guide to Social Security" and IS26 "Income Support if you are 16 or 17". I have enclosed copies of the leaflets, which are also in the Library.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Housing Benefit, Scotland

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the cost to the housing benefit bill in Scotland would be of (a) reducing the housing benefit taper to 50 per cent. and (b) increasing the earnings disregard for single people to £10 per week and for couples to £25 per week based upon the 1993–94 distribution.

Mr. Roger Evans: The estimated cost of (a) changing the housing benefit taper to 50 per cent. is £50 million, and (b) changing the earnings disregards to £10 a week for single people and £25 for couples is £15 million.

Notes:

1. Based on data taken from the 1990–91–92 Family Expenditure Surveys modelled at 1994–95 prices and benefit levels.

2. Figures have been rounded to the nearest £5 million.

3. For the earnings disregard, disabled couples are assumed to be entitled to the new couples disregard rather than the disabled person's disregard of £15.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many applicants for disability living allowance seek a review of their case after rejection of first consideration by his Department;

(2) how many applicants for disability living allowance who have failed to get their application accepted on first consideration or on review then appeal to his Department;

(3) how many applications for disability living allowance are granted following an application for a review of a refusal by his Department;

(4) how many disability living allowance applications have been granted on first consideration by his Department;

(5) how many applications for disability living allowance are granted on appeal by his Department.

Mr. Hague: The information requested about awards on claims, reviews and appeals for disability living allowance is not available in the form requested. The available information is in the table. An award on review or appeal may be the result of a variety of factors, such as a deterioration in the claimant's condition or the provision of additional information.

Disability living allowance

February 1992–January 1995	[1]Numbers (thousand)
New awards[2]	845

Notes:
[1]A claimant may apply for a review or appeal against an award as well as a rejection. The figures quoted are for all applications for review and appeal.
[2]New awards are awards on initial claims only and not on review or appeal.
[3]There will be registered reviews and appeals which have not yet reached the decision stage of the review or appeal system.
[4]Successful reviews and appeals are those where DLA was allowed for the first time, another component was awarded or the rate(s) payable increased.

Carpal Tunnel Syndrome

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to amend the regulations for industrial injury benefit to take account of carpal tunnel syndrome.

Mr. Hague: Carpal tunnel syndrome in association with the use of hand-held vibrating tools is already included in the list of prescribed diseases for industrial injuries disablement benefit purposes (prescribed disease A12).

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the impact of the proposed jobseeker's legislation on actors and performers.

Mr. Roger Evans: It is appropriate that unemployed actors and performers will have to satisfy the same conditions of entitlement for jobseeker's allowance as other jobseekers.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if the new contribution linking arrangements for jobseeker's allowance will take account of the period when a carer is unable to claim invalid care allowance because the disabled person is still within the six or three-month waiting period for attendance allowance and disability living allowance;

(2) what will be the position of ex-carers who had (a) an underlying entitlement to invalid care allowance or (b) a broken record of receipt of invalid care allowance or underlying entitlement with regard to the new contribution linking arrangements for ex-carers who wish to claim jobseeker's allowance.

Mr. Roger Evans: Periods in receipt of invalid care allowance will be included in the linking provisions for contributions-based jobseeker's allowance. The precise details of this arrangement, including the position of carers in cases where a disabled person is serving a qualifying period, are still under consideration.

National Insurance Fund

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the size of the Treasury grant to the national insurance fund in 1993–94 and 1994–95; what estimate he has made for grants in each of the next three years; and to what extent these grants are to cover the subsidy being paid to state earnings-related pension scheme contributors transferring into private pension schemes.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Treasury grant to the national insurance fund was £7,589 million in 1993–94 and £6,280 million in 1994–95. For 1995–96 the percentage grant now set by order will amount to a maximum of £4,075 million. The level of Treasury grant for future years will be set at the appropriate time and will depend on the estimated income and outgo of the fund then. Estimates are not therefore available for later years, but working assumptions suggest that the grant could fall to £2.3 billion by 1997–98.

The Treasury grant is a general contribution to the national insurance fund and is not attributed to any particular aspect of the fund's expenditure, of which the rebates to providers of approved personal pension is just one.

Funeral Expenses

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what basis he arrived at the figure for the maximum amount allowed for funeral payments from the social fund.

Mr. Roger Evans: The proposed cap for social fund funeral payments is based on the average funeral payment award for 1993–94.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for his Department's exceptions to the capping of funeral payments under the social fund for instances of special needs with special reference to the weight, size and height of the deceased, pacemaker removal and out-of-hours removals.

Mr. Roger Evans: The proposed cap on social fund funeral payments of £875 is intended to be a sum sufficient to meet the costs of a straightforward funeral which is dignified and respectful, or to make a very substantial contribution towards it. It is not intended to meet the cost of all variations and eventualities.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how (a) funeral directors and (b) others will be kept informed of procedures following the capping of funeral payments under the social fund.

Mr. Roger Evans: I shall be writing to the funeral directors' associations. Advice will be made available locally through revised forms and leaflets. District offices will be encouraged to liaise with local funeral directors.

Incapacity Benefit (Laryngectomees)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will discuss with the National Association of Laryngectomee Clubs the effects of functional disabilities and limitations imposed by alterations in the respiratory system; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will consult the National Association of Laryngectomee Clubs in respect of the new rules regulating invalidity benefit.

Mr. Hague: The development of the medical assessment for incapacity benefit included an open consultation process, to which the Cancer Relief Macmillan Fund, an associate of the National Association of Laryngectomee Clubs, contributed. If the National Association of Laryngectomee Clubs has further comments on the medical assessment, I would be happy to receive them.

Equal Treatment

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for ensuring the equal treatment of men and women with a dependent spouse in their eligibility for benefits.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Our proposals for ensuring that married couples are treated equally in the state pension scheme are set out in the White Paper, "Equality in State Pension Age", Cm 2420, a copy of which is in the Library. The legislation needed to implement these proposals is included in the Pensions Bill. Dependency increases payable with other benefits are already available on an equal basis.

Income Support and Restart Courses

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many unemployed claimants have received a reduced personal rate of income support following failure to attend or complete a restart course (a) nationally and (b) in each region, since March 1994.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is available by Benefits Agency territory and is set out in the table.

Number of reductions in income support personal allowance following failure to attend or complete a mandatory restart course

Territory	Totals (thousands) April 1994 to December 1994
Southern England	7.6
Wales and Central England	8.2
Scotland and Northern England	6.5
National total	22.3

Note:

Figures are provisional and subject to amendment.

Pensioners

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what help is being given to those retired people who were unable to make private pension provisions when they were of working age; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Arbuthnot: People who have retired since 6 April 1979 may be entitled to receive an additional pension from the state earnings-related pension scheme or a contracted-out equivalent, as well as their basic state pension. Those whose employment patterns have been interrupted because of caring responsibilities may have their basic pension entitlement safeguarded by the home responsibilities protection provisions.

Pensioners who have income below specified levels may, subject to their circumstances, be entitled to receive income-related benefits such as income support, housing benefit and council tax benefit.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he has taken and what further steps are planned to assist poorer pensioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Income-related benefits are kept under constant review and are uprated regularly in line with prices. In addition, income-related benefits for poorer pensioners since 1988 have been increased by some £1.2 billion, over and above inflation.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the standard of living enjoyed by retired people now, 10 years ago and 20 years ago.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Information is not available in the form requested. The information in the table shows the percentage growth in pensioners' average income for the years 1974, 1979 and 1992, the latest year for which figures are available.

	Increase 1974–92 (net income)		Increase 1979–92 (net income)
	Before housing costs (per cent.)	After housing costs (per cent.)	Before housing costs (per cent.)	After housing costs (per cent.)
Pensioner couples	54	64	46	56
Single pensioners	55	57	49	53
All pensioner units	58	64	50	58

Notes:

1. Source: Family Expenditure Surveys for 1974, 1979 and 1992.2. Pensioner units are single persons over state pension age and couples of whom the husband is over state pension age.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment his Department has made recently of the comparative incomes of retired people in the United Kingdom and other European Union member states; what factors he has taken into account to make such comparisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Arbuthnot: A report of research commissioned by this Department from the social policy research unit at the university of York, entitled "Incomes and Living Standards of Older People—A Comparative Analysis", was published on 26 January. A copy is available in the Library. The report is based on a comparison of 11 countries, eight of which are members of the European Union. It found that the United Kingdom has a more equal distribution of income among its older population and a more effective benefit safety net than many other major industrial countries. It concluded that to make meaningful international comparisons it is necessary to take account of all income sources for older people including private occupational and personal pensions and non-cash income sources.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he has taken and what further steps are planned to assist disabled pensioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: Since April 1992, disabled people aged between 60 and 65 may be entitled to disability living allowance, which meets some of the extra costs of care and mobility needs arising from disability. Attendance allowance is available to disabled people over the age of 65. Both benefits are non-contributory and non-means tested and provide help to increasing numbers of disabled people. Medical adjudication has been replaced by self assessment and entitlement to benefit is determined by lay adjudication officers. The benefits also serve to establish entitlement to other benefits such as invalid care allowance, severe disablement allowance and disability premiums of income support. The policy intention behind all benefits is kept under continuous review.

Benefit Expenditure

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the expenditure arising from the payment of (a) contributory benefits, (b) non-means tested non-contributory benefits and (c) means tested non-contributory benefits for claimants below retirement age in (i) 1978–79 and (ii) 1993–94 in 1993–94 prices.

Mr. Hague: Information is not available in the form requested. Information on benefit expenditure for claimants of any age in 1978–79 and 1993–94 is in the table.

	1993–94 benefit expenditure (£ millions)	1978–79 benefit expenditure in 1993–94 prices (£ millions)
Contributory benefits	39,575	30,697
Non-contributory means-tested benefits	28,634	7,714
Non contributory non-means-tested benefits	14,189	7,060

Note:

1. These figures have been taken from the 1995 Social Security Departmental Report and earlier equivalents.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people he estimates in 1995–96 who are (a) current claimants of invalidity benefit and (b) new claimants of incapacity benefit will fall in each of the categories to be treated as incapable of work by virtue of (i) receipt of the highest rate of disability living allowance care component, (ii) suffering from a progressive disease, (iii) registration as a blind person, (iv) tetraplegia, (v) persistent vegetative state, (vi) dementia, (vii) paraplegia, (viii) a severe learning disability, (ix) a severe and progressive neurological and muscle-wasting disease, (x) an active and progressive form of inflammatory polyarthritis, (xi) a progressive impairment of cardio-respiratory function, (xii) dense paralysis of upper limb, trunk and lower limb on one side of the body, (xiii) multiple effects of impairment of function of brain or nervous system, (xiv) a severe and progressive immune deficiency state or (xv) a severe mental illness.

Mr. Hague [holding answer 7 March 1995]: We do not have information on the number of existing invalidity benefit claimants who are in receipt of the highest rate of care component of disability living allowance. We estimate that there will be no more than 130,000 such claimants. We estimate that around 405,000 existing invalidity benefit claimants will fall into the exemptions for severe medical conditions; 110,000 of these claimants are expected to be exempt because of severe mental illness. Estimates have not been made for the other individual types of condition. Some of those who fall into the exemptions for severe medical conditions will be among those receiving the highest rate of care component of disability living allowance.

We estimate that no more than 10,000 new claimants of incapacity benefit a year will be in receipt of the highest rate of care component of disability living allowance. We estimate that around 40,000 new claimants of incapacity benefit a year will fall into the exemptions for severe medical conditions; 20,000 of these claimants are expected to be exempt because of severe mental illness. Some of those who fall into the exemptions for severe medical conditions will be among those receiving the highest rate of care component of disability living allowance.

The estimated figures have been rounded up to the nearest 5,000.

TREASURY

Exchange Rates (Irish Punt)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the constitutional implications of the severing of the link between the Irish punt and the British pound.

Mr. Nelson: The link between the Irish punt and British pound was severed when Ireland joined the European monetary system. This step had no constitutional implications for the United Kingdom.

Capital Gains Tax Reinvestment Relief

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if investments in companies listed on the unlisted securities market qualify for the reinvestment relief.

Sir George Young: No. Capital gains tax reinvestment relief is available for investment in shares in qualifying unquoted trading companies. As the relevant legislation makes explicit, companies whose shares are dealt in on the unlisted securities market are not unquoted companies for this purpose.

Draft Legislation

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what will be the inter-relationship between (a) Ministers and private sector lawyers, (b) hon. Members, (c) Government Whips and (d) Select Committees in respect of the contracting out of the drafting of Treasury legislation;

(2) what measures he will take to prevent legal firms operating at below-cost prices to acquire contracts to draft Treasury legislation;

(3) what safeguards will apply (a) for ensuring security on Budget details and forecasts and (b) for ensuring standards of confidentiality and propriety in respect of the Finance Bill following the contracting out of the drafting of Treasury legislation;

(4) if the costs of trial contracting out of Treasury legislation will appear as (a) running costs or (b) programme costs; how such costs will be shown when there are changes of dates in respect of policy; and how such costs will be controlled when there is a change in drafting instructions;

(5) which parts of the Finance Bill he plans to contract out and what plans he has for other forms of financial legislation to be contracted out;

(6) what are the criteria by which the success of the exercise in contracting out the drafting of Treasury legislation will be judged; who will assess the success of the exercise; and what quality controls there will be in respect of the drafting of the legislation;

(7) what proportion of contracted-out Treasury legislation will comprise (a) primary legislation and (b) secondary legislation;

(8) what proposals he has to market test (a) market-sensitive and (b) non-market-sensitive Treasury legislation;

(9) what discussions he has had with (a) the Law Society and (b) the Bar Council in respect of the contracting out of the drafting of Treasury legislation;

(10) what will be the relationship between those in the private sector instructed by him and advisers from the Inland Revenue in respect of the contracting out of the drafting of Treasury legislation;

(11) what have been the costs for each of the last five years for drafting legislation in his Department;

(12) how many staff in his Department and at what grade are engaged in drafting legislation;

(13) what are the total annual wages and salary costs in his Department in respect of those engaged in drafting Treasury legislation;

(14) what proposals he has (a) to market-test, (b) to go to outside contractors without market testing and (c) to employ outside contractors as civil servants on short-term contracts in respect of the contracting out of the drafting of Treasury legislation;

(15) if he will list (a) his proposals for quality assurance, (b) his proposed methods for testing this assurance and (c) his proposed penalties for (i) under performance and (ii) loss of revenue as a result of inadequate drafting in respect of the contracting out of the Treasury legislation;

(16) what guarantees his Department will demand of private sector lawyers engaged in the drafting of Treasury legislation to ensure that they do not have any dealings with clients on issues relating to their work for his Department; and what safeguards he will impose to prevent conflicts of interest arising between these lawyers and (i) past and (ii) prospective clients;

(17) what measures he will take to ensure that there is public confidence in the contracted-out Treasury legislation in respect of potential conflicts of interest between those employed to draft legislation for the Government who are also advising private clients.

Sir George Young: My right hon. and learned Friend's plans to involve the private sector in drafting legislation for Treasury Ministers are as follows:

Present practice is that most primary legislation in the areas of responsibility which fall to Treasury Ministers is drafted by Parliamentary Counsel. Officials in the Chancellor's Departments provide Parliamentary Counsel with instructions from which legislation is drafted, but none of the Chancellor's Department employs staff who themselves draft primary legislation.

There have been occasions in the past where lawyers outside Parliamentary Counsel have been engaged in the drafting of primary legislation. My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer is now setting up a pilot project to gain further experience of using the private sector in this area. Potential benefits could include: reducing time pressures caused by the volume of work facing existing draftsmen; widening the range of talent available to departments; bringing relevant specialist skills into the drafting process, and providing fresh thinking as to how our laws should be drafted.

The pilot scheme will cover some aspects of the 1996 Finance Bill, and possibly also some secondary legislation.

Treasury Ministers are still considering exactly which topics will be chosen for the pilot, but the bulk of the 1996 Finance Bill will continue to be drafted by Parliamentary Counsel in the usual way. Once the topics are selected, the contract or contracts will be let through competitive tender.

Before the contract or contracts are signed, Treasury Ministers will need to satisfy themselves that the contractors chosen will be capable of doing the job well, that sensible financial arrangements are made, that adequate security measures are in place to protect classified information, and that potential conflicts of interest are avoided.

The intention is that Inland Revenue and customs officials will deal directly with the contractors in much the same way as they deal with Parliamentary Counsel. It will be for the Revenue departments to give instructions to the contractors and for those departments to satisfy themselves that the draft legislation that is produced is of a satisfactory standard.

Parliamentary Counsel will be responsible for the rest of the Finance Bill and for ensuring that the clauses and schedules drafted by the contractors are fitted into the Bill in the appropriate place.

When the legislation comes before Parliament, Ministers will look to the contractors, working on instructions from officials, to draw up any Government amendments that are necessary, and to provide advice, for example, on the implications of any other amendments that are tabled. Contractors will be judged on the full range of services they provide.

The fact that part of the Bill will have been drafted by private sector lawyers will not affect the relationships between Ministers and the House or Committees of it.

The experiment will be closely monitored and will be subject to a full evaluation to consider the quality of drafting, other advice, whether timetables were met, security issues, and cost. The analysis of the cost will cover not only the fees for the pilot project, but also an assessment of any differential burden on Revenue department officials compared with using parliamentary counsel. One of the purposes of the pilot will be to look at the overall resources employed by the contractors on the project to improve our understanding of the costs to the private sector of drafting legislation.

The costs of the pilot will fall on departments' running costs. If necessary, the terms of the contract will deal with the possibility of late changes in policy or drafting instructions.

Brays Detective Agency

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all the schemes, activities and projects in which Brays Detective Agency has been retained and, in each case, the Government Department sponsoring the scheme and the total expenditure to date.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury has no schemes, activities or projects on which Brays Detective Agency has been retained; and it does not maintain records of other Government Departments' use of detective agencies.

VAT (Church Repairs)

Mr. Burden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration he has given to changing the rate of VAT on repairs to churches.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Repairs to all buildings, including churches, have been liable to the standard rate of VAT since 1973. The Government are opposed to further reduced rates as a matter of principle.

The introduction of any zero rates, or reduced rates in this area, would also contravene the EC sixth VAT directive.

Select Committee on Sustainable Development

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the reason for the decision that officials from the Treasury would not give oral evidence at the House of Lords Select Committee on Sustainable Development meeting on 7 February.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 9 March 1995]: The Government's strategy for sustainable development is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. I was therefore not persuaded that it would be appropriate for Treasury officials to give oral evidence on the subject as a whole to the Committee on 7 February. Since then, the Committee has provided me with a list of questions relating to specific Treasury responsibilities and I have authorised my Department to submit a memorandum in response.

The accountability of Ministers and the Government to Parliament has always been based on the principle that each Minister answers for subjects within his or her own departmental responsibilities.

TRANSPORT

Transport Research Laboratory

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are his objectives in the sale of the Transport Research Laboratory, and if he will make a statement.

Dr Mawhinney: I shall be seeking bids for the Transport Research Laboratory from a wide range of interests. My objectives are:

- to secure the continued provision of high-quality, independent research and development at good value for money across the range of my Department's inland surface transport needs;
- to transfer the laboratory to the private sector as soon as reasonably practicable;
- to optimise the net proceeds to the taxpayer.

In pursuing these objectives, I shall have full regard to the need to help promote a competitive market for the supply of research services to my Department and obtain reassurance that the purchaser has the capacity to meet transferred obligations and liabilities.

The work of our financial advisers, Price Waterhouse, has confirmed that there is interest in acquiring the TRL business as a whole, with a lease or freehold interest in the land and buildings required for the operation of the Laboratory. I shall be seeking competitive bids for the laboratory on this basis. I have not ruled out any sale option including the possibility of a proposal from TRL's management and staff to take over the Laboratory as a non-profit-distributing company.

To emphasise the Government's continuing commitment to TRL as it moves into the private sector, I have decided to provide the laboratory with guarantees of future research work for a number of years. The guarantees will be subject to the delivery of high-quality, independent and impartial research at competitive prices. Bidders will be asked to demonstrate that the supply of scientific advice and research to Government will not give rise to conflicts of interest with their other operations.

I am aiming to complete the sale of TRL during 1995.

Airports

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusion he has reached on his Department's review of the system of economic regulation of airports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The review considered how the system of economic regulation established in the Airports Act 1986 had worked to date, and whether there was scope for improving the process of regulation. It was not concerned with the principles or methodology of regulation.

Following consultation, my Department has identified a number of measures to improve the way the system works, including clarification of the procedures for regulation of airports and for handling of complaints, improved availability of information, and clarification of the criteria for designating airports under section 40 of the Airports Act 1986 for closer economic regulation. In addition, some measures have been identified which will require legislation; these will be taken forward when the opportunity arises. The main such change concerns the roles of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission and the Civil Aviation Authority in the regulation of the designated airports; it is proposed to adopt a regime based on what has become the "standard" model for the regulation of utilities. It is expected that the next quinquennial reviews of BAA's south-east airports and Manchester airport will proceed under the existing system.

In the light of recommendations from the Select Committee on Scottish Affairs, we have also considered whether Glasgow and Edinburgh airports should be designated for the purposes of economic regulation. We have found no evidence of abuse of monopoly position or inefficiency and we have therefore concluded that there is no case at present for designating these airports.

I am placing the report of the conclusions in the review in the Library.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to visit the Newbury constituency in the current year.

Dr. Mawhinney: At present, I have no plans to do so.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of whether Pan Am flight 103 was under special guard at Heathrow airport from the time of arrival from San Francisco at 12.10 hours on 21 December 1994 until take-off for JFK airport, New York at 18.25 hours as described in page 14 of the fatal airport inquiry on the Lockerbie air disaster report.

Mr. Norris: From the evidence given to the fatal accident inquiry, and the earlier investigation by the Metropolitan police into the handling of this flight at Heathrow airport, my Department is satisfied that the Maid of the Seas was under constant supervision by security guards while between flights at the airport on 21 December 1988.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those parts of the railway system which will have been privatised or put out to contract by April 1996.

Mr. Watts [pursuant to his reply, 6 March 1995, c. 53]: Union Railways Ltd. and European Passenger Services Ltd. were omitted from the list of sales intended to April 1996.

Detained Ships

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by classification society the number of ships detained by the Marine Safety Agency in the last two years.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Marine Safety Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Ms Joan Walley, dated 14 March 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of ships, by classification society, detained by the Marine Safety Agency in the last two years; I attach two tables. The first table gives the number of detentions following port state control inspections in UK ports for 1994. This includes a detention rate based on the total number of inspections carried out on ships classed with the classification society. Equivalent figures for 1993 are not available without undue expenditure but the number of detentions without the amplifying detention rates are listed in the second table.

The figures must be treated with some care as ships may be detained for items which are not the responsibility of a classification society. Also some fish factory ships, klondykers, although in a detainable condition could not be detained because the ships were anchored outside the port when inspected. In a small percentage of cases the classification society has not been recorded because it did not issue the certificates.

Rail Track Renewal

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what contracts have been agreed by Railtrack for each section of the Great Western mainline, and each branch line, for track renewal, re-sleepering and re-ballasting, for 1995–96; and what has been the value of each contract and track length covered.

Mr. Watts: These activities form part of the track renewal work carried out under contract for Railtrack by that part of British Rail infrastructure services which the British Railways Board expect to offer for sale as the Western track renewal unit later this year. In light of the expected sale, details of the contracts and their value are therefore commercially confidential.

Channel Tunnel Freight

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much freight by tonnage has been transferred from road to the railway system (a) since 1 January 1992 and (b) since the opening of the channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Watts: This information is not available in the form requested. Information on tonnages carried by rail can be found in table 1.12 of "Transport Statistics Great Britain 1994", a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Railfreight Distribution has moved over 2,000 trains through the channel tunnel to date.

Mobile Crane Operators

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what restrictions currently exist on the maximum working and driving hours for mobile crane operators.

Mr. Norris: Drivers of mobile cranes are subject to national rules on drivers' hours in part VI of the Transport Act 1968, as amended. These limit driving to 10 hours a day. The rules also limit drivers to 11 hours duty each day, but not on days when they do not drive or when they drive for less than four hours on each day of the week.

School Vehicles

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to ensure that vehicles hired for the transport of children to and from school have the appropriate licence or that local education authorities be empowered to issue a new form of licence specifically for school transport purposes.

Mr. Norris: All motor vehicles, including those used for school transport, are subject to the requirements of the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986 and to annual roadworthiness testing. Public service vehicles must also satisfy additional construction requirements and be licensed through the operator licensing system under which their operators are subject to sanction by traffic commissioners if standards are not maintained.

We do not consider further controls to be necessary.

Pollution

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those sites where he is currently monitoring vehicle pollution stating in each case (a) what monitoring he is undertaking and (b) whether PM10 is counted.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency.

I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Ms Joan Walley, dated 14 March 1995:

The Minister for Local Transport and Road Safety, Steven Norris, has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those sites where he is currently monitoring vehicle pollution stating in each case (a) what monitoring he is undertaking and (b) whether PM_{10} is counted.

We do not routinely monitor vehicle pollution but the Highways Agency has a number of monitoring stations in operation either for research purposes to aid the development of air quality techniques or to inform environmental assessment of specific highway proposals where appropriate. For most situations involving road schemes we use mathematical modelling to assess pollution levels. Where the modelling techniques cannot adequately reflect the characteristics of a particular location monitoring work is undertaken.

The table below contains our current active sites.

Road Name	Location	Emissions monitored
M4	Theale	Carbon monoxide Nitric oxide Nitrogen dioxide Total oxides of nitrogen Ozone Total hydrocarbons Non-Methane hydrocarbons Methane Range of poly-aromatic hydrocarbons
Victoria St	London	Carbon monoxide Nitric oxide Nitrogen dioxide Total oxides of nitrogen Ozone Total hydrocarbons Non-methane hydrocarbons Methane Range of poly-aromatic hydrocarbons Benzene Toluene Xylene Range of carbonyl compounds
M4 London	Between Junctions 3 and 4B	Carbon monoxide Nitric oxide Nitrogen dioxide Total oxides of nitrogen PM_{10} Benzene Toluene Xylene
M4 London	Junction 4	Carbon monoxide Nitric oxide Nitrogen dioxide Total oxides of nitrogen
M62 Manchester	East Junction 17	Carbon monoxide Nitric oxide Nitrogen dioxide Total oxides of nitrogen
M2 Kent	Junction 3 Area	Carbon monoxide Nitric oxide Nitrogen dioxide Total oxides of nitrogen Benzene Toluene

At present PM_{10} is measured at one location on the M4 but our intention is to commence monitoring of this emission at new sites on the M62 (Manchester) and the M25 (Surrey) shortly.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pages of forms an applicant for a review of a refusal of an application for disability living allowance has to peruse; and how many pages an appellant has to peruse when making an appeal for disability living allowance, having being rejected on first consideration and review;

(2) how many pages the average applicant for disability living allowance has to peruse in order to make an application.

Mr. Hague: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will reply to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Mike O'Brien, dated 13 March 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about Disability Living Allowance (DLA) forms.

For an initial claim to DLA there are 60 pages which comprise the claim pack:-

	Pages
Notes	8
Section 1 "Your claim for DLA"	12
Section 2 "How your disability/illness affects you"	28
Additional Section	12

The additional section was introduced to gather information following recent caselaw. Customers must complete section 1; other sections are optional.

A customer is able to request a review of an initial decision whether this was successful or not. The review pack has a total of 48 pages:

	Pages
Section 1 (Personal details)	8
Section 2 (Mobility needs)	8
Section 2 (Care needs)	20
Additional section	12

A review pack is not usually issued where similar information has been obtained within the preceding three months.

A customer can appeal against a review decision by writing to the Benefits Agency. There is no pack for appeal purposes.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Fraud Investigation Costs

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much the Government have spent on the detection of benefit fraud for each year sine 1979.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Benefit fraud is investigated by the Benefits Agency, Employment Service and local authorities. Details of local authority expenditure on benefit fraud investigation are not held centrally.

The Benefits Agency's expenditure on fraud investigation is only available for the last two years. Prior to the formation of the Benefits Agency, most anti-fraud work was integrated with benefit claims processing, and other mainstream local office activities, and separate cost data was not kept. However, the bulk of investigations are now carried out by separately managed units for which costs are known.

	£ million
1992–93	66
1993–94	69

These figures include staff and running costs, but not accommodation. Benefit savings for the same periods were £558 million and £654 million respectively.

The cost of Employment Service fraud investigations is available for the past seven years. The figures (including benefit savings for the same periods) are:

	Costs £ millions	Savings £ millions
1987–88	15.9	70.5
1988–89	18.7	81.27
1989–90	20.6	70.72
1990–91	21.4	64.94
1991–92	21.5	55.88
1992–93	26.4	71.15
1993–94	26.8	80.12

These figures include staff, accommodation and running costs.

War Widows

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many post-1973 war widows have subsequently re-married in each year for which figures are available.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of living post-1973 war widows.

Mr. Arbuthnot: At 1 March 1995 war widows pensions were in payment to 3,151 widows of men whose service in the armed forces ended on or after 31 March 1973.

Retirement Pensions

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the additional cost of a flexible decade of retirement between the ages of 60 and 70, compared with the Government's proposals to equalise state pension age at 65.

Mr. Lilley: The Government's plans already allow for indefinite flexibility after state pension age. From 2010, people will receive a 10 per cent. increase in their state pension for every year that they defer drawing it. To allow people to claim their full state pension from age 60, even if the flexibility were limited to a decade, would cost £13 billion a year more by 2030 than age 65.

Pensioners' Incomes

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total income of (a) pensioners and (b) others aged 55 years and over in 1992 from (i) retirement pension, (ii) invalidity benefit, (iii) disability benefits, (iv) widows' and widowers' benefits, (v) income support, (vi) occupational pensions and (vii) personal pensions and annuities.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Information is not available in the form requested. The table shows average net weekly incomes from all state benefits and from occupational pensions for people receiving those incomes aged over state pension age and between 55 and state pension age.

Average weekly income from state benefit and occupational pensions[1]

	Benefit income		Occupational pension[2]
	Over state pension age	55 to state pension age	Over state pension age	55 to state pension age

Family Credit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he (a) expects the regulations restoring entitlement to part-time school workers for family credit to come into effect; if they will be retrospective; and if he will consider making ex gratia payments to those who do not qualify for income support.

Mr. Roger Evans: The Income-related Benefits Schemes (Miscellaneous Amendments) Regulations 1995—SI 1995 No. 516—were laid before Parliament on 10 March 1995. Regulation 11 of these regulations provides for the hours of school workers and others with a similar pattern of employment to be averaged over termtime only for the purpose of determining whether or not they satisfy the condition of entitlement to family credit that they be working an average of 16 or more hours a week. This will restore the position to that which existed before the commissioner's decision in October 1993. The new provision will apply to awards of family credit commencing on or after 11 April 1995. It will not be retrospective. As all families have been able to claim their legal entitlement, we have no plans to make ex gratia payments.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Apple Orchards

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many acres of apple orchards were grubbed up in each of the past three years; what is the present level of application for the EU's grubbing-up grant; and if he will make a statement on the prospects for the Ulster apple industry.

Mr. Ancram: No apple orchards were grubbed up in Northern Ireland in the last three years.

The current apple orchard grubbing-up scheme has attracted three applicants with a total entry of 45.15 acres, or 18.28 hectares. I am hopeful that the industry will continue to make a valuable contribution to the Northern Ireland horticultural sector and to the food processing industry.

Hospitals Review

Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the terms of reference of the McKenna review into closer working relations between the Royal and City hospitals, Belfast.

Mr. Moss: The terms of reference for the acute services reorganisation project chaired by Dr. McKenna are as follows:

> "To develop and oversee the implementation of a coherent strategy for the reorganisation of services at the Royal Group of Hospitals Trust and the Belfast City Hospital Trust to provide a sound basis for their future development, having regard to services presently located at other hospitals in the Greater Belfast area where relevant".

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Angola

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what humanitarian aid and development assistance is currently being given or is planned by the European Union for Angola.

Mr. Baldry: Angola has a national indicative programme of 115 mecu, or (£93 million, under EDF VII—1991 to 1995—for long-term development assistance. In addition, a special six months humanitarian plan for 6 mecu, or £4.9 million, was agreed for Angola on 30 November 1994.

European Development Fund

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the obstacles to agreement at the special Foreign Affairs Council in February on the size of the eighth European development fund for 1995 to 2000; and what are the time scale and approach that are going to be used to settle these disagreements.

Mr. Baldry: The size of EDF VIII was not settled in February since the contributions offered by member states did not reach the target figure tabled by the presidency. Further discussions are envisaged at the informal meeting of Foreign Ministers on 18 and 19 March and at the Foreign Affairs Council on 10 April.

Iraq

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to what extent relief agencies providing humanitarian aid for the Kurds have been endangered by Iraqi Government shelling of Arbil in contravention of the safe haven policy instituted after the Gulf war.

Mr. Baldry: We are concerned that relief workers may be endangered by indiscriminate Iraqi Government shelling of northern Iraq. We continue to press Iraq to abide by Security Council resolution 688, which calls on the Iraqi regime to cease repression of its own people.

Arun III Project, Nepal

Mr. Denham To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what assessment he has made of the German Federal Audit Office's investigation into the value for money represented by the planned Arun III hydropower project in Nepal; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what assessment he has made of the independent reports comparing the relative value for money of the Arun III hydropower project and the various possible alternative investments in Nepal's energy sector proposed by the Alliance for Energy and the Arun Concerned Group.

Mr. Baldry: We have not seen the reports referred to.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will press the board of the World bank to consult as widely as possible to identify the most appropriate and effective power scheme for the sustainable development of Nepal before taking any final decision on funding for the Arun III hydropower project.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 30 January, Official Report, columns 480–81.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will instruct the United Kingdom executive director of the World bank to vote to allow the inspection panel to complete necessary field work for their investigation into the Arun III hydropower project before the Government of Nepal reach a final decision on funding.

Mr. Baldry: The board has already decided that field work should commence only after the bank has received a decision from the Government of Nepal as to whether they wish to request IDA funding for the Arun III project.

Palestinians

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth affairs what plans he has to provide further aid to the Palestinians.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister today announced a new £7 million bilateral aid package for the Palestinians. Some £2 million of this will be provided for the United Nations Relief and Works Agency's peace implementation programme. Some £5 million will be allocated to a know-how programme covering assistance for management training for the ministries of the Palestinian Authority, small-scale water and sewage treatment plants and water leak detection, health management and education, including English language teaching. We are also hoping to promote joint projects with UK private sector companies to help generate exports and employment in the west bank and Gaza strip. Basic training for the civil police will also be considered. In addition, $1 million will be given towards the costs of UNRWA's moving offices to Gaza.

This will bring our total aid to the Palestinians in support of the peace process to £82 million.

SCOTLAND

Health Care International

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) by what method the contract for orthopaedic out-patients was awarded to Health Care International by Forth Valley health board; and on what terms NHS providers were allowed to compete for the contract;

(2) if he was consulted by Forth Valley health board before it provided Health Care International with the names and addresses of NHS orthopaedic out-patients awaiting appointments; and if he consented to this information being given to HCI without the knowledge of the patients concerned.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This is a matter for Forth Valley health board. It is appropriate for health boards to buy services from independent hospitals in order to reduce waiting times. I understand that in order to meet patients charter waiting time guarantees for orthopaedic out-patient appointments, the board carried out a tendering exercise, including NHS and independent providers, which was won by Health Care International.

Individual patients, were then offered the choice of orthopaedic out-patient treatment at HCI. There is no requirement for the board to consult the Secretary of State before providing HCI with the names and addresses of those patients awaiting appointments.

National Continence Day

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has concerning the promoting and publicising of National Continence Day on Wednesday 21 March; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office is providing funding for the staffing of a telephone helpline at the continence resource centre, Southern General Hospital NHS trust, Glasgow from 6 March for a four-week period, including National Continence Day. Leaflets advertising the helpline and encouraging sufferers to seek help will be distributed to a range of outlets within and outwith the health sector. Advertisements are being placed in some Scottish newspapers and a press release will be issued on 20 March. The press release will include details of local continence adviser contact numbers and ethnic minority helpline numbers. A number of events are also being organised across the country by local health service professionals. The Scottish Office is happy to promote the campaign to increase awareness of this distressing condition and to encourage sufferers to seek advice and treatment.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will present to the Select Committee on National Security the information from the Crown Office which caused Sheriff John Mowat QC to uphold the objection of Mr. Colin McEachran from the Department of Transport to any evidence in the Lockerbie case relating to the operation of intelligence agencies into the United Kingdom, as being contrary to the national interest, as stated on page 14 of the determination in the fatal accident inquiry relating to Lockerbie.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No such information was placed before Sheriff Principal Mowat QC by the Crown Office. The objection to evidence relating to the operation of the intelligence agencies of the United Kingdom was made by counsel appearing on behalf of the Home Office and the Department of Transport. The fatal accident inquiry relating to Lockerbie was heard entirely in public and all information and evidence presented to the inquiry was heard in public.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether it was with the agreement of the Crown Office that ex-Chief Constable George Esson gave an interview to the Glasgow Herald on Lockerbie published on Monday 20 February.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Mr. George Esson, formerly chief constable, Dumfries and Galloway constabulary, did not seek the agreement of Crown Office in giving the interview to the Glasgow Herald published on 20 February 1995.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what study the Crown Office have made of Mr. Alan Francovitie's response to ex-Chief Constable Esson, a copy of which has been sent to the Lord Advocate.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This article, like all items in the media relating to Lockerbie which come to their attention, has been considered by the prosecuting and investigating authorities.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of probabilities, referred to in charge 10, page 15 of the report of the fatal accident investigation into the Lockerbie air disaster, of a suitcase with explosives arriving at Frankfurt on a flight or an airline, other than Pan American.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The assessment of probabilities by my noble and learned Friend the then Lord Advocate was reflected in the instruction to the procurator fiscal at Dumfries to request petition warrants for the two named accused on charges which alleged that the suitcase containing an improvised explosive device was placed on board Air Malta flight KM180 to Frankfurt am Main airport at Luqa airport, Malta and was at Frankfurt am Main airport placed on board Pan American World Airways flight 103A to London Heathrow airport.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what record the Crown Office has of any onward confirmed ticket to New York from Luqa airport, Malta, in December 1988 via Frankfurt and Heathrow; and what estimate he has made of the evidence of Miss Milne on page 41 of the determination by Sheriff Mowatt QC in relation to Lockerbie and whether a bag could enter the inter-line system unless an onward confirmed ticket had been issued.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is not the position of the Crown Office as reflected in the criminal petition against the two Libyan accused that the suitcase which contained the improvised explosive device was loaded at Luqa airport as luggage relating to a passenger travelling on such a route. The evidence of Miss Milne was considered along with all other evidence which was available to the Crown prior to the commencement of criminal proceedings.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what official apologies have been given by the Scottish Office and the Crown Office to Dr. David Fieldhouse, police surgeon of Bradford, in relation to Lockerbie.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None. Counsel appearing on behalf of the chief constable for Dumfries and Galloway constabulary withdrew the suggestion the Dr. Fieldhouse had been unaccompanied during his searches at Lockerbie at the conclusion of his cross-examination of Dr. Fieldhouse on day 47 of the fatal accident inquiry.

Forestry

Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hectares the Forestry Commission has planted during the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Sir Hector Monro: In the 10 years to 31 March 1994, the Forestry Commission planted 116,201 hectares of woodland.

Planning Application Fees

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy on the devolution of planning application fees to local authorities, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kynoch: In December 1993, my right hon. Friend announced that he would consider the issue of a consultation paper on the devolution of planning fees to local authorities. The policy initiative is still under consideration and further discussions will take place with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and other interested parties before a decision is taken on the most appropriate way forward.

In the meantime, fees will continue to be set centrally.

Shipping Subsidiaries

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his decision following the shipping subsidies review in relation to shipping services on the west coast of Scotland.

Mr. Lang: After very careful and detailed consideration, I have concluded that tariff rebate subsidies on bulk freight to and from the west coast of Scotland should be progressively withdrawn. In order to avoid the possibility of immediate freight rate increases affecting commodities of significance for island residents, I intend to phase out the payment of TRS on some commodities over a period of three years. The TRS rate is currently 40 per cent. for imports to the Western Isles and 30 per cent. for exports from the Western Isles. As from 1 May 1995, I intend to set both rates at 30 per cent. followed by annual reductions to 20 per cent., 10 per cent. and zero from the beginning of each subsequent financial year. The tapering of subsidy over three years should provide existing companies with the opportunity to consolidate their market position, and make efficiency improvements, while at the same time enabling other companies to become increasingly competitive with those companies whose subsidy is reducing. I would expect to see a competitive market develop which would act as a constraint on freight rate increases.

I have, however, concluded that there is scope for the exclusion of certain commodities from being eligible for TRS in a shorter period. As from 1 September 1995 the transport of raw timber, quarry products and road salt will no longer be eligible to receive TRS.

I do not consider that the export of primary commodities requires continued subsidy. There are currently very substantial amounts of timber being extracted from the west coast of Scotland and forestry extraction is expected to more than double over the next 15 years. The shipping market needs to adjust to the scale of these operations; and I believe that continuation of TRS on timber is unnecessary and would distort the market. Quarry products and road salt currently receive a lower rate of subsidy than generally available. Given the low amount of subsidy currently payable on these commodities, I would expect efficiency savings to restrain any price increase.

After consideration of representations received, I have been persuaded by the evidence put to me, that in relation to movements of fishmeal and fish oil from Shetland, complete withdrawal of subsidy on 1 May would be likely to have significant adverse effects on the industry; and that a period of adjustment is required. I have concluded that subsidy should be retained; and set, with effect from 1 May, at a rate of 30 per cent., followed by reductions to 20 per cent., 10 per cent. and zero from the beginning of each subsequent financial year.

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for shipping subsidies for sea transport services in the highlands and islands other than those provided by Caledonian MacBrayne; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Subject to parliamentary approval of the estimates, I propose to make available in 1995–96 total subsidy provision under the tariff rebate subsidy scheme of £9.1 million. For services to Orkney and Shetland, tariff rebate subsidies of up to £8.3 million will be made available, and up to £800,000 will be available for bulk shippers operating on the west coast of Scotland and to and from the Northern Isles.

The provision includes subsidy of up to £7.6 million to P and O Scottish Ferries Ltd. for the operation of passenger and accompanied car services for the year to 31 March 1996 and for freight services to 30 April 1995. As previously announced, I intend subject to the approval of Parliament and of the European Commission, to change the method of subsidy for passenger and accompanied car services to a block grant payable over a period of years in accordance with a contract to operate a specified level of service. I propose in due course to put the service out to competitive tender.

Abattoirs

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for an assessment of hygiene standards in Scottish abattoirs.

Sir Hector Monro: The hygiene assessment carried out on behalf of my Department covers five specific aspects of abattoir operations. These are ante-mortem inspection, slaughter and dressing, personnel and practices, maintenance and hygiene of premises and general condition and management.

Hygiene standards in Scottish abattoirs are generally good, although my Department is making specific efforts to encourage those with lower scores to improve their standards. The table shows the results recorded at the latest inspection visit to each slaughterhouse in Scotland for the period ending November 1994.

Scores band	All Scottish abattoirs	Numbers by category of slaughterhouses: Full EC approval	Low-throughput[1]	Temporary derogated[2]
41-50	0	0	0	0
51-60	10	4	1	5
61-70	16	11	4	1
71-80	16	12	1	3
81-90	5	4	1	0
91-100	1	0	0	1

[1] Throughput = 20 livestock units, or less, per week. [2] Abattoirs operating under workplan to upgrade to the structural standards laid down in the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1992. Completion of work is required by 31 December 1995.

Sickness Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he is taking to combat sickness absenteeism in (a) Registers of Scotland, (b) the Scottish Prison Service, (c) the Scottish Record Office (d) the Lord Advocate's Department and (e) the Scottish Office.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 March 1995]: Sickness absence is taken seriously by management and a number of local initiatives have been introduced with a view to reducing it to a minimum. In the Scottish Office, for example, managers are provided with regular information which enables them to monitor absences in their area. As well as taking steps to ensure greater control and management of sick absence, a number of health initiatives have been introduced, including the introduction of an alcohol policy, health screening for staff, the promotion of the benefits of exercise, a healthy life style and eating, the creation of a smoke-free environment and training in stress management.

Correspondence

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many letters were received in the Department from hon. Members last month.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 February 1995]: A total of 474 letters were received from hon. Members in January 1995.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many letters were sent to hon. Members last month by each Minister in the Department.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 February 1995]: The information requested for January 1995 is as follows:

Minister	Number of letters sent to hon. Members
Secretary of State	54
Minister of State	119
Lord James Douglas-Hamilton	62
Sir Hector Monro	47
Mr. Allan Stewart	51

Special Advisers

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the role of his special advisers employed to serve his Department.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 March 1995]: My special advisers assist my colleagues and me with that part of their work which is partly governmental and partly political. Their duties vary.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Alton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to prevent delays in the Government office on Merseyside in processing objective 1 applications for ERDF funding.

Mr. Eggar: One hundred and six applications have been approved in principle. Two have since been withdrawn. Forty-three grant offer letters have been issued. On 26 applications, further information is awaited from applicants. Thirty-five applications are currently with the Government office, where further information provided recently is being urgently assessed. These will be cleared as quickly as possible. Partners have been asked to ensure early provision of outstanding information, so that processing of all applications can be completed as soon as possible.

Assisted Areas

Mrs. Lait: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many grants have been offered under assisted area status; how many have been accepted; what estimate he has made of the number of jobs which should be created; and what was the total of public money spent and the total of the projects costs for (a) Dover/Deal, (b) Sittingbourne/Sheerness, (c) Folkestone, (d) Thanet and (e) the Isle of Wight.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested, as at the end of January 1995, is as follows:

	Number of grant offers	Number of grant offers accepted	Jobs created	Value of grants £000	Total Project costs £000
Dover and Deal	4	2	35	140	1,248
Sittingbourne and Sheerness	21	16	304	844	8,784
Folkestone	6	4	115	460	4,288
Thanet	14	12	187	1,545	8,350
Isle of Wight	10	9	142	738	5,688

Iraqi-British Interests Group

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what dates he or his representatives (a) met and (b) plan to meet members of the Iraqi-British Interests Group after its visit to Baghdad.

Mr. Ian Taylor: My officials met members of the Iraqi-British Interests Group on 7 and 9 March; there are no further meetings currently planned.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the terms of the communications licences issued by him to the Iraqi-British Interests Group before its recent visit to Baghdad; who were the members of the group; and which firms they represented.

Mr. Ian Taylor: It has been the policy of successive Administrations not to comment on individual licencing cases unless the public interest outweighs the need for confidentiality.

Arms Exports to Indonesia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what requests for export licences for the export of arms to Indonesia have been refused in the past 10 years.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The table shows the total number of export licence applications for goods on the military list of the Export of Goods (Control) Orders variously in force at the time.

Information for earlier years is available only at disproportionate cost.

Angola

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the purpose and outcome of the recent Department of Trade and Industry supported delegation to Angola.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The recent mission to Angola was the first foreign delegation to visit the country since the peace agreement was signed and the first UK mission since 1992. The mission was led by one of the Department's export promoters, David Chambers, on secondment from Hull Blythe—Angola.

The purpose of the mission was to explore opportunities in the Angolan oil sector, a sector which has remained unaffected by the civil war and Angola's economic difficulties and which has been an area of considerable success for UK companies in the past. Our decision to mount the mission was prompted by increased interest in the area among UK companies, including recent new investment by BP and a joint venture success involving AMEC, and it proved to be a success. Mission members identified at least $1.5 billion worth of new business in the oil sector and the trip is expected to give rise to further business in due course.

Menwith Hill Station

Mr. Madden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has made to the US authorities since 1992 about concerns from British industry and commerce that Menwith Hill station, in north Yorkshire, is engaged in communications monitoring to the disadvantage of United Kingdom commercial interests.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 9 March 1995]: My Department is investigating a report of interference from a radio station at Menwith Hill to a nearby radio station. The latter forms part of a network which provides a radio telephone service to airline passengers. No representations have been made to the US authorities.

Commercial Espionage

Mr. Madden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations he has received from United Kingdom industry and commerce about commercial espionage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 9 March 1995]: None.

Unpaid Telephone Bills

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the percentage of unpaid telephone bills, in arrears, at the end of the last financial year.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 13 March 1995]: This is a matter for the telecommunications operators.

Sickness Absenteeism

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures he is taking to combat sickness absenteeism in (a) Companies House, (b) the National Weights and Measures Agency, (c) the Accounts Services Agency, (d) the Patent Office, (e) the Insolvency Service, (f) NEL and (g) his Department.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 9 March 1995]: I have asked the chief executives of the agencies to write to the hon. member. As far as my Department is concerned the management of sickness absence has been identified as a priority for line managers, with an overall target of reducing this absence to the current level of similar organisations in the private sector.

Letter from John Hobday to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 9 March 1995:

I refer to your question of 28 February to the President of the Board of Trade about the measures he is taking to combat sickness absenteeism. I am answering in respect of the Accounts Services Agency (ASA).

ASA employs approximately 100 staff. In recent years the Agency's sickness absence rate has been exacerbated by the breakdown in health of, or injury to, a number of them. Alcoholism, burns, cancer, fractures, myocardial infarction, pregnancy complications and stress were involved. Over the period one officer died, three others were medically retired and one short term contract was not renewed, the officer concerned accounting for a significant amount of sick leave. Additionally, two officers are in the process of being medically retired and another has been given notice of dismissal on the grounds of poor attendance.

ASA fully recognises the problems generated by absenteeism and is addressing them.

Letter from David Durham to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 14 March 1995:

In his response to your recent PQ, the President of the Board of Trade asked me as Chief Executive of Companies House, to write to you outlining the measures taken by this Agency to combat sickness absenteeism.

Our sickness absence at Companies House for the last twelve months has been 4.41%. In considering this figure you should be aware that some 30% of our employees work part-time, and some 10% work on a shift basis. Traditionally in both private and public sectors, absenteeism rates are higher within these employment systems.

Our actual sickness absence record over the last few years has been as follows.

1993: 4.6%

1992: 5.3%

As you will see there has been a gradual improvement but this should not indicate that we are either satisfied or complacent with the latest figure.

We implement a comprehensive management framework to address the problem of absenteeism which includes the following measures:

1. All absenteeism is monitored on a regular basis and monthly league tables on sickness absenteeism are presented to managers of every section throughout Companies House. Managers of sections which are regularly above the average for our organisation are asked to explain the reasons for that discrepancy and to report on the actions they will be taking to improve their record.

2. All new managers attend a training programme in developing skills and expertise in "Managing Sickness Absence".

3. Follow up or refresher sessions are available for more experienced managers.

4. Our Personnel Section regularly monitors absence trends, long-term sickness and any dubious attendance patterns. During the last twelve months we have dismissed four people from our organisation as a result of unacceptable sickness absence.

5. For cases of genuine sickness absence, we offer advice to employees either through our Personnel Section, the staff counselling service or a locally based Civil Service doctor.

6. We encourage staff to take advantage of a variety of Health Screening opportunities and the Civil Service Sanatorium Society.

7. We have an on-site gymnasium and our social club offers a range of fitness classes throughout the year.

8. During the longer school holidays we operate play school facilities to ensure absence levels are not influenced by young family commitments.

9. We have set ourselves a target to reduce absenteeism below 4% by the beginning of 1996 and at least maintain, and hopefully improve, that record throughout the year.

I hope this information is what you require.

Letter from Desmond Flynn to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 7 March 1995:

In the absence of Peter Joyce, the Chief Executive, the President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question which asked what measures The Insolvency Service is taking to combat sickness absenteeism.

In recent years The Service has run Wellperson clinics which have helped to promote an understanding of health issues amongst our staff. At the same time we have been actively seeking to reduce the level of sick leave absences. We have clearly defined threshold points at which action by personnel managers is taken with regard to sick leave including, where appropriate, the involvement of staff counsellors. In more extreme cases such action has culminated in termination of services or medical retirement.

The active management of sick leave absences and the reduction of sick leave to the current level of The Service's private sector have been identified as priorities for all our line managers.

Letter from W. Edgar to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 14 March 1995:

I would refer to your Parliamentary Question to the President of the Board of Trade on the subject of sickness absenteeism. I would confirm that NEL's policy is in line with that of the DTI and that the management of sickness absence has been identified as a priority of all line managers in NEL with the objective of reducing this form of absence to a level similar to that found in well run organisations in the private sector. To assist Managers in the task of affecting this reduction the frequency of information provided to each Manager showing the recorded sickness levels within his command has been increased and a quarterly review of the position is made at the Directorate and Divisional Managers meetings.

Letter from Seton Bennett to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 14 March 1995:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply on behalf of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory to your Parliamentary Question about the management of sickness absenteeism.

This Agency had one of the lowest absenteeism rates in DTI until the last two years, when the average figure has been distorted by the inclusion of one member of staff (of a complement of 48) who was on long-term sickness absence leading to eventual retirement on medical grounds. His absence accounts for the greater part of the increase seen in the average figure for NWML.

Nevertheless, I have identified the management of sickness absence as a priority for line managers within this Agency in line with the action to be taken in the rest of DTI. Other proactive steps are being taken here to ensure that sickness absence is maintained below the level of similar organisations elsewhere.

Letter from P. R. S. Hartnack to Mr. David Chidgey, dated 14 March 1995:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to respond on behalf of the Patent Office to your Parliamentary Question about sickness absence.

The management of sickness absence is a priority for line managers within the Patent Office and we have a manual to help managers deal with unsatisfactory attendance. In addition we have a sickness counselling scheme which is effective in addressing short term absences and we also use staff counselling to help staff with long-term health difficulties.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Council of Ministers

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give an account of decisions taken in the European Community Council of Ministers meeting on 9 March; if he will make it his policy that the United Kingdom will not accept majority voting on European Community immigration policy or visa policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The main results of the Council were as follows.

The member states signed a convention on simplified extradition procedures. This was the first convention to be adopted under the third pillar of the treaty on European Union.

In accordance with proposals originally put forward by the United Kingdom, the Council agreed in principle to focus in the short term on the preparation of a legally binding instrument on fraud affecting the Community budget that would deal only with key elements. This should enable the Council to meet the European Council's request that agreement on a legally binding instrument on this subject should be reached in the first half of 1995, and would be without prejudice to the continuation of more detailed work on fraud against the Community budget. The Government welcome this further progress in the fight against fraud.

The Council noted progress on the development of a convention covering jurisdiction and enforcement of judgments in matrimonial cases, known as the Brussels convention II. It agreed that officials should continue work with a view to the first part of the convention covering scope and jurisdiction, being concluded by June.

The Council adopted a joint action extending the remit of the Europol drugs unit in The Hague to cover the fight against illegal trade in radioactive and nuclear materials, the smuggling of persons, vehicle trafficking and associated money laundering operations.

The Council considered the outstanding issues arising from the draft Europol convention and instructed officials to continue to work to resolve them in the light of the views that had been expressed.

The Council requested the Committee of Permanent Representatives to consider remaining points of difficulty on the draft convention establishing a customs information system.

The Council reached broad agreement on the text of a regulation on a uniform format for visas, subject to a parliamentary scrutiny reserve entered by the UK pending debate in Parliament on the draft external frontiers convention and related matters.

The Council adopted a resolution on minimum guarantees for asylum procedures. The UK made a declaration that it would apply the prescribed procedures relating to any applications by nationals of member states to the extent permitted by domestic legislation.

Significant differences of view emerged during discussion of a draft resolution on burden sharing of temporarily displaced persons, on which the Council commissioned further work by officials.

The Council approved the third pillar contribution to the European Union's strategy on racism and xenophobia which will be considered by the European Council meeting at Cannes.

Immigration and visa matters are generally handled, in the European Union context, under the provisions of title VI—the third pillar—of the treaty of European Union. Proceedings under title VI are subject to a unanimity voting regime, and it is the Government's policy to ensure that this is maintained. The Community has competence under article 100c of the treaty of Rome only in relation to the common visa list and a uniform visa format. Article 100c provides that the uniform visa format is already subject to qualified majority voting: the common visa list will be subject to qualified majority voting from 1 January 1996.

Community Sentencing

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on community sentencing.

Mr. Howard: I will tomorrow lay before Parliament and publish a Green Paper which invites views on wide-ranging proposals intended to strengthen and simplify the arrangements for the punishment of offenders in the community.

Policing, Powys

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the future policing arrangements for the new unitary district of Powys.

Mr. Howard: I have consulted the forces, police authorities and local authorities in the area on the future policing arrangements for the new unitary district of Powys. In the light of the replies received, I have decided that the Dyfed Powys constabulary shall be responsible for policing the whole of the new district from 1 April 1996.

An order will be made in due course, under section 21A of the Police Act 1964, as inserted by section 14 of the Police and Magistrates' Courts Act 1994, to give effect to this decision, following discussions with the police authorities and forces concerned on the details of its content.

Police (Truck Cargo Vehicles)

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contribution is made by his Department to local police authority budgets to cover their responsibilities in providing necessary assistance to truck cargo heavy duty mark II vehicles.

Mr. Maclean: The level of assistance provided is an operational matter for the chief constable. Any costs are provided for in the same way as for other forms of policing.

Cautions

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cautions were issued by police forces in England and Wales in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Information on the number of persons cautioned by police force area is published annually in the "Criminal Statistics England and Wales", supplementary tables, Vol 3; table S3.7A of the 1990 edition and table S3.6A of the 1991 to 1993 editions refer to this. Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

1994 data will not be available until autumn 1995.

Intercepted Telephone Calls

Mr. Madden : To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if Government Communications Headquarters staff at Menwith Hill station are required to obtain warrants signed by him before intercepting domestic and international phone calls made in or from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 13 March 1995]: No. All interception of communications on public telecommunications systems in the United Kingdom is subject to the provisions of the Interception of Communications Act 1985, but ministerial responsibility for GCHQ is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

Asylum Seekers

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a breakdown of the number of applications for asylum in 1994 by (a) nationality and (b) location of application.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The information requested is given in the table.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum applicants refused asylum, having lost their appeal against the asylum decision, subsequently appealed against deportation in 1994.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The information requested is not available in the form requested.

Hunger Strikes

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what definition of a hunger strike is used by his Department; and what action is taken by police or prison staff when hunger strikes occur.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A hunger strike is a situation in which an individual refuses to take food and/or fluid.

The management and care of prisoners in Prison Service custody who refuse food and/or fluid is governed by the necessity to identify the underlying reasons for such refusal to eat or drink. There is also a necessity to distinguish between those who refuse while of sound mind and those who refuse at a time when, because of a mental illness, they are unable to make a rational judgment.

The governor and prison medical officer are informed of any prisoners not taking food or fluids. The refusal is recorded in the returned food book, which is signed daily by a medical officer. If the food and/or fluid refusal continues, the prisoner will be admitted to the health care centre or transferred to another prison with a higher level of nursing care. For those patients with impaired capacity for rational judgment, arrangements will be made to transfer them to a national health service psychiatric hospital for treatment under the terms of the Mental Health Act.

Once in the health care centre, the patient's condition is monitored on a daily basis by the prison medical officer, together with a consultant psychiatrist. If refusal persists, a specialist physician will be called in. Fluid is always available, and food is available each meal-time. The patient will be given every encouragement to resume feeding.

In the case of those whose mental capacity is not impaired, the medical officer will clarify the extent of the refusal, and inform the patient of the following:

- that they will continue to receive medical supervision and advice;
- that the medical officer, except in the most limited and exceptional circumstances, will not force-feed, hydrate, or otherwise artificially provide nutrition without the patient's consent;
- that they will be warned of the medical consequences of continuing refusal, and of the inevitable deterioration in health which will follow, until and unless medical intervention is requested.

The Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 limits the amount of time that a suspect can be held in police detention, normally to a maximum of 24 hours. It places responsibility for the welfare of people so detained on the custody officer, who is required to immediately call a police surgeon or, in urgent cases send the person to hospital, if a detained person appears to need medical attention.

There is no specific guidance issued to police for hunger strikes. As the Police and Criminal Evidence Act prescribes time limits for holding a suspect in police detention, a detained person is unlikely to be held long enough in police cells to be able to undertake a hunger strike.

Fines

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total of fines (a) imposed and (b) collected by magistrates and Crown courts in Wales in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Information held centrally, which is given in the table, shows the number of fines and the value of the amounts issued by type of court in Wales for 1990 to 1993.

1994 data will not be available until the autumn.

Information is not collected centrally by my Department on the amounts of fines paid.

Special Constables

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many special constables were employed by the Welsh police forces in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The number of special constables employed by the Welsh police forces in each year since 1990 is as follows:

As at 31 December	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
Dyfed-Powys	210	315	260	271	306

South Wales	257	352	432	534	488
Total	742	1,003	1,088	1,212	1,233

The Government have set forces a target of increasing the number of special constables in England and Wales to 30,000 by 1996. This is an increase of 10,000 on present strength.

As a result of the current national advertising campaign comprising both television commercials and press advertisements, inquiries and preliminary application forms received to date are as follows:

Bilateral Agreements

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 March, Official Report, column 655, when he proposes to negotiate a bilateral agreement with the Republic of Ireland; and if he will list those countries (a) with which the United kingdom has negotiated such bilateral agreements and (b) with which bilateral agreements are being negotiated.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 13 March 1995]: Following the implementation of the Football Spectators Act 1989, which extends only to England and Wales, we invited all countries who were members of the Union of European Football Associations, including the Republic of Ireland, to enter into bilateral agreements on corresponding offences. Following the disorder in Dublin on 15 February, my officials will again be raising with their Irish counterparts the prospects of an agreement.

We have also encouraged other member states which have ratified the 1985 European convention on spectator violence and misbehaviour at sports events and in particular at football matches to enter into such agreements with us.

Currently, we have bilateral agreements only with Scotland, Sweden and Italy. Unfortunately, it has not so far proved possible to reach more agreements. The negotiations themselves are usually long and tortuous, exacerbated by the fundamental differences between our legal system and that of the other country. Some countries see the restriction order, as set out in the 1989 Act, as a further criminal penalty which could be in breach of their own legal code through punishing a person twice for the same offence. There are also difficulties in the definitions of what constitutes a football-related offence in another country and whether they correspond to those offences set out in schedule 1 to the 1989 Act. Some countries, where hooliganism is not a significant problem, may not share the same priority in reaching an agreement over something which does not concern their own citizens, but only hooligans from this country. In some cases, on all but the most serious offences, a country may simply prefer as a matter of policy to deport a hooligan quickly without a court appearance, thereby removing the basis of a possible bilateral agreement.

Football Violence

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 27 February, Official Report, column 408, what proposals he has to introduce legislation to provide a separate power to prevent a person subject to a restriction order from leaving the country at the stipulated time.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 13 March 1995]: I refer the hon. member to my written answer of 2 March, Official Report, column 656. Although I sympathise with the hon. Member's desire for immediate action, it is important to consider carefully the full range of options, both legislative and administrative, that may be necessary to deal effectively with the problem of football hooliganism.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 March, Official Report, columns 655–56, if the restriction orders authority is now in a position to confirm whether the second person subject to a restriction order breached the terms of that order.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 13 March 1995]: I understand that the restriction orders authority has not yet received confirmation that the person concerned reported to a police station as required. The authority has therefore notified the police station nearest to his home address. It is for the local police to consider investigating the relevant circumstances and to determine whether a criminal offence has been committed under section 16 of the Football Spectators Act 1989.

Live Animal Transport, Shoreham

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the police received 26 hours' notification of the intended arrival of six cattle trucks at Shoreham port on the night of 6 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 13 February 1995]: No. I understand that Sussex police were informed at 3.30 pm on Monday 6 March that six lorries carrying live animals would be arriving at Shoreham that night. In the event, Sussex police instructed the lorries to turn back for operational and public safety reasons associated with the presence of demonstrators at Shoreham. Policing of the demonstrations is the responsibility of the chief constable of Sussex.

EMPLOYMENT

Training

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training providers existed as contractors for training for work provision during 1994–95; and how many contracts are being offered for 1995–96.

Mr. Paice: The Department contracts with training and enterprise councils for the delivery of training programmes including training for work. As private companies, TECs decide their own contracting arrangements with training providers. The Department does not collect information on TECs' contracts with providers.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has for transfers from training for work to supported self-employment for the year 1995–96 to attract a payment for training providers.

Mr. Paice: The Department makes payments to training and enterprise councils, not directly to training providers. The Department will make an outcome payment to TECs in respect of trainees who have been in unsupported self-employment for the 13 weeks immediately after leaving training for work.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the estimated number of start-ups for training for work schemes for 1995–96 who will receive enterprise allowance or equivalent support.

Mr. Paice: There are no targets set for the number of starts for trainees who will receive support during a period of self-employment while on training for work. It is for training and enterprise councils to determine the volume of such starts in the light of prevailing local circumstances.

Remploy

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how the process of awarding contracts to Remploy and other clothing contractors has been altered in the current year.

Miss Widdecombe: Contracts arrangements in the private sector are a matter for my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs, at the Department of Trade and Industry. As to contracts in the public sector, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) on 29 November 1994, Official Report, columns 637–39 when I announced the introduction of the special contracts arrangement.

Asbestos

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans his Department has to review the effectiveness of the current legislation protecting workers from the dangers of asbestos.

Mr. Oppenheim: The Health and Safety Executive is satisfied that current legislation and guidance provide an adequate framework for preventing and controlling the risks posed by exposure to asbestos dust. There are no plans to review the main legislation. However, the HSE is concerned to ensure compliance with the precautions required by legislation and that the risks posed by asbestos are properly understood. A campaign to this end is currently underway.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for how long the current Health and Safety Executive publicity awareness campaign concerning the risks of asbestos dust is expected to run.

Mr. Oppenheim: The Health and Safety Executive launched its asbestos awareness campaign targeted at building maintenance, repair and refurbishment workers on 6 February 1995. Its initial phase comprised advertisements in the national press and in some trade journals and a press conference on 2 March 1995. In the second phase of the campaign over the coming months, HSE inspectors and other appropriate enforcement authorities will publicise the dangers of exposure to asbestos dust, especially in their visits to premises where building renovation work is carried out.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many start-up businesses were supported by the enterprise allowance scheme or any of its renamed successors in each of the last five years.

Mr. Paice: The number of start-ups in England supported by the enterprise allowance scheme, known as the business start-up scheme since 1992, are shown in the following table:

1989–90: 63,500
1990–91: 50,300
1991–92: 41,800
1992–93: 33,600
1993–94: 34,500

Industrial Accidents

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he will be able to make an announcement on whether he supports the proposal that the Health and Safety Executive should report data on industrial accidents to both the European Commission and the European Environment Agency.

Mr. Oppenheim: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 28 February 1995, Official Report, column 557.

Career Development Loans

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many career development loans were made in (a) Wales and (b) Britain, between April 1993 and September 1994; what was their total value in each case; and what proportion of the total funds taken up by such loans for Britain was for lending in Wales.

Mr. Paice: Between April 1993 and September 1994, 17,607 career development loans with a total loan value of £52,074,087 were approved nationally.

This includes 656 loans approved in Wales with a total loan value of £1,929,244.50. This represents nearly 4 per cent. of the national total.

Disabled People

Mr. Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy to introduce legal forms of positive discrimination to enable companies to advertise for disabled employees specifically so that they could ensure that disabled quotas are reached.

Miss Widdecombe: Not enough people have chosen to register as disabled for all employers to meet the quota requirement. Employers are free to discriminate in favour of people with disabilities when recruiting; the Disability Discrimination Bill will not alter this position. The Bill will, however, make it unlawful for an employer to treat a disabled person less favourably than other people because of their disability, unless there are justifiable reasons.

Mr. Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what help his Department gives in making companies more aware of the benefits of employing disabled people.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department has an on-going programme of education and persuasion designed to make employers aware of the benefits of employing disabled people. Placing, assessment and counselling teams promote the "Code of Good Practice on the Employment of Disabled People" to employers. As well as giving advice to employers about recruitment and general practices relating to the employment of people with disabilities, the code also includes information about the full and effective role of people with disabilities at work. The Department has also mounted advertising campaigns this year, and in the previous two years, focusing on demonstrating the abilities of disabled people at work.

Social Affairs Council

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Aberdeen, South (Mr. Robertson) of 7 March, Official Report, column 133–35, if he will place in the Library (a) the memorandum on social clauses in trade agreements, (b) the resolution on implementation of legislation in the social field to be discussed at the EU Social Affairs Council on 27 March and (c) all relevant United Kingdom and EU documents pertaining thereto.

Miss Widdecombe: The presidency has not yet finalised the texts to be put to the Council. I shall be writing to the scrutiny committees about the state of play on these and other matters in advance of the Council. I shall place both documents in the Library when they become available.

Bereavement Leave

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much time an unemployed person is granted for bereavements, without being discounted as available for work.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Colin Pickthall, dated 14 March 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the amount of time an unemployed person is granted for bereavements, without being discounted as available for work.

It may help if I explain that the receipt of unemployment benefit, National Insurance contribution credits and income support when unemployed, is conditional upon a person being available for and actively seeking work. This means that the individual must be available to start work immediately; must not place such restrictions on the work they are willing to do as to leave them with no real prospects of finding a job; and must take those steps each week that offer them their best prospects of being offered work.

Availability is a daily condition which means that the client must be available to do some work on every day of claim, usually Monday to Saturday.

If a client declares to my people in local offices that they are not available for work for any day(s), Social Security regulations provide for their claim to be referred to an independent adjudication officer for a decision about entitlement.

However, my local office and section managers have some discretion in deciding whether a claim is referred or not. If a client is unable to attend on their normal signing day, or cannot attend a pre-arranged interview, because of a domestic crisis such as a bereavement, my people have discretion to treat the claim as straightforward, without reference to an adjudication officer. In such circumstances there are no time limits. I expect my people to use judgement and decide what is reasonable in the light of the circumstances of each case.

I hope this is helpful.

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for each standard region for each year since 1979 the average (a) hourly and (b) weekly (i) full-time and (ii) part-time (1) male and (2) female earnings, the total number and proportion of (c) male and (d) female (iii) part-time employees earning less than £5.88 per hour and (iv) full-time employees earning less than £221.50 per week, and the average weekly earnings of the top and bottom deciles of (e) full-time and (f) part-time, (v) male and (vi) female employees.

Mr. Oppenheim: Analyses by standard region of the new earnings survey results for full-time employees are published in part E of the report.

Tables 110 and 113 contain average gross weekly and hourly earnings, and the top and bottom deciles of weekly earnings, for men and women respectively.

Table 114 contains the sample numbers and the percentages with weekly earnings below a range of levels. These include £220 in 1994 but in 1979 the top of the range was £200 for men and £100 for women.

Table 115 contains similar information on a range of hourly earnings that included £6 per hour in 1994 but in 1979 the top of the range was £3.50 for men and £2.20 for women.

Information for part-time women is published in part F. Table 180 contains information similar to table 113 and table 175 contains information similar to table 115.

Copies of the new earnings survey reports can be found in the Library.

The information is not available for part-time men.

Workstart

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was (a) the number of places available each year, (b) the actual number taken up, (c) the number of people involved in the programme who are presently in employment and (d) the number of different employers involved in the programme, in respect of each pilot workstart programme.

Miss Widdecombe: Workstart was piloted in four areas between July 1993 and December 1994: Devon and Cornwall, Kent, Tyneside and south and south-west London. The figures requested are shown in the following table. All available places were taken up. In the survey of employers, published on 12 December 1994, over 80 per cent. of employers interviewed said they intended to keep the workstart employee on after the subsidy ended. The follow-up survey due to report in November 1995 will give more information on this matter. Five thousand places will be available on the further pilots, announced in the Budget, which will begin in April 1995.

Pilot	(b) the number of places taken up[1]	(c) the number of people still participating	(d) the number of employers involved[2]
Kent	468	238	380
Devon and Cornwall	626	433	309
Tyneside	243	137	130
South west and south London	238	108	144

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 14 March 1995.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 14 March.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is currently on an official visit to Israel, the occupied territories and Jordan. He is also accompanied by a large delegation of British business men.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister who authorised the approach by police to the journalist, David Johnston, of Radio Forth, to be offered the facility of direct communication with the then Prime Minister, in order to induce him to reveal the source of certain information relating to Lockerbie in December 1988.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

As has been repeatedly made clear it is not appropriate for the investigating authorities to give details of investigative steps which have been taken.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will discuss with Chancellor Kohl attempts by the Bundeskriminalamt and the Verfassungschütz to deflect blame for the Lockerbie crime from the Rhein-Main airport in Frankfurt, and the statement by the Bundesministerium of Justice on 20 February 1995 letter Geschäftzeichen 111 BLA 4038 E 634/88 about the absence of knowledge by the investigators of the public prosecutors office in Frankfurt of whether explosives which led to the crashing of the Pan Am plane got on board the feeder plane in Frankfurt am Main.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

No.

Mr. Dalyell: To aks the Prime Minister what assistance Her Majesty's Government are giving to relatives of the British Lockerbie victims in their presentation of a petition to the European Parliament, drawing attention to six years of effort to find the truth about Lockerbie.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

We have received no request to assist in this matter.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animal Transportation

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if a vet from his Department was present at Shoreham port on the night of 6 March for the arrival of six cattle trucks;

(2) what assessment he has made of whether the transport plan for the six truckloads of cattle destined to leave from Shoreham port on the night of 6 March was capable of being fulfilled, and whether the cattle were rested, fed and watered after 15 hours; what happened to the cattle; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: A veterinary officer was at the port awaiting the arrival of six trucks containing calves. In the event, a demonstration prevented two livestock lorries already on their way to Shoreham from reaching the port. I understand that these lorries returned with the calves to the premises or origin in Oxfordshire. Officials were satisfied that all the animals could be returned to their home premises within the 15-hour limit by which time the animals would have had to be fed and rested.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what time loading commenced of a consignment of calves which arrived in Brightlingsea on 3 March on to the vehicle which transported them to Brightlingsea; how many calves were on the vehicles; at what time and from where the journey to Brightlingsea began; what time they arrived at the port; what subsequently happened to them; when feeding of all the calves was completed; what time the vessel designated to ship the calves to the continent arrived at Brightlingsea; what time loading of the vessel commenced; what time loading of the vessel completed, and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: I understand that the journey of the 194 calves began at 05.30 hours from premises in Kent. The lorry carrying calves arrived at a lairage near Harwich shortly after 10.00 hours where it waited until convoyed to the port, arriving at about 14.00 hours. The calves were fed aboard the lorry between 18.00 hours and 19.50 hours. The vessel berthed at 23.10 hours and the calves were loaded from 23.30 hours and fed immediately. All were aboard by 23.45 hours. Sheep were loaded between 23.45 and 01.20 hours.

The other four livestock lorries were at local lairages ready to load calves already resting there. In the circumstances, loading of those animals for Shoreham did not even begin.

Journey plans had been scrutinised by officials before the proposed export journeys started and were satisfactory.

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is the aggregate estimated annual cost of the Meat Hygiene Service;

(2) what is the aggregate annual cost of all Meat Hygiene Service staff in the financial year 1995–96.

Mrs. Browning: The total estimated cost of the Meat Hygiene Service in 1995–96 is £53.4 million. Within this figure, £26.5 million relates to the cost of employed staff—excluding relief cover for holidays, sickness and so on—and £10.2 million is for contracted veterinary services.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what protection has been written into staff contracts of employment to cover the eventuality that the Meat Hygiene Service does not receive parliamentary approval.

Mrs. Browning: Parliamentary approval is not required for the setting up of the Meat Hygiene Service, which will be an agency of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Changes to secondary legislation are required to place responsibility for fresh meat and welfare enforcement on Ministers.

The majority of Meat Hygiene Service employees will be meat inspectors transferring from their local authority employers to the agency on 1 April 1995 in accordance with the provisions of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981.

Meat Hygiene Service staff employed by MAFF in advance of launch are subject to the Ministry's standard terms, which provide for three months notice or payment in lieu.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) on what date the chief executive of the Meat Hygiene Service was appointed;

(2) what is the total remuneration package for the chief executive of the Meat Hygiene Service.

Mrs. Browning: The appointment of the chief executive of the Meat Hygiene Service for an initial period of five years was announced on 19 May 1994 and he took up his post full time on 1 September 1994. The chief executive's annual salary is £70,000. In addition, he is eligible for an annual, non-pensionable performance-related bonus of up to 12.5 per cent. of basic pay.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food (1) what is the total number of staff appointed to the Meat Hygiene Service;

(2) what is the ultimate complement of full-time and part-time staff to be appointed to the Meat Hygiene Service.

Mrs. Browning: At launch, the Meat Hygiene Service will employ 947 staff, comprising 872 meat inspectors and veterinarians and 75 management and support staff. Veterinary services will be obtained also through contracts with veterinary practices. The complement of the Meat Hygiene Service will be subject to adjustments to reflect any changes in the number of licensed fresh meat premises and the requirements of the relevant legislation.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food (1) on what date it is proposed that the Meat Hygiene Service will become operational;

(2) on what date he made it his policy to establish the Meat Hygiene Service.

Mrs. Browning: In March 1992 the then Minister, my right hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer) announced the intention to create a national meat hygiene service, constituted as an agency of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, to take over the fresh meat hygiene enforcement currently carried out by local authorities.

The Meat Hygiene Service will become operational on 1 April 1995.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what premises have been acquired or leased by the Meat Hygiene Service.

Mrs. Browning: None. The Meat Hygiene Service is a minority occupier in Government offices in York, Cambridge, Wolverhampton, Taunton, Edinburgh and Cardiff.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what subordinate legislation is required to give effect to the Meat Hygiene Service; and what is the timetable for its introduction.

Mrs. Browning [holding answer on 13 March 1995]: Changes are needed to make Ministers responsible for the enforcement of fresh meat hygiene and welfare at slaughter legislation. The following regulations, which include other changes not relevant to the establishment of the Meat Hygiene Service, are being laid before Parliament to come into force on 1 April 1995:

The Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995

The Poultry Meat, Farmed Game Bird Meat and Rabbit Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995 and

The Welfare of Animals (Slaughter or Killing) Regulations 1995.

The following regulations will provide for Ministers to enforce controls in fresh meat plants over unfit meat and bovine offals.

The Animal By Products (Identification) Regulations 1995, and

The Bovine Offal (Prohibition) (Amendment) Regulations 1995.

The Meat (Hygiene, Inspection and Regulations 1995 (SI 1995/361) were laid before Parliament on 17 February and will, mostly, come into operation on 1 April 1995. Regulations 12 and 13 of these regulations, which provide for formal consultation on charges, come into operation on 13 March 1995.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) negative and (b) affirmative statutory instruments have been laid by his Department in each year since 1970; what proportion of the negative statutory instruments were the subject of prayers for their annulment; and what proportions of those prayers were debated.

Mr. Jack: Figures can be provided only from the year 1986 onwards without incurring disproportionate costs. These are as follows:

Type of statutory instrument

Year	Negative resolution	Affirmative resolution
1986	78	19
1987	66	13
1988	57	11
1989	72	22
1990	91	14
1991	71	12
1992	98	6
1993	94	5
1994	108	6

It should be borne in mind that not all statutory instruments impose requirements on business and some amend, replace or revoke existing statutory instruments.

No central records are kept of the number of negative statutory instruments which were the subject of a prayer and therefore no information can be supplied on the proportion debated.

Consultants

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list (a) the consultants, (b) the tasks for which they were employed and (c) the payments made to them from the budget of his Department in (i) 1992–93 and (ii) 1993–94.

Mr. Jack: Details of consultants employed by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in the years 1992–93 and 1993–94 and their tasks and of consultants employed by MAFF's executive agencies will be placed in the Library. The total cost to MAFF and the agencies in each year is as follows:

	1992–93 £	1993–94 £
MAFF (excluding ITD)	1,903,204	1,988,234
Information Technology Division	5,200,000	8,300,000
ADAS	387,000	985,845

Agriculture, Harrogate

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people were employed in agriculture in the Harrogate borough council area in each of the last 15 years.

Mr. Jack: The number of persons employed in agriculture in the local government district of Harrogate at June in each of the years from 1987 to 1994 is given in the table. Data for earlier years are not available.

Number of person employed in agriculture in the Harrogate LGD 1987 to 1994

Year	Number
1987	4,777
1988	4,738
1989	4,571
1990	4,457
1991	4,362
1992	4,285
1993	4,256
1994	4,162

Source:

June Census of Agriculture and Horticulture.

Notes:

1. Data relates to main holdings (minor holdings excluded).

2. Figures include all categories of workers—i.e. farmers, partners, directors (including spouses); salaried managers; hired workers; family workers; seasonal or casual workers.

Bio-fuel

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current estimated figures in hectares of land under crops used for bio-fuel purposes; what were the figures in (a) 1990, (b) 1991, (c) 1992 and (d) 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The main crop sources for bio-fuels are oilseed rape and short rotation coppice.

Prior to 1993 and the introduction of the arable area payments scheme oilseed rape grown for non-food uses was not recorded separately. In 1993, 24,087 hectares of oilseed rape, excluding high erucic acid rape grown primarily for use as a slipping agent, was planted on set-aside land for non-food outlets and oil produced will mainly have been used for bio-fuels and in pharmaceuticals. In 1994 this had risen to 78,402 hectares.

There is no scheme information on the amount of short rotation coppice grown for bio-fuels but it is estimated that in 1993 90 hectares had been planted for this purpose, and increased to 230 hectares in 1994. Under the third order under the non-fossil fuel obligation, NFFO 3, it is expected that over the next few years 5,000 to 7,000 hectares of short rotation coppice could be established.

The use of agricultural crops are renewable raw materials for industry and energy is a new development which the Government are keen to foster.

Milk

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of milk quota is currently owned by persons who are not active dairy farmers; and if he will make a statement

Mr. Jack: The intervention board keeps a record of individual producer's milk quota but not their milk production. Information on the percentage of milk quota owned by non-producing quota holders is therefore not available.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures are currently being taken in respect of the black market in milk.

Mr. Jack: The industry has taken excellent advantage of the intervention board's fraud freephone and provided many reports of trading in black market milk. The agency's team of investigators are vigorously following up a number of leads.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all White Papers, Green Papers and pamphlets issued by his Department, or agencies for which it is responsible, in 1994, giving in each case the total cost to the Exchequer of their production publication and distribution and what was the total equivalent cost in 1980.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 2 march 1995]: In respect of those White Papers, Green Papers and other publications published by HMSO all costs are borne by HMSO who aim to recover these from sales revenue. In addition, MAFF produces a wide range of reports, information booklets and other publications which are listed in the Department's publications catalogue, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House. The cost of producing, publishing and distributing such material in 1994–95 is expected to be about £2.2 million. Expenditure relating to all individual items could be ascertained only at disproportionate cost, but I should be happy to provide the hon. Member with further details relating to any publications in which he is particularly interested.

Publications produced by MAFF agencies are the responsibility of their chief executives. I have asked them to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Figures for 1980 are not available in a comparable form.

Letter from Dr. P. I. Stanley to Mr. Roland Boyes, dated 13 March 1995:

EXPENDITURE IN 1994 BY MAFF AND ITS AGENCIES ON WHITE PAPERS, GREEN PAPERS AND PAMPHLETS

No White Papers or Green Papers were published by the Central Science Laboratory (CSL) in 1994. However the Agency produced several information pamphlets including a Statement of Standards and several information pamphlets including a Statement of Standards and Quality of Service. The total cost of producing, publishing and distributing such material in the 1994–95 financial year is about £9,500.

CSL was launched as an executive agency of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (MAFF) on 1 April 1992 and therefore no comparable figure is available for 1980, when CSL formed part of the Department.

Letter from T. W. A. Little to Mr. Roland Boyes, dated 13 March 1995:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question about White Papers, Green Papers and Pamphlets issued by Agencies in 1994.

CVL publishes a number of pamphlets aimed at assisting the marketing of its services. In 1994 the cost of production of these items was £8,900 including VAT. The material is distributed in a wide variety of ways including handing-out at conferences and exhibitions, mailed with other material or collected from CVL Reception. Costs of distribution are not therefore kept separately.

CVL became an Agency in 1990 and so it is not possible to provide comparable costs with 1980 when CVL was part of the Department.

Letter from G. K. Bruce to Mr. Roland Boyes, dated 13 March 1995:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply, in respect of the Pesticides Safety Directorate, to your question about expenditure on selected publications.

The Pesticides Safety Directorate (PSD) has not produced any White papers or Green papers in 1994/95. It has produced two pamphlets; one setting out our customer service standards and one describing the work of the agency. The cost of producing these pamphlets was £1,655. Costs of other pamphlets with a wider Food Safety emphasis have been borne centrally and therefore covered in the return from MAFF.

As PSD was established as an agency on 1 April 1993 comparable figures for 1980 are not available.

Letter from J. M. Rutter to Mr. Roland Boyes, dated 6 March 1995:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question about the cost of the production, publication and distribution of certain publications by the Veterinary Medicines Directorate (VMD), as this is an operational matter for which I am responsible.

The Directorate was not established as a Next Steps Agency until 2 April 1990, nor does it issue any white papers or green papers. In 1994, the VMD issued the following pamphlets:

Sheep Dipping— published jointly in May 1994 with the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) and Department of the Environment. Production costs were met by the HSE, but the VMD paid for the distribution of copies to the 90,000 registered sheep farmers in the UK. The total cost of this distribution was £22,153.62.

VMD Customer Service Statement— published in July 1994. The total production and distribution costs for 7,000 copies was £3,453.13.

Two further pamphlets were published in house during 1994 at no extra cost.

AMELIA 1— Provisional Marketing Authorisations.

(A guidance note on new authorisation arrangements for veterinary medicines published in September 1994).

Veterinary Medicinal Products (Dips, injectables, pour ons and sprays) available in the UK for use as ectoparasiticides in sheep—

(Published in December 1994).

Letter from Guy Stapleton to Mr. Roland Boyes, dated 13 March 1995:

The Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply to your question about publications issued by the Ministry and MAFF-related agencies, as the information for the Intervention Board is a matter within my operational responsibility.

In 1994 HMSO published the Agency's Annual Report and Accounts 1993–94; the cost of copies for general sale was borne by HMSO, but the Intervention Board paid £12,500 for producing copies for the Agency's use. HMSO also published the Intervention Board's Annual Report for 1980 (Cmnd 8283). No expenditure was incurred by the Board.

The Agency itself publishes a range of scheme and information leaflets. These are listed in our Annual Reports, which are available in the Library of the House. Printing costs in 1994 were £28,225. Figures for 1980 are not available in a comparable form.

Letter from Dr. J. M. Walsh to Mr. Roland Boyes, dated 13 March 1995:

I have been asked by the Minister of Agriculture to reply direct to you concerning the question you tabled on Thursday 2nd March. In this you asked for a list of all white papers, green papers and pamphlets issued by his Department, or agencies, in 1994, giving in each case, the total cost to the Exchequer of their production, publication and distribution. You also required the total equivalent cost in 1980.

As an Agency, ADAS has not produced any white papers, green papers or equivalent pamphlets. ADAS was formed as an executive agency in 1992 so no comparison would be possible with the year 1980. ADAS continues to produce a number of leaflets in support of the marketing related to its commercial activity.

Lambs

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has put forward in the European Council of Ministers to eliminate the additional grants available for slaughtering in continental countries, after a short period of residency, of lambs reared in Wales but which thereafter qualify as lambs of these other countries and benefit from grant eligibility for which they would not have qualified had they been slaughtered in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: I am not aware that any member state of the EU is paying slaughter premiums on lambs slaughtered in its abattoirs. Such premiums would distort competition and constitute an illegal state aid. I would not hesitate to encourage the Commission to take action in the face of evidence that any such grants were paid.

Welsh lamb slaughtered in, say, France currently attracts a premium price on the market as compared with Welsh lamb exported to France in carcase form. This is because lambs slaughtered in France carry a French health stamp and can legitimately be described as "home killed", whatever their origin.

The Meat and Livestock Commission is making every effort to promote the image of British carcase meat exports on EU markets and has the full support of the Government in doing so.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many lambs were sold to market from farms in (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales in each of the past five years; and how many of the lambs from each country were exported.

Mr. Jack: The total number of United Kingdom lamb marketings are given in the following table. These are then broken down by those slaughtered in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland, and those exported live from the UK as a whole.

The number of lambs exported live is not broken down below the UK level.

Alkaloids in Foods

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, what research his Department is currently funding or initiating into the effects of pyrrolizidine alkaloids in foods: who is undertaking that research: what is its purpose: and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is currently funding one project at the university of Glasgow on pyrrolizidine alkaloids in foods. The project will study the relative toxicities of different pyrrolizidine alkaloids and should improve assessment of risk from ingestion of these alkaloids. Results of recent surveillance of levels of pyrrolizidine alkaloids in UK honey were published in the February edition of the Food Safety Information Bulletin.

Juice Plus

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what correspondence has been exchanged or received by or between Ministers in his Department in the last three years on the use, distribution or approval of Juice Plus.

Mrs. Browning: None.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of cases of food poisoning reported from (a) salmonella and (b) campylobacter in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Sackville: I have been asked to reply.

Data for 1981 to 1993 are published in the Steering Group on the Microbiological Safety of Food Annual Report 1993, copies of which are available in the Library.

The confirmed total for 1993 for all salmonellas is 30,654 and the provisional figure for 1994 is 30,427.

The provisional figure for 1994 for campylobacter is 44,315. The 1993 figure is still provisional at 39,383.

Anthrax

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of anthrax have been reported in each year since 1985.

Mrs. Browning: The number of confirmed cases of anthrax reported in England for the years in question is:

1985: 1
1986: 7
1987: 3
1988: 3
1989: 3
1990: 3
1991: 1
1992: 1
1993: 1
1994: 3

NATIONAL HERITAGE

VAT (Accommodation)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to press for a reduction in value added tax rates in the accommodation sector, following the report by McKinsey Inc.

Mr. Dorrell: The McKinsey study concluded that the effect of a reduction in VAT on our tourism revenues would be uncertain. It is not clear that taxation places our operators at a competitive disadvantage without comparing the total tax burden on them with that carried by their European competitors, who have to bear the costs of the social chapter; and it is not clear that the benefits of a VAT reduction would be passed on to customers. I intend to help the accommodation sector improve value for money by means of the measures I announced on 1 March.

Children's Play

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many responses he received with regard to the restructuring of children's play, showing (a) the total number of responses, (b) the number of responses, (i) in favour of creating a national body and (ii) opposing the creation of a new national body and (c) the number of responses (1) in favour of extending national lottery funding to children's play activities and (2) opposing the extension of national lottery funding to children's play activities.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department has received a total of 135 responses regarding future arrangements for children's play. Sixty-five of the individuals and organisations which responded were in favour of the creation of a national body and 24 were in favour of children's play activities being eligible for national lottery funding. None of the responses opposed either of these ideas.

English Heritage Commission

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 20 December, Official Report, column 1165, who replaced Sir Hugh Cubitt when his appointment as a member of the English Heritage Commission ended on 31 December; and if regard was given in making this appointment, to the desirability of at least one member of this commission having knowledge of local government.

Mr. Dorrell: I am currently considering new appointments to the English Heritage Commission, including a replacement for Sir Hugh Cubitt, and will give due regard to the desirability of at least one member having knowledge of local government when making these appointments.

Cultural Property Ownership

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement about the negotiations to be held next June in Rome when the final draft of a treaty on cultural property ownership will be considered; and what is his assessment of their effect on the buying and selling of antiquities in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 9 March 1995]: I can confirm that there will be a diplomatic conference in Rome from 7 to 24 June this year, to discuss the draft Unidroit convention on the international return of stolen or illegally exported cultural objects. It is our present intention that the UK will be represented. As the convention will be subject to further amendment at the conference, I cannot anticipate whether the UK will become a signatory or what effect its provision might have on the buying and selling of antiquities in the United Kingdom.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Tranquilliser Addiction

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to provide legal aid to help people addicted to tranquillisers to pursue their cases against drug companies.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Civil legal aid is available for almost all proceedings through the courts of England and Wales, subject to tests as to the means of the applicant, and the merits of his or her case. Decisions on the grant or refusal of civil legal aid are taken by the Legal Aid Board, and I cannot intervene in its decisions.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many cases are currently being pursued in the courts by people addicted to tranquillisers against drug companies.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is not available centrally.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Former Prisoners of War

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what backing Her Majesty's Ambassador in Tokyo gave to former British prisoners of war of the Japanese when they visited Japan recently to claim compensation for their treatment and that of other prisoners of the Japanese in the second world war.

Mr. Goodlad: The Ambassador met and briefed the former prisoners during their visit to Japan. He helped them to meet a representative of the Japanese Government and to pay tribute to their fallen comrades at the Commonwealth war graves cemetery.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will define what he means by the word "dud" in his reply to the Adjournment debate on 1 February, referring to a document of air intelligence unit of the US air force in relation to payment by Ali Akbar Mostashemi to terrorist groups for a contract to bomb an airliner.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: When the report in question was assessed, it was found to be no more than an unsubstantiated rumour of no intelligence value.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will submit to the Committee on Intelligence the transcripts of conversations, in 1988, between Iranian Government officials recording their satisfaction with the Lockerbie explosion.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As the hon. Gentleman knows, we do not comment on such matters.

Embassy, Berlin

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to develop the British embassy in Berlin; what is the estimated value of the present site; what is the projected cost of the redevelopment work; how many staff will be employed in the embassy; how much office space, residential accommodation and what recreational and restaurant facilities will be provided; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We own the site of the former embassy in Berlin, destroyed during world war two. Its value is estimated at £11 million. The cost of construction of a new building on that site together with the cost of an adjoining site which is being acquired, is estimated at £21 million. This will enable a fully functioning embassy to be built and provide office accommodation for 80 UK-based and 80 local staff. No residential accommodation will be built. A staff canteen, recreation room and library will be provided. Conference and exhibition facilities will also be provided for use by British exporters and other organisations.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what sites were considered for the new British embassy in Berlin; who made the decision on the site and on what advice; what provisional arrangements will be made and at what cost to ensure the effective continuation of the embassy's work during the period of redevelopment; and for how long it is expected to last.

Mr. Goodlad: Various possibilities were considered for the establishment of a new embassy in Berlin. The most cost-effective option was chosen. The decision we took was to construct a new building on a site we already part owned.

The work of the British embassy will continue in Bonn and at the present British embassy, Berlin office, at 32/34 Unter den Linden, until the opening of the new building, planned for early 1999, when staff will be transferred.

Social Development Summit

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the world summit for social development which was held in Copenhagen from 6 to 12 March.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The world summit for social development provided an opportunity for discussion of the key development issues of poverty reduction, job creation and improving social cohesion, and for ideas to be shared at a high level on how these problems might be overcome. My right hon. and noble Friend Baroness Chalker of Wallasey represented the Government and made a keynote speech setting out the Government's good record on tackling problems of poverty and unemployment at home, and our support through the aid programme for developing countries' efforts to achieve sustainable people-centred development

The Government are pleased that the summit's documentation includes strong references to human rights, good governance, developing country debt, trade liberalisation and the need for economic growth.

EDUCATION

Local Education Authority Budgets

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list for each local education authority budgeted spending for 1995–96.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on local authorities' budgets for 1995–96 will become available centrally later in the year.

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what is the average level of hold-back from local education authority educational budgets for local authorities controlled by (a) Conservative, (b) Labour and (c) Liberal Democrat administrations;

(2) what is the level of hold-back within the expenditure of the Coventry education authority;

(3) what is the level of hold-back within the education expenditure of (a) Coventry, (b) Solihull, (c) Birmingham, (d) Warwickshire, (e) Wandsworth, (f) Westminster, (g) Sandwell, (h) Wolverhampton and (i) Walsall local education authorities.

Mr. Robin Squire: The percentage of the potential schools budget retained centrally for 1994–95 by the LEAs in question is as follows:[1]

	Percentage
Coventry	12.9
Solihull	9.6
Birmingham	13.2
Warwickshire	14.3
Wandsworth[2]	17.7
Westminster	11.5
Sandwell	13.5
Wolverhampton	11.3
Walsall	12.3

[1] The figures are taken from the answer given on 17 October 1994 to the hon. Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) Official Report, columns 27–36.

[2] In the case of the inner London authorities (other than Westminster) the introduction of local management of Schools was deferred until April 1992, and the delegation requirements applicable to those authorities differ from those applicable elsewhere.

I will write to my hon. Friend about average hold-back by LEAs according to political control.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many education authorities have made representations that their budgets of 1995–96 are insufficient for their (a) education and (b) youth services.

Mr. Robin Squire: My colleagues and I have received representations from a large number of local education authorities about aspects of their budgets for 1995–96.

European Proposals

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the state of negotiation of the EC SOCRATES and Youth for Europe III proposals.

Mr. Boswell: Both proposals were finally adopted at the Council of Ministers' meeting on 10 March. The Council agreed that the SOCRATES decision should contain a finance article setting the programme's budget at 850 million ECU—£689 million[1]—over five years, subject to neutral review by the Council and the European Parliament after two years. A finance article was also agreed for Youth for Europe III setting its budget at 126 million ECU—£102 million—over five years. The proposals had previously been approved by the European Parliament on 1 March.

SOCRATES is the first major European Union initiative to encourage practical co-operation at all levels of education across Europe. While each member state will keep its distinctive education system, schools will benefit from developing new partnerships with schools from other European countries. These partnerships will particularly help children learning the languages of the European Union.

In addition, there will be continuing support throughout the education system for teachers, colleges and universities, including continuation of the ERASMUS programme. I hope, later this month, to launch the national agencies which will distribute money to institutions which bid successfully.

[1] converted at 1 ECU = £0.8103.

Student Loans Company

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many applications for loans the Student Loans Company received for the year 1994–95; how many were accepted; and how many of these have not yet been paid to the applicant.

Mr. Boswell: This is a matter for the Student Loans Company. I have asked the acting chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Nursery Education

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to her answer of 9 February, Official Report, column 392, how much Government proposals on the provision of nursery education will cost (a) nationally and (b) in Norfolk in 1995–96.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has been consulting a wide range of practitioners and professionals to inform the development of detailed proposals on my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's commitment to provide, over time, a pre-school place for all four-year-olds whose parents wish to take it up. The nature of the proposals will determine the costs.

Schools (Transfers)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many schools are being transferred from Hereford and Worcester local education authority to Birmingham local education authority from April.

Mr. Robin Squire: Five.

Birmingham LEA

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what has been the total capital allocation for education to Birmingham local education authority since 1984–85; what has been the actual capital expenditure on education in Birmingham in the same period; and what information she has on the cost of dealing with the backlog in repairs and renovations in Birmingham's schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: The total capital allocation for education and actual capital expenditure on education in Birmingham has been as follows:

£ million

	County and controlled schools[1]	Voluntary aided schools[3]	Total allocation	Actual outturn[4]
1984–85	[2]6.5	0.2	6.7	[7]—

Notes:

[1] All totals given relate to the announced annual allocations only, and therefore exclude any supplementary funding, either in the form of supplementary credit approvals (post-1990), or prescribed additional funding (pre-1990).

[2] Figures up to and including 1989–90 represent annual notional capital allocations. The figures prior to 1993–94 also include an element of further education and sixth-form college funding.

[3] The Local Government and Housing Act 1989 introduced annual capital guidelines as a means of allocating borrowing power to local education authorities. This took effect from 1 April 1990.

[4] The establishment of the Further Education Funding Council in 1993 resulted in the separate determination of funding for further education and sixth-form colleges. ACG figures from 1993–94 therefore exclude this area of funding.

[5] Figures for voluntary aided education are as originally announced. They exclude any later allocations made in the year as a result of, for example, the approval of statutory proposals.

[6] Figures are derived from capital outturn returns submitted by LEAs to the Department of the Environment. Capital expenditure represents gross outturn on all areas of education, including the urban programme.

[7] Department of Environment data not available.

[8] 1993–94 figure provisional only.

[9] Figures relate to financial years. As 1994–95 FY is not yet complete, figures are not available after 1993–94.

Expenditure on repairs and renovations is a matter for the LEA.

Surplus School Places

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many surplus school places there are in Devon.

Mr. Robin Squire: There were 9,032—10 per cent.—primary surplus school places and 4,160—7 per cent.—secondary surplus school places in LEA maintained schools in Devon in January 1994. Data on surplus places in grant-maintained schools in Devon are not available.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what has been the number of surplus school places proposed to be removed as a result of local education authority reorganisation plans submitted to her which were (a) approved and (b) rejected by her as a consequence of a parallel proposal for grant maintained status for each year since 1990.

Mr. Robin Squire: In case where there were both proposals to cease to maintain a school and parallel proposals for grant-maintained status, the table shows for each year since 1990 the school capacity proposed to be removed by local education authority school reorganisation plans which were (a) approved and (b) rejected and the proposals for grant-maintained status approved.

Year proposals published	(a) Closure approved	(b) GM application approved

Secondary Schools

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what proportion of pupils attended (a) state and (b) independent secondary schools in (i) 1979, (ii) 1985 and (iii) 1992;

(2) what proportion of pupils attended (a) state and (b) independent primary schools in (i) 1979, (ii) 1985 and (iii) 1993.

Mr. Robin Squire: The percentage of pupils attending maintained primary and secondary schools and independent schools in England for the years requested is shown in the table. Independent schools are not classified into primary and secondary schools.

[1] Excluding sixth form colleges which ceased to be classified as schools from April 1993.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the independent schools that have entered the grant-maintained sector, excluding religious schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: To date, no independent schools have entered the grant-maintained sector under the provisions introduced last year by the Education Act 1993. A number of non-denominational independent schools have expressed an interest or sought further information.

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what action she is taking to encourage independent schools to enter the state sector of education.

Mr. Robin Squire: Recent changes to the law now allow independent schools to apply to join the grant-maintained sector. Guidance on this has been made available to interested parties. All proposals which come forward are considered on their merits.

Schools (Costs)

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the current difference between the average annual cost of a secondary place in the state sector, and the average annual fees for a day place in the private sector.

Mr. Robin Squire: The average spending per pupil in local education authority maintained secondary schools in England is estimated to be £2,250 in the financial year 1993–94. Comprehensive data from which the average annual fees for a day place in the independent sector could be calculated are not collected centrally; but the average fee charged for pupils in the assisted places scheme in the academic year 1993–94 was £4,112. For various reasons, however, the two figures quoted are not directly comparable, not least because the figure for maintained schools excludes significant items of school-related expenditure.

Hampshire County Council

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what has been the expenditure of Hampshire county council on education each year since 1979 expressed in cash terms, real terms and as a real terms percentage increase or decrease on 1979 and on the previous year.

Mr. Robin Squire: The table shows total expenditure by Hampshire local education authority from 1979–80 to 1993–94, the latest year for which provisional outturn figures are available, in cash and real terms, together with the percentage increases on 1979 and on the previous year. These figures have not been adjusted for any changes of function.

Grammar Schools

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of pupils attended selective grammar schools in (a) 1979, (b) 1985 and (c) 1992.

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what were the average class sizes in (a) state secondary and (b) independent schools in (i) 1979, (ii) 1985 and (iii) 1993.

Mr. Robin Squire: The average size of single teacher classes in maintained secondary schools in England for the years requested is shown in the table. Information on the size of classes in independent schools is not held centrally.

DEFENCE

Euro 2000 Plane

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the allocation of work on the Euro 2000 plane to each country involved, relative to their share of planes ordered;

(2) how many Euro 2000 planes have been ordered by each participating country.

Mr. Freeman: The partner nations in the Eurofighter 2000 project agreed in 1988 that workshares in the development phase should be Germany 33 per cent., Italy 21 per cent., Spain 13 per cent. and the United Kingdom 33 per cent. These were based on declared offtakes of Germany 250, Italy 165, Spain 100 and United Kingdom 250 aircraft. Firm commitments and consequent workshare allocations for the production phase have yet to be decided.

St. Helenians

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what correspondence there has been between his Department and defence contractors employing St. Helenians to work on the Falkland Islands about payment or other treatment of St. Helenians on a differential basis from British ex-patriates; and if he will place copies of that correspondence in the Library.

Mr. Freeman: A search has failed to bring to light any correspondence between my Department and the contractors in question about the conditions of employment of St. Helenians in the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what policy he has for ensuring that the contractors employed to work at the Falkland Islands garrison do not discriminate on a racist basis in the payment of salaries.

Mr. Freeman: Two Ministry of Defence contractors, Turners Ltd. and Kelvins International Services, employ St. Helenian workers in the Falkland Islands. Both contracts contain a non-discrimination clause.

Gulf War

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what biological weapons detection assets were employed by Her Majesty's armed forces during the Gulf war.

Mr. Soames: This matter is for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, CBDE, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Dr. David Clark, dated 14 March 1995:

QUESTION 5, ORDER PAPER 9 MARCH 1995

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what biological weapons detection assets were employed by Her Majesty's Armed Forces during the Gulf War, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them.

3. The biological weapons detection assets deployed with the UK Armed Forces during the Gulf conflict comprised:

a. The nine Biological Detection Systems which provided a capability to detect the presence of biological warfare agent in the atmosphere.

b. Stand-by Assay Kits which were deployed both with the Biological Detection Systems and separately. The Stand-by Assay Kits provided a capability to analyse swab samples for the presence of biological warfare agent.

c. SIBCA kits. Sampling and Identification of Biological and Chemical Agent (SIBCA) kits were deployed with the UK Armed Forces to the Gulf. These kits would have been used to obtain samples from a suspected attack. A chain of custody would have been provided for the return of the samples to the United Kingdom for analysis at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment he has made of the United States Department of Defence nuclear, biological, and chemical log from the Gulf war, specifically of those incidents cited on (a) 18 January 1991 at 05.00 hours, (b) 19 January 1991 at (i) 04.30 hours and (ii) 16.10 hours, (c) 20 January 1991 at (i) 17.10 hours and (ii) 22.40 hours, (d) 3 March 1991 at (i) 15.15 hours, (ii) 18.10 hours and (iii) 18.20 hours and (e) 12 March 1991 at (i) 16.20 hours and (ii) 17.40 hours; and if he will make a statement;

(2) on what occasions information on chemical weapons compiled by monitoring teams during the Gulf War has been shared by the allies.

Mr. Soames: These are matters for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Dr. David Clark, dated 14 March 1995:

QUESTIONS 4 AND 6, ORDER PAPER 9 MARCH 1995

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what assessment he has made of the United States Department of Defence Nuclear, Biological, and Chemical (NBC) Log from the Gulf War, specifically of those incidents cited on (a) 18 January 1991 at 0500 hours, (b) 19 January 1991 at (i) 0430 hours and (ii) 1610 hours, (c) 20 January 1991 at (i) 1710 hours and (ii) 2240 hours (d) 3 March 1991 at (i) 1515 hours, (ii) 1810 hours and (iii) 1820 hours and (e) 12 March 1991 at (i) 1620 hours and (ii) 1740 hours; and if he will make a statement and on what occasions information on chemical weapons compiled by monitoring teams during the Gulf War has been shared by the Allies, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them.

3. The United States Department of Defence Nuclear Biological and Chemical log from the Gulf conflict was drawn upon by the US Department of Defence in preparing material used to brief the US Defence Science Board Task Force on Persian Gulf War Health Effects. An abbreviated selection of chemical/biological incidents extracted from these logs is contained in Appendix B, pages 1–6 of the report of the Defence Science Board issued in June 1994.

4. As Director General and Chief Executive of CBDE Porton Down, I was invited to attend and participated as a specialist adviser to the Defence Science Board Task Force on Persian Gulf War Health Effects and was therefore present at the briefings to the Defence Science Board by the Department of Defence on the incidents reported in the US Department of Defence NBC log from the Gulf conflict and summarised in Appendix B to the Defence Science Board Task Force. The Defence Science Board Task Force concluded that they had found no evidence that either chemical or biological warfare was deployed at any level against the coalition forces or that there were any exposures of US Service members to chemical or biological warfare agents in Kuwait or Saudi Arabia. The Task Force noted that they were aware of one soldier who was blistered, plausibly from mustard gas, after entering a bunker in Iraq during the post-war period. The report noted that the one plausible injury occurred during inspection and demolition of Iraqi bunkers and stated that "It seemed to be the result of accidental contact of the soldier with contaminated soil in a bunker that may have been used previously, (probably during the Iran-Iraq war) for storing mustard".

5. The United Kingdom and the United States utilised a wide range of detectors so as to provide warning to our forces prior to exposure to a harmful concentration of agent. Such detectors are sensitive and there are carefully laid down procedures in the event of any single detector alarming for checks to be carried out so as to determine whether an alarm was indeed caused by a chemical or biological weapon attack. The incidents cited from the US Department of Defence NBC log from the Gulf conflict did not result in any confirmation that chemical or biological warfare agents had been used by Iraq against the coalition forces. The coalition forces in the Gulf War had arrangements whereby, had there been a confirmed chemical or biological weapons attack in one area, this information would have been between the Allies and, in particular, appropriate warning would have been given to other units of the coalition forces in the hazard area. It is clear from examination of the US Department of Defence NBC log from the Gulf conflict that there was sharing of information on unconfirmed alarms arising from chemical or biological weapons detectors during the Gulf War with coalition forces. However, there was no confirmed use of chemical or biological warfare agents during the Gulf conflict.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his American counterpart concerning the use of chemical weapons during the Gulf war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: This matter is for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Dr. David Clarke, dated 14 March 1995:

QUESTION 7, ORDER PAPER 9 MARCH 1995

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what recent discussions he has had with his American counterpart concerning the use of chemical weapons during the Gulf War; and if he will make a statement, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them.

3. The Ministry of Defence has had continuing discussions with the US Department of Defence concerning the Gulf conflict. Officials have participated in the US Defence Science Board Task Force on Persian Gulf Health Effects which was briefed by the US and by the UK participant on whether there was any evidence, which there was not, to suggest that chemical weapons had been used in the Gulf conflict. The UK view continues to be that there was no evidence of the use of chemical or biological weapons by Iraq against the coalition forces during the Gulf conflict.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of (a) allied air raids on Iraqi chemical weapons installations during the Gulf war and (b) whether chemical agents could have been released into the atmosphere as a result of these raids; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: This matter is for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Dr. David Clark, dated 14 March 1995:

QUESTION 8, ORDER PAPER 9 MARCH 1995

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what assessment he has made of (a) Allied air raids on Iraqi chemical weapons installations during the Gulf War and (b) whether chemical agents could have been released into the atmosphere as a result of these raids; and if he will make a statement, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them.

3. The Ministry of Defence during Operation GRANBY made assessments of the potential hazard to Service personnel resulting from the Allied bombing of Iraqi targets at which chemical weapons were produced or stored. These assessment were based on various assumptions for the quantity of agent that might be released as a result of a bombing attack and for the associated meteorological conditions. The result of the assessment indicated that even assuming simultaneous release of the majority of agent from several bunkers under meteorological conditions which favoured the downwind travel of the agent cloud and ignoring the fact that chemical agents are organic materials which are destroyed by combustion, the maximum distance at which there would be any hazard was of the order of a few tens of kilometres. In practice, simultaneous release is unlikely to occur, agent will be destroyed by combustion and meteorological conditions will be less favourable resulting in a significantly reduced downwind hazard distance.

4. Whilst chemical agents could have been released into the atmosphere as a result of the Allied air raids, there is no evidence to indicate that the resulting concentrations of agent in the atmosphere resulted in any harm to Iraqi personnel at those installations or in their vicinity, let alone the Allied Forces some hundreds of kilometres away from those installations.

Iraq (Chemical Weapons)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has received any evidence concerning current Iraqi chemical weapons capabilities.

Mr. Soames: My Department continues to assimilate evidence on current Iraqi chemical weapons capabilities from a number of sources, including the published reports by the UN Special Commission.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when sand suspected of carrying traces of chemical weapons or radioactivity was sent to Britain from (a) Israel, (b) Saudi Arabia, (c) Kuwait and (d) Iraq for testing at CBDE Porton Down.

Mr. Soames: This matter is for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Dr. David Clark, dated 14 March 1995:

QUESTION 10, ORDER PAPER 9 MARCH 1995

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking when sand suspected of carrying traces of chemical weapons or radioactivity was sent to Britain from (a) Israel, (b) Saudi Arabia, (c) Kuwait and (d) Iraq for testing at CBDE Porton Down has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them.

3. Information on the analysis of samples collected from Iraq and sent to CBDE Porton Down was provided in the Official Report, 2 March 1995, columns 684–686; the samples analysed at CBDE Porton Down were described as soil samples although they are likely to contain varying quantities of sand. Some of the samples analysed in support of the United Special Commission (UNSCOM) on Iraq were in support of an investigation of the alleged use of chemical weapons against the Marsh Arabs in southern Iraq.

4. No sand suspected of carrying traces of chemical warfare agents have been sent from Israel, Saudi Arabia or Kuwait to CBDE Porton Down for analysis. No sand suspected of carrying traces of radioactivity from any of the countries named have been sent for testing at CBDE Porton Down.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reports he has received confirming the detection of chemical weapons use during the 1990–91 Gulf war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: This is for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Dr. David Clark, dated 14 March 1995:

Question 13, ORDER PAPER 9 MARCH 1995

1. Your parliamentary question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what reports he has received confirming the detection of chemical weapons use during the 1990–91 Gulf War; and if he will make a statement, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them.

3. Although during the 1990–91 Gulf conflict there were unconfirmed reports of the detection of chemical warfare agents, no confirmed reports of the detection of chemical warfare agents have been received.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the report by the Ministry of Defence of Czech Republic stating that chemical weapons were used by Iraq during the Gulf war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: This matter is for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Dr. David Clark, dated 14 March 1995:

QUESTION 14, ORDER PAPER 9 MARCH 1995

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what assessment he has made of the report by the Ministry of Defence of the Czech Republic stating that chemical weapons were used by Iraq during the Gulf War, and if he will make a statement, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them.

3. The report made by the Ministry of Defence of the Czech Republic described the participation of the Czechoslovak anti-chemical unit in the Persian Gulf conflict. The Czech report stated that:

> "On the basis of the stated facts it is possible to pronounce the conclusion that the event cannot be linked in any way with the use of chemical weapons, that is, their application in combat actions and that harm to individuals of the Czechoslovak anti-chemical unit influenced by toxic combat substances could not have occurred".

In addition, we are aware that the United States Department of Defence has reviewed carefully the reports of the Czech detections. The US Department of Defence has recently concluded that they were unable to validate the Czech reports and state that the Czechs themselves never were able to identify the source of their detections. The UK conclusion continues to be that chemical weapons were not used by Iraq during the Gulf conflict.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussion he has had with his Czech counterpart concerning the use of chemical weapons during the Gulf war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: This matter is for the Chemical, and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive, CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Dr. David Clark, dated 14 March 1995:

QUESTION 15, ORDER PAPER 9 MARCH 1995

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what recent discussion he has had with his Czech counterpart concerning the use of chemical weapons during the Gulf War; and if he will make a statement, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them.

3. There have been bilateral discussions between representatives of the Ministry of Defence and representatives of the Czech Republic in late 1994. In discussions with the Chief of the Czech Chemical Troops, it was said that it was improbable that a cloud could have blow from the Iraqi facilities to reach the Czech detectors and further that the trace amounts which had been detected by the Czech equipments could not have had any effect on the health of Service personnel. There was therefore no evidence that Iraq had used chemical weapons in the Gulf conflict.

Service Personnel (Suicide)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many veterans of the Gulf war in (a) the Army, (b) the RAF and (c) the Royal Navy have committed suicide in each of the years since the Gulf war.

Mr. Soames: Since the Gulf war, one naval Gulf war veteran has committed suicide, in 1991. There have been no suicides by Army veterans of the Gulf war. The figures for the RAF are as follows:

1992: 0
1993: 2
1994: 1

These numbers related only to those veterans of the Gulf war who were still serving with the armed forces at the time of their suicide.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of (a) the Army, (b) the RAF and (c) the Royal Navy have committed suicide in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Soames: The numbers of service personnel confirmed by the coroner to have committed suicide in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available are as follows:

University Bursaries Scheme

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of those who took advantage of his Department's university bursaries scheme subsequently resigned before the minimum return of service period had expired for each year since 1979.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 3 March 1995]: The numbers of students awarded Royal Navy and Royal Air Force bursaries who resigned before completing their university course are given in the table. The number of students awarded Army bursaries who resigned before completing their university course or during their initial officer training are also given. The figures provided are those available for the years since 1979. No information is held centrally on the numbers who left the services after initial officer training, but before completing the required return of service, or of those in the Royal Navy and Royal Air Force who left during initial officer training. No records are kept for civilians as, in common with other industry schemes, students are not required to complete any return of service.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the cost of his Department's university bursaries scheme for each year since 1979.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 3 March 1995]: Expenditure on university bursary awards by my Department, in those years since 1979 for which figures are available, is as shown in the table:

Financial year	Royal Navy £	Army £	Royal Air Force £
1979–80	—	101,700	—
1980–81	—	99,900	—

1994–95[1]	81,000	606,000	250,000

It is not possible separately to identify comparable figures for my Department's civilian staff. Figures are available, however, which include bursary awards, running costs for MOD student engineer training centres, salaries during pre-university year and vacation placements with MOD, travel and subsistence on MOD duty and the production of MOD training literature. The figures are as follows:

1992–93: 3,149,400
1993–94: 2,610,200
1994–95:[1] 2,256,000
Note: [1] Figures are estimates.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the number of bursaries awarded to university students under his Department's arrangements for officer entry by ethnic status and gender in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 3 March 1995]: Details of bursary awards by ethnic origin are not held. A breakdown of bursary awards by gender, for those years since 1979 where information is available, is as follows:

Financial year	Royal Navy		Army		Royal Air Force		Civilian
	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female

Hospital Units

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress he has made on the choice of location for his Department's two new hospital units.

Mr. Soames: Taking account of a range of Defence-related factors, and in consultation with the Department of Health and the NHS, we have selected as the sites for the new Ministry of Defence hospital units the Frimley Park Hospital NHS trust in Surrey and the Peterborough Hospitals NHS trust in Cambridgeshire. Final contractual negotiations will now begin with the trusts concerned. We shall aim to have units fully established at these locations by April 1996.

WALES

Road Schemes

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the Welsh parliamentary constituencies in which lies each scheme in the Welsh Office's road programme.

Mr. Gwilyn Jones: Details of the forward trunk road programme were published in "The Departmental Report 1995 Welsh Office (The Governments's Expenditure Plans 1995–96 to 1997–98)". Copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House. The information requested is as follows:

[1]High priority schemes on which it is planned to start work in the three years covered by the government's expenditure plans i.e. before April 1998.

[2] Schemes which are being taken forward but are unlikely to start before April 1998 because of outstanding design and statutory procedures.

[3] Schemes on which resources are not being committed to bring them to a start of works. These schemes will be reviewed annually with consideration given to adding them to the above categories or deleting them from the programme.

Peripatetic Teachers

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total grant awarded under section 21 of the Education Act 1980 per local education authority to support Welsh peripatetic teachers during (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94 and (c) 1994–95.

Mr. Richards: The relevant figures are shown the following table:

Local education authority	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
Clwyd	182,000	185,000	204,500
Dyfed	180,000	183,000	183,500
Gwent	205,000	328,000	328,500
Gwynedd	207,000	210,000	210,500
Mid Glamorgan	224,000	227,000	227,500
Powys	162,000	175,000	185,000
South Glamorgan	170,000	170,000	180,500
West Glamorgan	209,000	212,100	212,500
Totals	1,539.000	1,691.100	1,732.500

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many Welsh peripatetic teachers were supported per local education authority under section 21 of the Education Act 1980 during (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94 and (c) 1994–95.

Mr. Richards: The relevant figures are shown in the following table:

(a) Welsh peripatetic teachers supported under section 21 of the Education Act 1980

Local education authority	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
Clwyd	7	7	8
Dyfed	7	7	7
Gwynedd	8	8	8
Gwent	10	[1]25	[1]25
Mid Glamorgan	8	8	8
Powys	9	9.5	10
South Glamorgan	10	10.5	10.5
West Glamorgan	10	7	7

[1]Figures for Gwent local education authority for 1993–94 and 1994–95 include support teachers (athrawon cynnal).

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total amount of grant awarded under section 21 of the Education Act 1980 to support Welsh peripatetic teachers during 1995–96.

Mr. Richards: £1,970 has been allocated to local education authorities in Wales under section 21 of the Education Act 1980 for 1995–96, £20,000 more than in 1994–95. In accordance with the authorities' priorities, 77 per cent. of this—£1,519,000—has been earmarked for peripatetic teachers.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, how many Welsh peripatetic teachers will be supported per local education authority by section 21 of the Education Act 1980 during 1995–96.

Mr. Richards: For 1995–96, £1,519,000 has been awarded to support teams of peripatetic teachers in local education authorities in Wales. This will support a total of approximately 70 full-time equivalent posts, but an exact figure for each local authority is not possible as grade structures vary from county to county.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions parliamentary questions from the hon. member for Cardiff, West in relation to non-departmental public bodies have been answered in the form of a request to the relevant chairman or chief executive of that body to write to the hon. Member (a) since 1 January 1995 and (b) between the beginning of the current parliamentary Session and December 31 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The figures are (a) seven and (b) one.

Hospital Waiting Times

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales for what reasons the list of medical specialties included in the February 1995 issue of the waiting times information bulletin published by the Welsh Health Common Services Authority omitted neuro-surgery, dermatology and spinal surgery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Information published in the bulletin relates to procedures, not specialties. The procedures included are those identified by general practitioners as being most useful in helping patients to choose a consultant. No requests have been made for the inclusion of procedures in neuro-surgery, dermatology or spinal surgery. As the intention is to extend the range of procedures covered by the bulletin, any broadly based demand by general practitioners for additional information would be welcomed and acted on.

School Transport

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the legal responsibilities of local education authorities which hire vehicles for the transport of children to and from school which are not driven by licensed taxi drivers.

Mr. Richards: It is for local education authorities to make satisfactory arrangements for the health and safety of pupils including those for whom they provide transport.

Homelessness

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many households have been accepted as homeless by local authorities in rural areas in Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on homeless cases accepted by local authorities in rural areas in Wales is provided in the following table:

Link

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made in reviewing Link.

Mr. David Hunt: I have today placed in the Library of the House the report of the recently completed review of Link.

Link is an important initiative which supports research projects undertaken in partnership between industry and the science base. The review report makes a number of recommendations to improve the operation of the Link mechanism. These include proposals to streamline approval mechanisms; to increase flexibility and to facilitate and encourage the exploitation of knowledge generated in the Link projects. The Government intend to implement these recommendations, further enhancing Link's effectiveness and its contribution to wealth creation and improvements in the quality of life.

We expect Link to be an important mechanism for implementing the outcomes of the technology foresight programme, in partnership between industry, the research base and Government. In announcing the allocation of the science budget on 2 February, I earmarked £3 million in 1995–96 to fund the research council's contribution to new Link programmes. With contributions from other Government Departments and industry these new programmes will target key areas of promise and importance identified by technology foresight.

I am establishing a new Link board, replacing the existing Link steering group, to advise Government on the operation of Link. The board's principal role will be to take an independent strategic overview of the Link initiatives and its portfolio of programmes. Its membership will be:

Dr. John Parnaby CBE FEng (Chairman)
Susan Bird
Dr. Alan Calder
Dr. Ashok Ganguly
Professor Stan Mason
Professor John Mavor FEng FRSE
Herb Nahapiet
Dr. Brian Richards CBE
Phillip Ruffles FEng
Professor David Wallace FRS
Dr. Robert Whelan

The Department of Trade and Industry, the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council and the Biotechnology and Biological Science Research Council will be represented on the board at a senior level.

ENVIRONMENT

Newtown Harbour

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the Newtown river to be designated under the Ramsar convention on the conservation of wetlands of international importance.

Mr. Atkins: Newtown harbour site of special scientific interest forms part of the potential Southhampton water and Solent Ramsar site. English Nature expects to recommend listing of this site to the Department, following public consultation, within a year.

River Medina

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review the classification of the wetlands bordering the River Medina.

Mr. Atkins: English Nature proposes to extend the River Medina site of special scientific interest and include it within the recommended boundary for the potential Southhampton Water and Solent special protection area and Ramsar site. My right hon. Friend will consider EN's recommendation in due course.

Westminster Redevelopment

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to investigate the events surrounding the redevelopment of the block bounded by Baker street, Blandford street, George street and Manchester street in Westminster and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: The Secretary of State has no plans at present.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations have been made to him over the redevelopment of the block bounded by Blandford street, Manchester street, George street and Baker street in Westminster, and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: The chief executive of Westminster city council has written to the Secretary of State about this matter and I an considering the issues raised.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the listed buildings on the block bounded by Baker street, George street, Blandford street and Manchester street in Westminster, were de-listed prior to their demolition or modification.

Sir Paul Beresford: Listing and de-listing of buildings is now the responsibility of the Secretary of State for National Heritage. However, I understand that no listed buildings have, in fact, been deliberately demolished in the block concerned. Two listed buildings collapsed but have been reinstated following grant of listed building consent.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to enforce the decision made by his predecessor in 1981 that the block bounded by Baker street, Manchester street, Blandford street and George street in Westminster should be preserved.

Sir Paul Beresford: None. In the event of a breach of planning or listed building control, responsibility for day to day enforcement rests with the local planning authority.

Water Board Chairmen

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the remuneration of the chairmen of each of the water boards in England and Wales in each of the three years prior to privatisation.

Mr. Atkins: Information about the remuneration of water authority chairmen can be found in "Public Bodies", issued by the Cabinet Office—Office of Public Service and Science. Copies of this publication for the years prior to privatisation are available in the Library.

Community Charge

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence his Department has of poll tax payments made under attachment of earnings orders not being paid over by the employer concerned to the local authority involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Community charge attachment of earnings orders are administered by billing authorities and are not monitored centrally.

An attachment of earnings order places obligations on an employer to make deductions from a debtor's pay and pass them to the issuing authority by the 18th day of the following month. Any failure by the employer to comply with the terms of an attachment of earnings order is an offence and he may be liable to a fine.

Water and Sewerage Companies

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what has been the differential between dividends paid by appointed businesses in the water and sewerage industry and the dividends paid by the group companies for each year since privatisation;

(2) if he will list (a) the dividends paid by the appointed businesses and (b) the dividends paid by the group companies for each of the water and sewerage companies in England and Wales for each year since privatisation.

Mr. Atkins: Information on company dividends is published in the annual reports and accounts of the appointed businesses and the group companies.

Government Car Service (Natural Gas)

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the performance of the ministerial car which was converted to run on natural gas; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: The Government car service is still carrying out trials on the car, which has been used extensively by Ministers and officials from this Department and others. It is expected that trials will continue for a further three months. Final assessment of the car's performance and that of a second car which GCS will be taking delivery of in the near future, will take into account the emissions performance, fuel economy, cost-effectiveness and the response of both drivers and passengers.

Listed Buildings

Sir Mark Lennox-Boyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment under what law a local planning authority is empowered to insist that an inquirer should require listed building consent to install a burglar alarm in a listed building with the provision of an outside bell box on the face of that listed building.

Sir Paul Beresford: Section 7 of the Planning (Listed Buildings and Conservation Areas) Act 1990 provides that consent is normally required for any works of alteration of a listed building which would affect its character as a building of special architectural or historic interest.

Reclaimed Colliery Sites

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the colliery sites which have been reclaimed since 1990 under the provisions of the Moynihan agreement.

Sir Paul Beresford: I understand from British Coal that the colliery sites reclaimed, or in the process of reclamation, since 1990 are Barnsley Main, Creswell, Dearne Valley, Denby Grange and Treeton. There are a further 13 sites where British Coal has concluded, or is in the process of concluding negotiations on appropriate reclamation schemes.

Power Station Emissions

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were annual actual emissions of (a) nitrogen dioxide, (b) sulphur dioxide, (c) all oxides of nitrogen and (d) particulates from each of the fossil-fuelled power stations operating in (i) 1980, ii) 1984, iii) 1985 and (iv) each year since 1990.

Mr. Atkins: I enclose details of the emissions from power stations that Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution holds centrally and which have been placed on the large combustion plant directive inventory. These are the SO_2, NO_x and particulate emissions from National Power and PowerGen for 1991 to 1993—emission data on particulates are held only for 1993. The 1994 emissions are not yet available.

Data for total emissions from power stations have been compiled within the national atmospheric emissions inventory by the National Environmental Technology Centre, formerly Warren Spring Laboratory. Available information. for 1980, 1984 and 1985 is given.

The other information requested was not collected for previous years.

Hastings Shingle Bank

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department will issue the Government view requested by the Crown Estate on the application by a consortium of companies for a licence to dredge a further 30 million tonnes of material over a 10-year period from the currently licensed Hastings shingle bank.

Sir Paul Beresford: After careful consideration, a letter is today being sent to the Crown Estate indicating that my Department is minded to issue a favourable Government view on this application, subject to the imposition of stringent conditions. These include limiting the maximum amount of material to be dredged to 15 million tonnes and limiting the term of the licence to five years.

The dredging of marine aggregates makes an important contribution to the supply of minerals for a wide range of purposes for the construction industry and beach nourishment. The material on the Hastings shingle bank is of a particularly high quality.

In indicating that the Government are minded to issue a favourable Government view in respect of this application, the Government wish to stress that, in addition to reducing the amount of material to be extracted and limiting the term of the licence to five years, they have also decided to impose tough conditions on working arrangements and monitoring. These will ensure that essential fishing and amenity interests are protected.

A Government view letter will be issued once the conditions have been finalised.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the amount of interest receipts earned by each county council for the year 1993–94, separating out the capital financing element; if he will list the counties' budgeted estimates for interest receipts for 1994–95 and 1995–96.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The information requested is given. Estimates for 1995–96 are not yet available.

EXTERNAL INTEREST RECEIPTS: ENGLISH COUNTY COUNCILS

Capital Financing Interest Receipts

This consists of external interest on provision for credit liabilities including reserved capital receipts.

The estimates of interest on provision for credit liabilities reflect the extent to which authorities have used reserved receipts to repay debt early, and are not therefore comparable with the interest receipt element in the standard spending assessment capital financing block, which assumes that no part of reserved receipts is used to repay debt early.

Other Interest Receipts

This consists of external interest receipts and dividends including those derived from Housing Act advances.

Community Forests

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the land use planning implications of the community forest programme.

Sir Paul Beresford: The designation of a community forest had no direct statutory implications for the planning process. It does not confer a more restrictive, or more permissive, of land use planning designation of the area. The planting of trees and the provision of public access are voluntary. The statutory role and responsibilities of the local planning authorities are unaffected. Local community forest teams do not have any status within the statutory land use planning system.

Planning applications are determined in accordance with the statutory development plan, and any other material considerations. Each community forest has a non-statutory forest plan which describes how the forest team working with a variety of partners propose to create the forest. Since new woodlands on a significant scale may have implications for other land uses, local planning authorities should take approved community forest plans into account in formulating their policies and proposals for development and use of land in development plans.

Although an approved community forest plan might be a material consideration in deciding a planning application within a forest, policies and proposals that are likely to provide the basis for deciding such applications or determining conditions to be attached to relevant planning permissions should be set out in the development plan, which is subject to statutory procedures.

Community forests should be shown on structure plan key diagrams and on local plan proposals maps. Development plans should facilitate the establishment of agreed community forests and provide that any development proposals within them should respect the woodland setting. Local planning authorities should be flexible in their approach to negotiating planting and landscaping requirements with developers. Any planting or landscaping required, whether on-site or off-site, should be directly related to the particular development proposal and should be no more than is necessary to overcome planning objections to it. Conversely planning permission should not be granted simply because applicants are prepared to plant trees.

Any development proposal within community forests in the green belt should be subject to the normal policies controlling development in green belts. Community forests provide an effective mechanism for achieving the positive objectives for the use of green-belt land set out in planning policy guidance 2, revised in January 1995.

Peat

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment if he will make public the results of consultation responses to the draft mineral planning guidance note guidelines for peat provision in England, including the place of alternative materials, issued by his Department in September 1994.

Sir Paul Beresford: Yes. I have today placed copies of a list of all those who responded to the consultation together with a summary of their views in the Library of the House. A copy of any individual response can be inspected in the library of my Department.

Local Authorities (Retendering Directions)

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has yet considered the responses by Walsall metropolitan borough council and Canterbury city council to the notices served on the authorities on 21 November 1994 and 11 January 1995 under section 13 of the Local Government Act 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B Jones: My right hon. Friend has considered carefully the responses which Walsall metropolitan borough council and Canterbury city council have made to the notices served on the authorities on 21 November 1994 and 11 January 1995, and has today given the authorities directions under section 14 of the Local Government Act 1988.

The direction given to Walsall metropolitan borough council requires the authority to retender the contract for the repair and maintenance of vehicles and plant, which was the subject of the notice, so that new arrangements are in place by 1 April 1996, and to seek my right hon. Friend's consent should it wish to reassign the work in-house.

The direction given to Canterbury city council requires the authority to retender the contract for street cleansing and related services, which was the subject of the notice, so that new arrangements are in place by 1 January 1996, and to seek my right hon. Friend's consent should they wish to reassign the work to the direct service organisation.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, when the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee—Advisory Committee on the Safety of Nuclear Installations joint study group examining site selection for radioactive waste repositories will be published.

Mr. Atkins: Sir John Knill, the chairman of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee, was invited last year to chair a joint study group drawn from members of RWMAC and the Advisory Committee on the Safety of Nuclear Installations to consider the approach to site selection for radioactive waste disposal facilities and the criteria for ensuring the protection of human health.

The study group's report has been published today, together with the minority views of two members. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House. I welcome the report and minority views as a valuable contribution to the debate on this issue. They represent advice to the Government and are not a statement of policy. The Government's response will be published in due course, together with the final conclusions of the review of radioactive waste management policy.

Education Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates of the costs of (a) teaching staff, (b) books and equipment and (c) repairs and maintenance he made when calculating the control total for the education service block of the total standard spending for 1995–96.

Mr. Robert B. Jones [holding answer 13 March 1995]: In reaching his decision on the control total for local authority spending on education for 1995–96, my right hon. Friend took account of probable pay and non-pay inflation, rising school rolls, and other relevant spending pressures. The education standard spending assessments calculated for individual local authorities are not spending targets and the level of spending on teaching staff, books, equipment, repairs and maintenance is a matter for local authorities and schools themselves.

Tourism

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local authorities in England which employ a director of tourism services or similar.

Mr. Dorrell: I have been asked to reply.

The "Municipal Year Book 1995" lists 177 local authorities in England which employ a "tourism officer". Not all those listed, however, are senior officers or heads of department, or responsible solely for tourism; to distinguish and list those which are would involve disproportionate cost.

HEALTH

Prescription Charges

14. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the rate of increase in prescription charges since 1978.

Mr. Malone: Increases in national health service prescription charges have never been linked to the rate of inflation; nor is the level of the charge itself related to the cost of an individual prescription item or to the cost to the NHS of dispensing it. The charge is a reasonable sum paid by those who can afford to do so. Our extensive arrangements for exemption and for charge remission under the NHS low-income scheme are among the most generous in Europe. They ensure that only those able to afford to pay are asked to do so.

Waiting Lists

15. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what, at the latest date, are the total figures for all waiting lists in all NHS hospitals and trusts.

Mr. Malone: Provisional figures show that, at the end of December 1994, the latest date for which information is available, 1,071,638 people in England were waiting for in-patient or day case treatment.

Generic Drugs

16. Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what efforts are being made by her Department to increase the proportion of generic drugs prescribed by general practitioners in place of their branded equivalents.

Mr. Malone: The Department's policies to promote cost-effective prescribing by general practitioners have brought about significant and continuing increases in the use of generic medicines.

"The Health of the Nation"

17. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of Sate for Health what conclusions she has reached about the "The Health of the Nation" from the 1991 census.

Mr. Sackville: The 1991 census predates the publication in July 1992 of the Government's health strategy "The Health of the Nation". However, census data help in establishing a good baseline for accurate population estimates. These are used in calculating incidence and mortality rates, enabling "The Health of the Nation" targets to be accurately measured.

Asthma, Newbury

18. Mr. Rendel: To aks the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change in the incidence of asthma in the Newbury area since 1988.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Richard Eassie, chairman of Berkshire health authority, for details.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average morbidity in terms of annual admissions to hospital per 100,000 population in each regional health authority and district health authority for asthma in (a) 1980, (b) 1984, (c) 1985 and (d) in each year since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: Figures for 1990–91, 1991–92 and 1992–93 are shown in the table. Comparable figures for the earlier years and by district are not available.

NHS, Cheshire

19. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the future structure of the NHS in Cheshire.

Mr. Malone: As my hon. Friend is aware, the Secretary of State recently agreed to establish a new South Cheshire district health authority from 1 April 1995 to replace the Chester and South and East Cheshire DHAs. By changing the boundaries of adjacent DHAs most of Cheshire now falls within the new South Cheshire DHA and North Cheshire DHA. Any further changes to the boundaries of health authorities in Cheshire will be the subject of public consultation if and when the Health Authorities Bill has received Royal Assent.

Consultants

20. Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the proportion of time spent by NHS consultant doctors in the private sector.

Mr. Malone: It is a statutory requirement and an underpinning principle of the conduct of private practice in national health service hospitals, agreed with the medical profession, that private practice work should not significantly interfere with a hospital's NHS contracts. Within this framework, consultants are free to undertake private work in addition to their NHS duties and in their own time, sometimes using resources bought from the health service. The combination of private practice and NHS treatment means that, overall, more patients are treated than if health care was only available through the NHS.

28. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to reduce the cost to NHS trusts of dispensing with the services of consultants who do not meet the required professional standards.

Mr. Malone: It is for individual national health service employers to taken decisions about their staff. They should exercise this responsibility with full regard to probity and accountability. They need to ensure that every effort is made to keep the infrequent costs of dismissal of consultants under control.

Waiting Times

21. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change in the average waiting time for NHS patients since 1989.

Mr. Malone: The average waiting time of people on a waiting list for hospital admission has fallen from 9.3 months in March 1989 to 4.6 months in September 1994.

GP Fundholders

22. Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many GP fundholders practices will pilot total purchasing for fundholders in Anglia and Oxford region, and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: I welcome the fact that 12 practices in four separate pilot projects, covering a total population of 159,000 will pilot total purchasing in anglia and Oxford region and will take part in the national evaluation programme. Fundholders and health authorities are working in partnership and have made clear their commitment to this important project in which general practitioners will take responsibility for purchasing all hospital and community health care for their patients.

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to extend GP fundholding; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland) earlier today.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 401, if she will now publish information for 1993–94 on general practitioner fundholders' savings, by region.

Mr. Malone [holding answer 14 February 1995]: The information requested is shown in the table. Nationally, retained savings equalled £64.2 million in 1993–94, about 3.5 per cent. of budgets set—similar to the levels of efficiency savings made by fundholders in the first two years of the scheme.

Savings are held by family health services authorities on behalf of the patients of fundholders. They may be retained for up to four years, to be used for the benefit of patients of the practice as outlined in the practice's annual business plan.

Community Care

23. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she next expects to meet Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation to discuss the implications for disabled persons of the Government's community care policy.

Mr. Bowis: I meet disability organisations on a regular basis and discuss a range of issues including community care. RADAR has not requested a meeting recently, so I do not have any specific plans for a meeting with it.

27. Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will review the criteria for the distribution and expenditure of the special transitional grant for community care; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: These are kept under review.

Health Care, West London

24. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will next meet the chairman of the Hammersmith Hospitals NHS trust to discuss health care in west London.

Mr. Malone: I plan to meet Sir Christopher Bland on 6 April 1995.

Boxers

25. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research is being carried out on brain damage to boxers.

Mr. Malone: The Department of Health and the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, are not currently undertaking any research specifically into brain damage to boxers. However, the MRC, the main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research, spent £761,000 on research into head injury in 1993–94, a proportion of which may be relevant to brain damage in boxers. In addition, the council supports research in a number of areas that are relevant to brain damage in boxers including dementia, pain, vision, cognitive changes and brain repair.

The Department of Health has commissioned a study entitled "Rehabilitation of Brain Injured Adults", which is estimated to cost some £1.2 million.

Domiciliary Care

26. Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what safeguards exist to ensure proper standards of domiciliary care.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. member to the reply I gave the right hon. member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 14 February, column 644.

Nurses and Midwives

29. Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes there have been in the numbers of qualified nurses and midwives over the last decade; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Immunisation and Cancer Screening

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made of the effect of the GP contract on immunisation and cancer screening services.

Mr. Malone: When the new general practitioner contract was introduced in 1990, 89 per cent. of GPs met targets for childhood immunisation and 86 per cent. for cancer screening. By April 1993, this had increased to 96 per cent. of GPs meeting childhood immunisation targets and 98 per cent. cancer screening targets. This shows clearly the positive impact of the GP contract on these services.

Sir Duncan Nicol

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 1 March, Official Report, column 586, if she will provide details of the actual (a) pension payment and (b) redundancy payment made to Sir Duncan Nicol.

Mr. Sackville: It is not common practice to make public personal information of this kind. I shall write to the hon. Member with background information.

Epilepsy

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many brain operations were carried out for intractable non-lesional epilepsy in the last year for which figures are available in the age groups (a) zero to 18 years, (b) 18 to 45 years and (c) 45 years and above.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Hampshire Social Services

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the expenditure of Hampshire country council on social services each year since 1979 expressed in cash terms, real terms and as a real terms percentage increase or decrease on 1979 and the previous year.

Mr. Bowis: The information is shown in the table.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many specialist breast cancer units there are; what are their locations; and what plans there are to increase their number.

Mr. Sackville: Information is not available centrally on the number or location of specialist breast cancer units. It is for health authorities to determine whether additional breast cancer services are required.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has taken place into what is the best time in a women's menstrual cycle to have surgery.

Mr. Sackville: We are aware of a number of published studies into the best time in a woman's menstrual cycle to have surgery for breast cancer. There is no conclusive evidence about the most appropriate time for breast cancer surgery; most suggest that prognosis is worse for those who have surgery in the early part of the menstrual cycle. One recent study suggested that it is the perimenstrual period that is the most disadvantageous, another shows no variation in outcome related to menstrual phase.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research is available to suggest whether women who breast feed are less likely to contract breast cancer.

Mr. Sackville: There is some evidence to suggest that mothers who breast feed may be less likely to develop breast cancer. The most recent large international study was a World Health Organisation collaborative study published in 1993 in the International Journal of Epidemiology. This concluded that long-term lactation may reduce the risk of breast cancer.

Local Base Statistics

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will state when the Office of Population Censuses and Statistics will make available to local authorities the local base statistics for subdivisions of wards originally promised for mid-1994; and what are the reasons for the delays in processing this information.

Mr. Sackville: 1991 census local base statistics for sub-divisions of wards has already been produced. With this particular product customers were able to specify their own breakdown of wards in terms of enumeration districts. There was, however, a delay in their production, caused by an extension to the deadline for orders from customers, due to limited initial interest, so that the maximum number could be processed simultaneously in an effort to keep costs down.

Breastfeeding

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy on supporting the promotion of breastfeeding; what measures are being taken to support breastfeeding; and what future plans she has to promote breastfeeding.

Mr. Sackville: Based on medical advice, the Government have consistently supported breastfeeding as the best means of feeding a baby. We set up, under "The Health of the Nation" initiative, the national breastfeeding working group to coordinate action to promote and facilitate breastfeeding. We will be issuing fresh guidance on breastfeeding to the national health service shortly, drawing on the work of the national breastfeeding working group. We provide nationally produced publicity material for National Breastfeeding Awareness Week, which this year will run from the 22 to 26 May. We are contributing towards the cost of the Health Visitors Association and Royal College of Midwives joint training programme "Invest in Breast Together" which will be launched during National Breastfeeding Awareness Week. We also provide funding, through section 64 grant aid, to the three voluntary organisations supporting breastfeeding.

We have taken steps to restrict the advertising and promotion of baby milks in the infant formula and follow-on formula regulations which came into force on 1 March 1995. These give a statutory basis to the restrictions on advertising in place since 1983 under the voluntary agreement with the baby milk manufacturers.

The quinquennial infant feeding surveys also provide information on breastfeeding and the factors likely to influence a woman's choice on how she feeds her baby. Field work for the 1995 survey will start later this year.

Baby Milk Advertising

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the impact of the commercial advertising of baby milk formula on the health of infants, with particular reference to those in low-income families.

Mr. Sackville: None. The advertising and promotion of baby milks is restricted by the infant formula and follow-on formula regulations which came into force on 1 March 1995.

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health with whom she consulted before deciding not to impose a statutory ban on the commercial advertising of baby milk formula.

Mrs. Browning: I have been asked to reply.

I attach a list of those to whom the draft infant formula and follow-on formula regulations were sent by this Department. The Scottish Office and Welsh Office also sent the proposals to organisations in Scotland and Wales respectively.

NHS Prescriptions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the current medications and appliances that are obtainable on an NHS prescription that are (a) cheaper to obtain by paying for them over the counter at a pharmacist than the current prescription fee and (b) that, although cheaper, can be obtained only on an NHS prescription.

Patient Transfer to Leeds

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the circumstances relating to the transfer to Leeds by helicopter of a patient from south-east London.

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State expects to receive an initial report on this matter from South Thames regional office in the near future. A report will be published as soon as possible thereafter and any issues arising will be further investigated.

Historic Hospital Buildings

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many historic hospital buildings built before 1900 have been demolished by hospital governing bodies since the creation of the NHS trusts.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. Each individual national health service trust is responsible for management of the estate in which they operate, including compliance with town planning and legislative requirements concerning the demolition of buildings.

Ebola and Marburg Viruses

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has had from the Institute of Virology and Environmental Microbiology, in Oxford concerning the potential plague-like spread of Ebola and Marburg viruses; what contingency plans she has to deal with any outbreak of Ebola and Marburg disease; and whether she will consider contracts with Porton Down to research into vaccines and therapies to alleviate Ebola and Marburg disease.

Mr. Sackville: We have had no representations from the Institute of Virology and Environmental Microbiology in Oxford about Ebola or Marburg viruses.

We are not aware of any evidence of respiratory spread of either Ebola or Marburg viruses between monkeys and humans or between humans. The current consensus of opinion is that these viruses are blood borne.

We do continue to take a cautious approach and recommend strict precautions for personnel dealing with definite or suspected cases of viral haemorrhagic fever to prevent any possibility of spread. The Department of Health funds high-security infectious disease units for the treatment of patients with viral haemorrhagic fever although no case has been seen in the United Kingdom for about 10 years. These viruses appear to have a limited capacity for spread within the human population and the need for a vaccine for use in the UK has not been established.

National Blood Authority

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total cost, including paper, printing, packaging and posting, arising from the letter from the chairman of the National Blood Authority to blood donors regarding the proposed reorganisation of the National Blood Service.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the right hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 9 December 1994, column 400.

Medical Negligence

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 6 March, Official Report, columns 41–42 (1) if she will publish what information she has about the cost of medical negligence claims by (a) specialities and (b) staff grade;

(2) if she will publish a list of clinical negligence claims by trust.

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Adoption

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration has been given by her Department to the Institute of Economic Affairs proposals regarding the adoption of children of single parents; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: None.

Health Care (Older People)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement about the standard of health care enjoyed by people aged over 60 years now, 10 years ago and 20 years ago.

Mr. Bowis [holding answer 13 March 1995]: The information is not available in precisely the form requested. Mortality rates in people over 60 years have fallen during the periods in question reflecting, among other factors, improvements in health care and advances in treatment. Life expectancy at age 60 has risen from 15.4 years in 1970 to 1972 to 17.8 years in 1990 to 1992 for men and from 20 to 22.1 years for women.

Staffing and activity levels in the national health service have improved substantially across major relevant indices. For example, the numbers of hip replacement operations have increased by 47 per cent. since 1978, the number of eye lens operations by 119 per cent. and the number of coronary artery bypass grafts by 276 per cent. The number of elderly patient treatments has increased by 137 per cent. for in-patients, to 558,000 finished consultant episodes, and by 91 per cent. for out-patients, to 459,000 episodes. The numbers of consultant geriatricians have increased by 66 per cent. About 42 per cent. of total NHS expenditure is attributable to services to older people, who make up about 16 per cent. of the population. These improvements reflect major advances in medical science, in surgical, clinical and nursing practice and in other health care skills. They demonstrate the Government's continued commitment to the NHS, including the care of older people.

We have also made considerable progress in the implementation of our community care changes and in improvements to primary care services, many of which are of particular benefit to older people. Services are becoming more responsive to the needs and wishes of patients through quality initiatives such as the patients charter.

TRANSPORT

School Transport

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to ensure that vehicles hired for the transport of children to and from school have the appropriate licence or that local education authorities be empowered to issue a new form of licence specifically for school transport purposes.

Mr. Norris: All motor vehicles, including those used for school transport, are subject to the requirements of the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986 and to annual roadworthiness testing. Public service vehicles must also satisfy additional construction requirements and be licensed through the operator licensing system under which their operators are subject to sanction by traffic commissioners if standards are not maintained.

We do not consider further controls to be necessary.

Vehicle Pollution

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those sites where he is currently monitoring vehicle pollution stating in each case (a) what monitoring he is undertaking and (b) whether PM_{10} is counted.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked its chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Ms Joan Walley, dated 14 March 1995:

The Minister for Local Transport and Road Safety, Steven Norris, has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those sites where he is currently monitoring vehicle pollution stating in each case (a) what monitoring he is undertaking and (b) whether PM_{10} is counted.

We do not routinely monitor vehicle pollution but the Highways Agency has a number of monitoring stations in operation either for research purposes to aid the development of air quality techniques or to inform environmental assessment of specific highway proposals where appropriate. For most situations involving road schemes we use mathematical modelling to assess pollution levels. Where the modelling techniques cannot adequately reflect the characteristics of a particular location monitoring work is undertaken.

The table below contains our current active sites.

Road name	Location	Emissions monitored
M4	Theale	Carbon Monoxide Nitric Oxide Nitrogen Dioxide Total Oxides of Nitrogen Ozone Total Hydrocarbons Non-Methane Hydrocarbons Methane Range of Poly-aromatic Hydrocarbons
Victoria Street	London	Carbon Monoxide Nitric Oxide Nitrogen Dioxide Total Oxides of Nitrogen Ozone Total Hydrocarbons Non-Methane Hydrocarbons Methane Range of Poly-Aromatic Hydrocarbons Benzene Toluene Xylene Range of Carbonyl Compounds
M4 London	Between Junctions 3 and 4B	Carbon Monoxide Nitric Oxide Nitrogen Dioxide Total Oxides of Nitrogen PM_{10} Benzene Tolluene Xylene
M4 London	Junction 4	Carbon Monoxide Nitric Oxide Nitrogen Dioxide Total Oxides of Nitrogen
M62 Manchester	East Junction 17	Carbon Monoxide Nitric Oxide Nitrogen Dioxide Total Oxides of Nitrogen
M2 Kent	Junction 3 Area	Carbon Monoxide Nitric Oxide Nitrogen Dioxide Total Oxides of Nitrogen Benzene Tolluene

At present PM_{10} is measured at one location on the M4 but our intention is to commence monitoring of this emission at new sites on the M62 (Manchester) and the M25 (Surrey) shortly.

Felixstone Port

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will investigate claims that legitimate operators using EU crews and acceptable working practices have been blocked from using the port of Folkestone; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: There is a disagreement between the harbour authority and a ship operator. I hope the parties will resolve the disagreement. I appear to have no locus to intervene.

Seat Belts (Minibuses and Coaches)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to introduce compulsory fitment of seatbelts to minibuses and coaches used for the transport of children as foreshadowed in his announcement of 19 July 1994.

Dr. Mawhinney: I am today issuing for consultation draft regulations on the subject.

Lorries (Accidents)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many of the fatal accidents involving large lorries in 1993 were caused as a result of restricted vision on the near side.

Mr. Norris: This information is not available.

Disabled Drivers (Parking)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he holds on the provision by other European Union countries of disabled drivers' parking permits similar to the orange badge; and if he will list all those that are recognised for parking purposes in this country in line with the decisions of 6 December 1977 European Conference of Ministers of Transport.

Mr. Norris: Formal reciprocal parking arrangements exist with the following European Union countries: Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, and Sweden, and also with Switzerland. All these countries operate national schemes similar to the orange badge scheme. There are no formal reciprocal arrangements with Greece, the Republic of Ireland or in Spain, though concessions may be available in the Republic of Ireland and in Spain. Details of known parking concessions throughout Europe are set out in the Department's leaflet "Reciprocal parking arrangements for disabled and blind people in Europe". I am sending a copy to the hon. Member.

Temporary Contracts

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by his Department have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration for this year and each of the past five years, in each case specifying what percentage of the respective total work force these employees constitute.

Mr. Norris: The Department's personnel information system records the following number of temporary employees this year and in the last five years:

	Department of Transport		Of which: Agencies
	Numbers	Percentage	Numbers	Percentage
1 March 1995	595.0	4.3	527.5	4.7
1 April 1994	452.0	3.2	389.0	3.4
1 April 1993	379.5	2.6	191.5	2.2
1 April 1992	457.0	3.0	229.0	2.4
1 April 1991	591.5	3.7	235.0	2.5
1 April 1990	716.0	4.6	280.5	4.1

In addition, my Department employs some staff on a "call off" basis, for example to support short-term fluctuations in work load. My Department does not hold a central record which distinguishes between contracts of 51 weeks and less than 51 weeks.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for this year and each of the past five years how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which his Department is responsible who have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration are re-employed in the same or similar position at a later date.

Mr. Norris: The Department's personnel information system records the following number of temporary employees for this year and the last five years who have been re-employed in the same or similar position at a later date:

	Department of Transport	Of which: Agencies
1990–91	35	13
1991–92	21	7
1992–93	23	13
1993–94	29	21
1994–95	33	31

In addition, my Department employs some staff on a "call off" basis, for example to support short term fluctuations in work load. My Department does not hold a central record which distinguishes between contracts of 51 weeks and less than 51 weeks.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people he expects to employ in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which he is responsible on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration in the next three years, in each case specifying the number of employees who had previously been employed in a similar position on the same contract.

Mr. Norris: My Department employs staff on temporary contracts to meet its short-term needs and as such these needs are difficult to forecast. However, the total number of staff in the Department will reduce over the next three years as a result of its efficiency plans and it is expected that the need for temporary staff will also reduce. Nor is it possible to forecast whether previous temporary contracts will be renewed.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance has been issued in respect of the recruitment and appointment of non-permanent employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by his Department.

Mr. Norris: I have today arranged for the information requested to be placed in the Library of the House.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what positions in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which his Department is responsible are filled by employees who are employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration.

Mr. Norris: The Department's personnel system records in the following table the number of post by grade in the Department as a whole and executive agencies specifically which are filled by employees on temporary contracts of less than one year according to the Department's personnel information systems as at 1 March 1995. The length of the contracts lasting less than one year is not normally agreed in advance and separate records are not kept showing the length of the contracts.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the full terms of employment as specified to employees in his Department and all executive agencies for which he is responsible who are employed on a temporary contract of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration.

Mr. Norris: I have today arranged for the information requested to be placed in the Library of the House.

Railway Facilities, Abbey Wood

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated total cost of the railway facilities at the procurement executive headquarters at Abbey Wood.

Mr. Watts: The estimated cost of the new railway facilities at Abbey Wood is £1.056 million.

Fares, London

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the levels of fares a typical resident of Hornsey and Wood Green would pay for short one-mile and three-mile single bus journeys—Dickinson Road to Finsbury Park and Muswell Hill to Archway—three and six-mile single London Underground fares—Finsbury Park to Euston and Wood Green to Oxford Circus today covering zones 1, 2 and 1, 2 and 1, 2, 3 and a five-mile BR fare—Wood Green-Alexandra Palace to Kings Cross; and if he will list the percentage increase for every change compared with the percentage change in the cost of living index from 1 March and 1 September for each year since 1965;

(2) what was the average price including promotional discounting of a gallon of petrol, the price of a one-mile single bus fare in Central London and a three-mile single underground fare, today covering zones 1 and 2, applying on 1 March and 1 September for each year since 1968.

Mr. Norris: The information requested on bus and London Underground fares, provided by London Transport, and on petrol prices is shown in the table.

The current BR single fare from Alexandra Palace to Kings Cross is £1.80. The return fare is £3.60. There is also a cheap day return fare of £2.00. The information requested on fares in previous years is not centrally held by the Department or British Rail.

Safety at Sea

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will investigate the implications for safety of life at sea arising from the effects on crew fatigue of a rota of two months on and two months off on cross-channel ferries;

(2) which classification societies are currently undertaking work on behalf of the Marine Safety Agency.

Mr. Norris: There are operational matters for the Marine Safety Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letters from R.M. Bradley to Ms Joan Walley, dated 15 March 1995:

The Secretary of Sate has asked me to reply to your Question about the crew fatigue effects of a two months on/two months off rota on cross-Channel ferries.

The Agency is not intending to investigate the implications of the crew rota to which you refer. It considers that the regulatory and inspection framework which I describe in this letter are sufficient to ensure that crewing arrangements on UK-flagged ships do not impair safety.

Crewing arrangements on UK-flagged ships are primarily the responsibility of the ship-owner or operator to determine, within the requirements of the law. The minimum manning levels for these ships are laid down by the Department under the Merchant Shipping (Safe Manning Document) Regulations 1992. Broadly speaking, every UK ship of 500 GRT or more must carry a Safe Manning Document issued by this Agency and the manning of the ship must be maintained at all times to at least the levels specified in the document. These levels take account of a range of considerations, including the Department's concern that ships should be sufficiently manned for their safe operation having regard to the area in which they will be trading and the nature of the service for which they are intended. The Department has also just introduced the Merchant Shipping (Hours of Work) Regulations 1995 which place a duty on ship operators to ensure that crews do not work more hours than are safe in relation to the safety of the ship. In addition, Section 31 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988 places a duty on shipowners to ensure that their ships are operated in a safe manner.

As part of its flag state responsibilities, the Agency inspects UK-flagged ships on a regular basis to ensure, amongst other things, that they are crewed in accordance with the safe manning document. The inspectors will also now ensure that the crews' working arrangements comply with the 1995 regulations. If crewing arrangements do not meet legal requirements, the ship may be detained until the matter has been resolved to the Agency's satisfaction.

Foreign-flagged ships working into UK ports come under the jurisdiction of the state with which they are registered and must therefore comply with these states' requirements in respect of crewing arrangements. However, these ships are subject to portstate control inspections by the Agency. If the inspector considers that the manning of a foreign-flagged ship is unsafe, the ship can be detained until the matter is resolved with the flag state administration and the ship's owners to the Agency's satisfaction.

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your Question about Classification Societies undertaking work on behalf of the Marine Safety Agency.

The Marine Safety Agency authorises five Classification Societies to undertake work on its behalf, namely:

Lloyd's Register of Shipping
American Bureau of Shipping
Bureau Veritas
Det Norske Veritas and Germanischer Lloyd

Train Services, Wales

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will discuss with representatives of the rail operators the frequency of train services on Welsh main lines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: The frequency of train services is, at present, an operational matter for British Rail. The franchising director is currently consulting on the passenger service requirements to be included in the Great Western franchise. He will be consulting on passenger service requirements for other franchises providing services in Wales in due course.

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the cost of his Department's expenditure on water and sewerage in (a) the current year and (b) each of the three previous years.

Mr. Norris: The information is as follows:

(a) 1994–95 (up to 1 February): £541,429

(b) 1993–94: £654,043
1992–93: £626,800
1991–92: £592,829

Cap Bon

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, when inspections of the Cap Bon were carried out; who carried them out; what was the assessment; how many deficiencies were found; when he expects the boat to resume the carrying of livestock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Marine Safety Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. Elliot Morley, dated 15 March 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about the inspection of the cargo ship 'CAP BON'.

The ship was last inspected by the French port state control authorities in Dieppe on 1 March 1995. Their inspection identified fifty-six safety deficiencies and the ship was detained. The ship was subsequently released after fifty-one of the deficiencies had been rectified. The ship has not visited a UK port recently but if she were to, she would be subject to the UK's port state control regime.

The carrying of livestock on the vessel is a matter for the owners and the authorities of the port to which the ship operates.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Borrowing

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, if he will list the amounts borrowed (a) directly and (b) via group companies by the Church Commissioners and the total interest paid for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Alison: This information is set out in the following table. Since 1990, considerable progress has been made in reducing borrowings.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Green Forms

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) how many green form legal advice and assistance payments were made to solicitors in each year since 1991, and if he will make a statement;

(2) what were the total sums paid out in respect of green form legal advice and assistance claims by solicitors in each year since 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The volume of bills paid and total paid out in respect of green form legal advice and assistance claims by solicitors between 1991–92 and 1993–94 was as follows:

Year	Number of bills paid	Total payments £000
1991–92	1,230,472	100,434
1992–93	1,434,661	124,533
1993–94	1,640,593	147,233

Legal Aid

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many appeals to the Legal Aid Board against the refusal to grant legal aid for civil cases there were in each year since 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The number of appeals against refusal of legal aid certificates for civil cases for the years 1991–92 to 1993–94 was as follows:

Year	Appeals received	Appeals granted
1991–92	22,073	8,804
1992–93	28,053	14,118
1993–94	42,089	21,991

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the estimated cost to the legal aid fund of the defence of Mr. Craig Charles, and what statement of income and capital he produced for the Legal Aid Board.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I consider it inappropriate to speculate as to the final cost to the legal aid fund of the proceedings involving Mr. Craig Charles. Details of the financial means of applicants for legal aid are confidential.

Divorce Law Reform

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he intends to publish his White Paper on divorce law reform.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to my answer given to him on 13 January 1995, Official Report, column 213.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

BBC

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the current proportion of BBC network television production which emanates from the regions and national regions; and what target figure he has set or accepted.

Mr. Dorrell: Statistics on programme production should be sought direct from the BBC. I expect the BBC to include in its statement of promises to audiences quantifiable targets for increasing the proportion of network programmes made outside London and south-east England.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he expects to appoint a replacement for Sir David Scholey as a governor of the BBC; and what criteria he intends to apply to this appointment.

Mr. Dorrell: BBC governors are appointed by Her Majesty the Queen on the advice of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister. I hope that the vacancy created by Sir David Scholey's resignation will be filled without delay. In seeking a successor, regard will be had to the range of qualities and experience which the board of governors as a whole needs to possess in order to carry out its responsibilities.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if it remains the policy of his Department that the agreement document between the BBC and Government will contain an undertaking on regional network production.

Mr. Dorrell: Yes.

Television Licences

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is his latest estimate of the evasion rate for television licences; how much lost revenue this represents; what measures are being taken to help those who have difficulty paying for a television licence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The estimated rate of television licence evasion as at January 1995 was 6.8 per cent. which represents approximately £152 million in lost revenue. The television licensing regulations provide for quarterly and monthly payment schemes to enable people to spread the cost of their licence fee. There is also a television licence savings stamps scheme.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Selective Assistance

Mrs. Lait: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many applications for assisted area status are completed in 60 working days from date of final application to offer of grant; and how many are not.

Mr. Eggar: Of the 1,215 offers of regional selective assistance made in England during 1994, 984 were processed within 60 working days from receipt of application.

Shipbuilding

Mr. Lidington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the home shipbuilding credit guarantee scheme.

Mr. Eggar: In order to assist the competitiveness of the United Kingdom shipbuilding industry, I am introducing a new facility whereby the scheme can guarantee loans of up to 12 years duration for the purchase of new commercial ships from UK shipyards. Small vessels of less than £1 million contract cost will carry shorter credit periods. The normal maximum length of loan for ship conversions will be 10 years.

Loans for up to 8.5 years at an interest rate of 7.5 per cent. will continue to be available. If a loan of more than 8.5 years is guaranteed, the component of the lending which represents an 8.5 year loan will carry the 7.5 per cent. interest rate. The additional lending resulting from the extended term will be at the commercial interest reference rate applicable to comparable export credit transactions. This arrangement is necessary to retain present interest rate subsidies while complying with EC requirements.

The premium for 12-year finance will be 1 per cent. of the capital sum guaranteed, and for 10-year finance will be 0.8 per cent. of the capital sum guaranteed. A revised premium of two thirds of 1 per cent. of the capital sum guaranteed will apply in respect of finance of 8.5 years or less, for which application is made on or after 1 April 1995.

The arrangements have been authorised by the EC Commission as consistent with the seventh EC shipbuilding directive. However, the Commission has ruled that guarantees of lending for more than 8.5 years should be considered to carry a subsidy level of 1 per cent. of contract value, for the purposes of the ceilings on shipbuilding support laid down in the directive. The size of this adjustment to the subsidy level is under discussion with the Commission. Guarantees of lending of 8.5 years duration or less are unaffected by the ruling.

These arrangements will apply until the end of 1995, when the OECD agreement on the elimination of shipbuilding subsidies comes into force. The future of the scheme, after the end of the year, is subject to review.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade at what time and on what day the proposals of Professor Littlechild to regulate energy prices further were first drawn to the attention of departmental officials or Ministers.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 13 March 1995]: There has been a growing public debate in recent months about whether the price control for the regional electricity companies' distribution businesses struck a fair balance between the interests of consumers and shareholders. The Trafalgar House bid for Northern Electric which was announced on 19 December 1994 and Northern Electric's defence added substantially to the concerns being expressed. A wide range of options were canvassed during this debate. There are regular contacts between the Department and Offer on all regulatory matters. Offer kept the Department regularly informed on Professor Littlechild's thinking from 27 February. The decision to consider further a review of the proposals for the new price controls was taken by Professor Littlechild on 6 March 1995.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade at what time and on what day departmental officials or Ministers first saw either the statement or a synopsis of the statement made by Professor Littlechild on the question of the further regulation of electricity prices.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 13 March 1995]: At circa 16.45 on Monday 6 March, my officials first saw a draft of the statement Professor Littlechild planned to make the following day about the price controls on the distribution businesses of the regional electricity companies.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions his Department had with the Director General of Electricity Supply prior to his announcement about prices of electricity.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 13 March 1995]: There has been a growing public debate in recent months about whether the price control for the regional electricity companies' distribution businesses struck a fair balance between the interests of consumers and shareholders. The Trafalgar House bid for Northern Electric which was announced on 19 December 1994 and Northern Electric's defence added substantially to the concerns being expressed. A wide range of options were canvassed during this debate. Offer kept the Department regularly informed on the way Professor Littlechild's thinking was developing throughout the period from 27 February 1995 until his announcement on 7 March.

Monopolies and Mergers

Mr. David Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what powers he or the Director General of Fair Trading have to require divestment.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Under the Fair Trading Act 1973, my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has powers to require divestment to remedy adverse findings of reports by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on monopoly or mergers situations. He can also require divestment where an undertaking to divest which has been accepted in lieu of a reference to the commission has not been fulfilled.

Patent Office

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes have taken place in the numbers of staff employed in the Patent Office since last year in (a) established staff, (b) fixed-term appointees, (c) agency staff and (d) consultants; and if he will explain the reasons for the changes.

Mr. Ian Taylor: On 28 February 1994, there were 902 established staff in the Patent Office; 59 fixed-term appointees; 31 Manpower agency staff; and 27 non-established IT specialists, working in the office on individual contracts. Comparable figures at 28 February 1995 were 839; 49; 45; and 31.

The decline in overall numbers, including numbers of established staff and fixed-term appointees, reflects efficiency improvements and changes in work volumes, and was accommodated as part of normal staff turnover. At the same time, use of IT in the office has grown, and a major systems development has been necessary to implement new trade marks legislation. The increase in the number of agency staff reflects the outcome of a market testing programme in the previous year.

Power Generating Companies

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions his Department had with the Director General of Electricity Supply about the sale of publicly owned shares in the power generating companies.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 13 March 1995]: There were a number of discussions between my Department and Offer about the sale of publicly owned shares in the generating companies during the preparation of the prospectuses and prior to the float.

Assisted Areas

Mrs. Lait: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to reduce from 60 working days the target for approval of assisted area status applications.

Mr. Eggar: Targets vary in relation to the size band of project. These targets are kept under regular review.

Competitiveness

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last received from Her Majesty's embassies in Washington, Bonn, and Tokyo an assessment of each host nation's trade competitiveness at home and abroad.

Mr. Eggar: Embassies have standing orders to cover competitiveness issues in their regular economic reports.

Newsagents

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on carriage charges by news wholesalers to newsagents.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission's 1993 report on the supply of newspapers in England and Wales included no adverse public interest findings in respect of carriage charges, and therefore no power arose to act on them.

However, carriage charges in respect of new entrants are covered by the voluntary code of practice to govern the supply of national newspapers, agreed with the industry following publication of the MMC report. This provides that such charges should be set at an economic level in order that they are not used as a means of circumventing the prohibition on refusal to supply by making supply economically unattractive to new applicants.

If new retailers feel that their carriage charges are incorrect they should take the matter up in the first instance with the wholesaler. If this does not resolve the dispute, the retailer should make use of the arbitration process set out in the code of practice.

Indonesia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the undertaking given by the Indonesian Government about the proposed use of the Scorpion tanks and light armoured vehicles for which he has given export licence approval.

Mr. Heseltine: The assurances are precisely as given in my answer on 2 March 1995 to my hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls), Official Report, column 716.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Probation Hostels

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) male and (b) female juveniles are kept in probation hostels.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The figures requested are not held centrally and are not readily available.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many places are available in probation hostels.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The number of places currently available in approved hostels is 2,464.

Solvent Abuse

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions his Department regularly holds with organisations dealing with solvent abuse; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are a number of Government Departments which have responsibilities covering volatile substance abuse. They have periodic contacts with interested organisations rather than regular discussions. I understand that Department of Health officials last met representatives Re-Solv, the Society for the Prevention of Solvent and Volatile Substance Abuse, on 24 October.

Safer Cities

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will consider safer city status for Stoke-on-Trent.

Sir Paul Beresford: I have been asked to reply.

Stoke-on-Trent was one of a number of areas considered for inclusion in the latest wave of safer cities projects announced in July of last year. However, the 20 areas selected were deemed to have a stronger claim to a project at that time.

Decisions about a further wave of safer cities projects have not yet been taken.

Temporary Contracts

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by his Department have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration for this year and each of the past five years, in each case specifying what percentage of the respective total workforce these employees constitute;

(2) how many people he expects to employ in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which he is responsible on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration in the next three years, in each case specifying the number of employees who had previously been employed in a similar position on the same contract;

(3) for the current year and each of the past five years, how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which his Department is responsible who have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks, or (b) less than 51 weeks duration are re-employed in the same or similar position at a later date.

(4) what positions in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which his Department is responsible are filled by employees who are employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration;

(5) what guidance has been issued in respect of the recruitment and appointment of non-permanent employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by his Department;

(6) if he will publish the full terms of employment as specified to employees in his Department and all executive agencies for which he is responsible who are employed on a temporary contract of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Home Office and its agencies employ casual staff to meet short-term or seasonal needs. No central record is available of casual staff employed in recent years, or of the duration of their contracts. The number of casual staff currently employed is set out in the following table. Contracts normally set out the expected period of employment; none of the above staff have been engaged on contracts of 51 weeks.

The appointment and conditions of employment of casual staff are in accordance with the provisions of the civil service management code. It is not possible to anticipate the number of casual staff likely to be required in the next three years.

The Prison Service does not maintain a central record of casual appointments, some of which are made locally in establishments.

Domestic Violence Units

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those police authorities which have set up police domestic violence units; how many units there are per police authority; and what is the location of the units.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The establishment of domestic violence units is an operational matter for the chief officers of police.

Female Juveniles

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many female juveniles at present are kept in adult women prisons.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Alan Simpson, dated 15 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many female juveniles at present are kept in adult women prisons.

The latest available provisional information is for 31 January 1995. On that date 29 females (14 remand and 15 sentenced) aged under 18 years of age were held in adult female Prison Service establishments (local prisons, closed training prisons or open prisons) in England and Wales.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what establishments are currently being used for detention of asylum seekers; how many are held in each one; and what is their country of origin;

(2) how many asylum seekers are currently held in custody; and what is the comparative figure for each month of the past year.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: As at 8 March 1995, a total of 587 persons who had sought asylum were detained. This figure includes people awaiting the setting of directions for removal following refusal of the application, as well as those whose applications were under consideration or subject to appeal. Information on the nationality of those detained is given in the table.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher) on 2 March, column 660, which gave the available information on the location of those persons who had sought asylum detained as at 23 February 1995.

Information on the numbers detained over the last year, by month, is not available.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will provide a breakdown of the number of asylum seekers currently detained under Immigration Act powers by (a) nationality, (b) gender, (c) length of detention, (d) place of detention and (e) immigration status at the time of application;

(2) how many asylum seekers were detained under Immigration Act powers in each month in 1993 and 1994.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: As at 8 March 1995, a total of 587 persons who had sought asylum were detained. This figure includes people awaiting the setting of directions for removal following refusal of the application, as well as those whose applications were under consideration or subject to appeal. Of this figure, 153 had been in detention less than one month, 104 between one and two months, 230 between two and six months, and 100 had been in detention longer than six months.

Information on the gender, immigration status and nationality of those detained is given in tables 1 and 2.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher) on 2 March, column 660, which gave the available information on the location of those persons who had sought asylum detained as at 23 February 1995.

HEALTH

Secure Units

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many places are available in secure units;

(2) how many juveniles are kept in secure units.

Mr. Bowis: The most recent figures available centrally relate to 31 March 1994 when there were 289 places available in secure units and 244 juveniles accommodated.

Smoking, Richmond House

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what facilities are provided and arrangements made for the comfort and well-being of staff who (a) smoke and (b) do not wish to be affected by smoking at (i) the work station and (ii) rest, recreation and refreshment facilities at Richmond house, Whitehall.

Mr. Sackville: No smoking is allowed in Richmond house except in the six rooms specifically set aside for that purpose.

NHS Openness

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to publish the open government code for the health service and the accompanying guidance.

Mr. Malone: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is considering the outcome of the consultation on the draft code of practice on openness in the national health service. We intend to publish the code shortly, together with the arrangements for its implementation.

Chemotherapy

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what research her Department is conducting into high-dose chemotherapy with stem cell treatment as a treatment for breast cancer; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what reports she has sought from the United States of America about the effectiveness of high-dose chemotherapy with stem cell treatment as a treatment for breast cancer; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Department is not conducting research into the use of high-dose chemotherapy with stem cell support but we are aware of research both in this country and abroad. In some quite rare tumours, the technique of peripheral stem cell harvesting and high-dose chemotherapy is becoming well established. It is however, a relatively new procedure and for the most common cancers, treatment should be given only as part of a properly designed clinical trial.

Surgery Costs

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will update her answer of 1 December 1993 to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett), Official Report, column 578, on the average costs of NHS procedures in the categories in the previous answer.

Mr. Sackville: The costing systems in the national health service are currently under review to enable the methodologies used to be standardised in all hospitals.

Minor Accident Treatment

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance her Department gives as to the opening hours of a minor accident treatment service unit.

Mr. Sackville: Opening times for minor conditions centres are determined by individual hospital trusts according to local needs.

Social Workers

Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the implications of the results of the recent survey in "Care Weekly" on violence towards social workers, a copy of which has been sent to her, in respect of her policy on the national recording of such incidents; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The full survey has not yet been received by my right hon. Friend. However, local authorities and other employers are responsible for identifying any problem and for taking any action needed to provide a safe working environment for all their staff, including social work staff. This includes collecting any information they need to enable them to carry out this responsibility effectively.

Barnet Health Authority

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many additional ambulances will be assigned to the Barnet health authority in 1995; and what plans there are to increase their number in the future.

Mr. Sackville: My hon. Friend may wish to contact the chief executive of the London ambulance service, Mr. Martin Gorham, for details.

Hospital Beds, Barnet

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current number of hospital beds and their location in the borough of Barnet; and how many are planned between now and 1997.

Mr. Sackville: My hon. Friend may wish to contact the chairman of Barnet health authority, Mr. Brian Salinger, for details.

Services for the Blind

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to fund the RNIB to promote services for the blind and partially-sighted, with special reference to the elderly in nursing homes, hospices and home care.

Mr. Bowis: The Royal National Institute for the Blind has not applied for funding for the promotion of services for visually impaired elderly people in nursing homes, hospices and home care services.

Temporary Contracts

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for the current year and each of the past five years, how many employees in (i) her Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which her Department is responsible who have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration are re-employed in the same or similar position at a later date.

Mr. Sackville: The Department and its executive agencies do not keep records on this issue. The Department does not usually issue contracts of 51 weeks. There are five casual staff in the Department and five in its executive agencies on temporary contracts of less than 51 weeks who have been re-employed since 1 April 1994.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many employees in (i) her Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by her Department have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration for the current year and each of the past five years, in each case specifying what percentage of the respective total workforce these employees constituted.

Mr. Sackville: The Department does not keep records on those employed on temporary contracts before 1 April 1994. The Department and its executive agencies do not usually issue contracts of 51 weeks. Since 1 April 1994, 207 staff in the Department—4 per cent.—and 47 in its executive agencies—3 per cent.—have been employed on temporary contracts of less than 51 weeks.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people she expects to employ in (i) her Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which she is responsible on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration in the next three years, in each case specifying the number of employees who had previously been employed in a similar position on the same contract.

Mr. Sackville: The Department and its executive agencies do not usually issue contracts of 51 weeks. The Department expects to use a small percentage of temporary staff to cover specific management needs. It is not possible to predict exactly how many people will be employed on this basis over the next three years but we do not expect the present level to change significantly.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been issued in respect of the recruitment and appointment on non-payment employees in (i) her Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by her Department.

Mr. Sackville: The Department and its agencies follow guidance on recruitment and appointment procedures set down in the civil service management code and the Department's own conditions of service manual.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the full terms of employment as specified to employees in her Department and all executive agencies for which she is responsible who are employed on a temporary contract of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration.

Mr. Sackville: The Department and its executive agencies do not usually issue contracts of 51 weeks. All temporary staff in the Department of Health and its executive agencies are employed on either a casual basis or on fixed-term appointments. Examples of their full terms of employment will be placed in the Library. These terms apply irrespective of whether the contract is for 51 weeks or less.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what positions in (i) her Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which her Department is responsible are filled by employees who are employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration.

Mr. Sackville: The Department and its executive agencies do not usually issue contracts of 51 weeks. The information requested for those employed on contracts for less than 51 weeks is shown in the table.

Pharmacies

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy on non-contract pharmacies in England and Wales; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: This is one of a number of issues that relate to the operation of the National Health Service (Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations 1992, as amended, and which the Department is keeping under careful review. Changes to the regulations have not been ruled out but we want to listen to all sides of the arguments being put to us before reaching a final conclusion.

Patient Placements

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate her Department has made of (a) the average number of hours spent each week by a hospital doctor in searching for a placement for critically ill patients, and (b) the total number of hours spent by hospital doctors in the last year in searching for placements for critically ill patients.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

General Practices

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 3 February, Official Report, column 874, what are the aggregate numbers of general practices in the fundholding and non-fundholding categories, the total numbers of general practitioners in each category on a full-time equivalent basis and the numbers of list patients covered, at each of the dates specified.

Mr. Malone [holding answer 17 February 1995]: The available information will be placed in the Library.

Death Rates

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the death rates per 1,000 men aged 15 to 44 years for the average of three years from 1970 to 1972, 1980 to 1982 and 1990 to 1992, using mid-year population estimates for 1971, 1981, and 1991; if she will give figures (a) per district health authority with 95 per cent. confidence limits, (b) per regional health authority and (c) nationally; and if she will also show the above rates excluding suicide and accidents.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 2 March 1995]: The available information will be placed in the Library. Information relating to 1970 to 1972 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the age standardised death rates per 1,000 population for the average of the three years 1970 to 1972, 1989 to 1982 and 1990 to 1992, using mid-year population estimates for 1971, 1981 and 1991; and if she will give figures (a) per district health authority with 95 per cent. confidence limits, (b) for each regional health authority and (c) nationally.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 2 March 1995]: The available information will be placed in the Library. Information relating to 1970 to 1972 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Nurses

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give for each year since 1981, on the same basis as tables A and C of Statistical Bulletin 19944/11, the total numbers of whole time equivalent qualified and unqualified nurses and midwives, the total numbers of learners and the total numbers of other nurses and midwives employed in (a) the hospital and community health services, (b) the family health services and (c) private hospitals, nursing homes and clinics, and also the total numbers of Project 2000 students in each year.

Mr. Malone [pursuant to his reply, 19 January 1995, c. 637–40]: I regret that my previous reply contained an error. The 1990 "FHS Practice Nurses" was given as 7,700 whereas the correct figure should be 7,740.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all the current (a) chairs and (b) non-executive directors of each trust board by region, indicating the gender and occupation of each individual.

Mr. Malone [holding answer 23 February 1995]: The latest information available centrally will be placed in the Library.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Treasury Solicitor's Department

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Attorney-General whether he has reached a decision on the question of agency status for the Treasury Solicitor's Department.

The Attorney-General: I am satisfied that agency status will enable the Treasury Solicitor's department to operate with greater managerial freedom and with more clearly defined responsibilities, within an agreed framework of objectives, performance targets, and resources. The department will become an executive agency on 1 April 1996.

Temporary Contracts

Ms Harman: To ask the Attorney-General if he will publish the full terms of employment as specified to employees in his Department and all executive agencies for which he is responsible who are employed on a temporary contract of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration.

The Attorney-General: Specimen letters setting out the terms of employment for all staff employed on a temporary contract by the Crown Prosecution Service, Serious Fraud Office and Treasury Solicitor's department accompany this answer and have been supplied to the hon. Member. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House. The letter used by the Government Property Lawyers is the same as for the Treasury Solicitor's department.

Ms Harman: To ask the Attorney-General for the current year and each of the past five years, how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which his Department is responsible who have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration are re-employed in the same or similar position at a later date.

The Attorney-General: The number of employees in the Department and agencies for which I am responsible who have been employed on temporary contracts of 51 weeks or less and re-employed in the same or similar position at a later date over the past five years are:

	Crown Prosecution Service	Serious Fraud Office	Treasury Solicitor's Department	Government Property Lawyers
Current year	19	0	1	Nil
1994	88	3	5	Nil
1993	85	3	5	Nil
1992	52	4	1	Nil
1991	46	1	2	Nil
1990	33	0	3	Nil

Ms Harman: To ask the Attorney-General how many people he expects to employ in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which he is responsible, on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration in the next three years, in each case specifying the number of employees who had previously been employed in a similar position on the same contract.

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service is unable to forecast the number of posts which will be filled by temporary staff in the CPS during the next three years.

The numbers of temporary staff estimated to be employed by the Serious Fraud Office, Treasury Solicitor's department and Government Property Lawyers in each of the next three years is as follows:

	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
Serious Fraud Office	31	33	35
Treasury Solicitor's Department	7	7	7
Government Property Lawyers	3	3	3

All such employments are expected to be on contracts for less than 51 weeks. It is not possible to predict whether any such temporary staff will have previously been so employed.

Ms Harman: To ask the Attorney-General what positions in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which his Department is responsible are filled by employees who are employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration.

The Attorney-General: As at 28 February 1995, a total of 17 prosecutor posts were filled by employees on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration. Additionally, 224 administrative staff and 52 staff in other support grades were employed on similar terms.

The Serious Fraud Office at present employs 24 administrative staff and one accountant on temporary contracts of 51 weeks or less.

The Treasury Solicitor's department at present employs eight lawyers, three litigation clerks, four administrative staff and one porter/handyman on temporary contracts of 51 weeks or less.

The Government Property Lawyers at present employs three lawyers and eight administrative staff on temporary contracts of 51 weeks or less.

Ms Harman: To ask the Attorney-General what guidance has been issued in respect of the recruitment and appointment of non-permanent employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by his Department.

The Attorney-General: The recruitment handbook for the Crown Prosecution Service defines the circumstances in which casual—non-permanent—appointments are appropriate. This has been supplemented by further instructions circulated to all staff with responsibility for recruitment decisions.

The Serious Fraud Office, the Treasury Solicitor's department and the Government Property Lawyers follow the guidance set out in the civil service management code, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Staff Pay

Mr. Caborn: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what are the rates of pay and other remunerations for all House of Commons porters, chefs, cleaners and security staff.

Mr. Beith: The full-time salaries, inclusive of the recruitment and retention allowance, of the grades employed by the Commission are as follows:

Porters[1]
Vote office porters	9,390–9,547 pa
Kitchen porters	9,547–10,736 pa
Cleaners
Cleaners	9,390–9,547 pa
Cleaner in charge	9,870–11,496 pa
Chefs
Executive chef	27,106–41,003 pa
Deputy executive chef	21,789–27,586 pa
Senior sous chef	14,965–18,611 pa
Sous chef / Assistant sous chef / Chef in charge	13,449–16,677 pa
Section chef	12,984–16,083 pa
Chef de Partie	11,496–14,184 pa
Assistant chef de partie	10,206–11,696 pa
Full commis chef	10,556 pa
3rd year commis chef	10,206 pa
2nd year commis chef	10,036 pa
1st year commis chef	9,870 pa

[1]Part-time employees are paid pro-rata.

The security staff are employed by the Metropolitan police, and I have asked the Serjeant at Arms to write to the hon. Member with details of their rates of pay.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has held with his United States counterpart as to the capacity and intention of Saddam Hussein in respect of the rebuilding of weapons of mass destruction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Davis: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has regular contact with his United States and other counterparts about Iraqi compliance with UN Security Council resolutions.

We continue to support the work of the UN Special Commission—UNSCOM—in its task of eliminating Iraq's weapons of mass destruction and setting up a monitoring regime to ensure that no regeneration of such weapons can take place.

Ambassador Ekeus will be presenting his next six-monthly report to the UN Security Council in April in which he will assess whether Iraq's past chemical, biological, ballistic and nuclear weapons have been fully accounted for and eliminated, whether Iraq's current capacity is understood, and whether the UNSCOM—IAEA monitoring and verification operation will be sufficient to detect such weapons in the future.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment as to the capacity and intention of the regime of Saddam Hussein to rebuild weapons of mass destruction.

Mr. David Davis: Iraq's record to date gives us good reason to believe that the regime will try to re-activate its programmes of weapons of mass destruction if allowed to do so. Hence our belief in the importance of full implementation of the UN Special Commission and International Atomic Energy Agency monitoring plans which place relevant industrial, academic and civil establishments under close supervision.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the leaders of Iraqi Kurdish groups or to Iraqi resistance groups that they should seek a dialogue with the regime of Saddam Hussein; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is up to the Iraqi opposition themselves to decide whether to engage in dialogue with the regime of Saddam Hussein. We do not suggest that they do so; neither will we discourage them if that is their wish.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what reports he has received relating to the bombardment by forces loyal to Saddam Hussein of the town of Arbil in Northern Iraq with long-range artillery;

(2) what reports he has received indicating attacks by forces loyal to Saddam Husssein on areas of northern Iraq under the control of Kurdish and Iraqi resistance forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 13 March, Official Report, column 377. We have seen no clear evidence that Iraqi forces have recently mounted fresh offensive operations in northern Iraq. However, given the continued tension in the area, and the history of brutality by the Iraqi regime towards the Iraqi Kurds, we will continue to keep the situation under close review.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has reached as to whether the regime of Saddam Hussein still has access to stocks of anthrax bacteria.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Iraqi regime has access to anthrax bacteria which can be obtained from clinical and environmental samples within Iraq. The monitoring regime now being established by UNSCOM under the terms of UN Security Council resolution 687 aims to ensure that Iraq does not use such material for weapons purposes.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking or will take to guarantee the safe havens of northern Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Aircraft from the US, United Kingdom and France patrol a no-fly zone north of 36 deg north in support of Security Council resolution 688 which demands that Iraq ends its repression of its civilian population.

The purpose of the patrols is to monitor the movements of Iraqi troops close to the Kurdish areas of northern Iraq.

We continue to press Iraq to comply with all the demands in the relevant United Nations Security Council resolution.

Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what change has taken place in Her Majesty's Government's policy on the question of the negative security assurance given to non-nuclear weapons states that are parties to the non-proliferation treaty, following the disbanding of the Warsaw Treaty Organisation; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the extent of the exception clause contained in the United Kingdom's negative security assurance.

Mr. David Davis: The United Kingdom's negative security assurance is extended to non-nuclear-weapon states parties to the non-proliferation treaty or other internationally binding commitments not to manufacture or acquire nuclear explosive devices. The assurance makes it clear that it does no apply in the case of an attack on the United Kingdom, its dependent territories, its armed forces or its allies by such a state in association or alliance with nuclear-weapon-state.

There has been no change to the assurance. The disbanding of the Warsaw pact does not obviate the need for the exception.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is Her Majesty's Government's policy to seek to achieve a decision on the extension of the non-proliferation treaty solely on the basis of consensus of states parties at the extension conference.

Mr. David Davis: Our aim at the nuclear non-proliferation treaty review and extension conference is to achieve the indefinite and unconditional extension of the treaty. Under the terms of the treaty, this can be achieved by a simple majority of state parties.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to declare the exact number of nuclear weapons and warheads deployed by the United Kingdom when he or one of his ministerial colleagues attends the non-proliferation treaty extension conference in April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Davis: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces on 9 March 1995, Official Report, column 348. We shall continue to follow this policy at the non-proliferation treaty review and extension conference.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what differences exist between the negative security assurance under the non-proliferation treaty provided by the United Kingdom and that provided by the United States of America.

Mr. David Davis: The United Kingdom's negative security assurance is given to "non-nuclear weapon states which are parties to the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and to other internationally binding commitments not to manufacture or acquire nuclear explosive devices".

In the assurance Britain undertakes

"not to use nuclear weapons against such States except in the case of an attack on the United Kingdom, its dependent territories, its armed forces or its allies by such a State in association or alliance with a nuclear-weapon State".

The United States, in its negative security assurances, stated that it would "not use nuclear weapons against any non-nuclear-weapon state party to the NPT (non-proliferation treaty) or any comparable internationally binding commitment not to acquire nuclear explosive devices, except in the case of an attack on the United States, its territories or armed forces, or its allies, by such a State allied to a nuclear-weapon State or associated with a nuclear-weapon state in carrying out or sustaining the attack".

Sudan

Mrs. Liddell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being taken by the British Government to curb human rights abuses in the Sudan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We regularly take action, bilaterally, in concert with EU partners, and at the United Nationals, to press the Sudanese Government to improve their appalling human rights record. Earlier this month we co-sponsored a resolution abut the human rights situation in Sudan at the UN Commission on Human Rights in Geneva.

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the cost of his Department's expenditure on water and sewerage in (a) the current year and (b) each of the three previous years.

Mr. Goodlad: The cost of the FCO's expenditure in the United Kingdom on water and sewerage is as follows:

Year	£
1994–95 to date	[1]62,048
1993–94	[1]101,648
1992–93	162,614
1991–92	132,808

[1] Some accounts received by the FCO for 1993–94 and the current year are in dispute; when settled there will be some further costs to add.

It is not possible without disproportionate cost to identify overseas expenditure on water and sewerage for the Department's overseas accommodation.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which of the other four acknowledged nuclear weapons states (a) publicly provides figures for the numbers of nuclear weapons and warheads it deploys and (b) measures its nuclear capability in terms of explosive power rather than warhead numbers.

Mr. David Davis: In May 1994, President Mitterand gave figures for the numbers of French operational nuclear weapons and warheads. The US Government have released information on the total explosive yield of the US nuclear weapon stockpile. Neither Russia nor China has, to our knowledge, made official statements on the size of its stockpiles.

East Timor

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will support any proposal at the UN Security Council to set up a human rights monitoring team in East Timor.

Mr. Goodlad: No such proposal is before the UN Security Council. The human rights situation in East Timor is kept under regular review by the UN Commission on Human Rights. At its recent session, the UN commission welcomed the Indonesian Government's undertaking to invite the High Commissioner for Human Rights to visit East Timor in 1995 and to continue to co-operate with the UN commission's special rapporteurs and working groups.

Barings

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money has been lost by his Department and by the secret intelligence service arising out of developments at Barings.

Mr. Goodlad: There has been no financial loss by the FCO and the ODA arising out of developments at Barings. I do not intend to comment on detailed financial questions about the security and intelligence agencies.

China

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which way representatives of Her Majesty's Government voted at the United Nations meeting held in New York on the motion condemning the abuse of human rights in China; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The EU, with the support of a number of other countries, tabled a draft resolution on human rights in China at the 51st UN Commission on Human Rights in Geneva. The United Kingdom voted in favour of the resolution, which narrowly failed to pass. Prior to this, the UK voted against a Chinese motion proposing that no action be taken on the draft resolution.

Rwanda

Mrs. Liddell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the international community will take to bring to justice those responsible for the massacre against the people of Tutsi origin in Rwanda in the parish of Shangi.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: UN Security Council resolution 955 of 8 November 1994 established an international criminal tribunal for Rwanda and investigators have begun work in the region. It will be for the prosecutor of the tribunal to decide who will be brought to trial.

In addition, the United Nations development programme has developed plans to help rehabilitate the Rwandan judicial system.

Sudanese Refugees

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the main causes of the current influx of refugees from southern Sudan into Uganda.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The conflict in southern Sudan continues to displace Sudanese civilians to Uganda and other neighbouring countries. At the beginning of 1995, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees estimated the number of Sudanese refugees in Uganda at 300,000.

Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards a comprehensive test ban treaty which allows the conducting of hydro-nuclear explosions in a laboratory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Davis: The United Kingdom remains committed to negotiating a comprehensive test ban treaty. We intend to abide by the terms of the treaty when it enters into force. At the same time, the United Kingdom, like the other nuclear weapon states, will need to take the necessary steps to fulfil our responsibility to ensure the safety and reliability of our nuclear weapons.

Turkey

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Turkish authorities over the seizure by Turkish customs officials in December 1993 of lorries owned by the haulage company, Ralph Davies International; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Davis: Our embassy in Ankara have been in frequent contact with lawyers acting on behalf of Ralph Davies International and with the appropriate authorities in Turkey. We recently discovered that the court hearing had exceeded the 12-months period after which goods detained by Turkish customs can be sold. We therefore made representations to the Turkish Foreign Ministry on 25 January urging that any proposed sale of the vehicles be put on hold pending the outcome of legal representations.

Mr. Zia Farooqi

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on the issue of a visa to Mr. Zia Farooqi, a leading member of the Pakistani Sunni organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: No representations have been received.

Gibraltar

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the names and the dates when Ministers from his Department have visited Gibraltar during each of the last five years.

Mr. David Davis: During the period 1990–94, the following Ministers from this Department visited Gibraltar:

23–25 January 1990, right hon. Francis Maude MP, Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs

26–28 July 1991, right hon. Tristan Garel-Jones MP, Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs

30 November–1 December 1993, right hon. David Heathcoat-Amory MP, Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

Temporary Contracts

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by his Department have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration for the current year and each of the past five years, in each case specifying what percentage of the respective total workforce these employees constituted.

Mr. Goodlad: There are no employees on temporary contracts of 51 weeks.

The information requested at (b) is not readily available but will be provided to the hon. Member shortly.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people he expects to employ in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which he is responsible on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration in the next three years, in each case specifying the number of employees who had previously been employed in a similar position on the same contract.

Mr. Goodlad: We have no specific targets.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for the current year and each of the past five years, how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which his Department is responsible who have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration are re-employed in the same or similar position at a later date.

Mr. Goodlad: We do not employ staff on temporary contracts of 51 weeks.

It is not unusual for casual staff—that is, those employed on renewable monthly or quarterly contracts of less than 51 weeks duration—to be re-employed in the same or similar position following a short break.

It is not Foreign and Commonwealth Office policy to terminate contracts and re-appoint as a means of denying employment rights.

Information for the preceding five years is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what positions in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which his Department is responsible are filled by employees who are employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration.

Mr. Goodlad: There are no positions filled by employees on temporary contracts of 51 weeks duration.

Positions filled by casual employees, that is, those employed on renewable monthly or quarterly contracts of less than 51 weeks duration include language teachers, escorting officers, library assistants, translators and interpreters, statisticians, technical archivists, scientific officers, professional advisers and some administrative and support grade posts.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the full terms of employment as specified to employees in his Department and all executive agencies for which he is responsible who are employed on a temporary contract of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration.

Mr. Goodlad: The terms and conditions of employment vary according to the type of appointment. Model letters of appointment are available for viewing in the Libraries of both Houses.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what guidance has been issued in respect of the recruitment and appointment of non-permanent employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by his Department.

Mr. Goodlad: We have not issued specific guidance in respect of recruitment and appointment of non-permanent employees but follow the guidelines laid down by Her Majesty's Treasury.

ENVIRONMENT

Council Rents

13. Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average rent for a council tenancy in England; and what were the equivalent figures for 1978–79 in actual and real terms.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The average weekly local authority rent in England in 1994–95 is estimated to be £35.68. In 1978–79, it was £5.90, which is £17.20 at today's prices using the gross domestic product deflator.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average rent for a council tenancy in England; and what were the equivalent figures for 1978–79 in actual and real terms.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 12 January, Official Report, column 173.

Local Government Finance

21. Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to set final capping limits for local authority spending.

Mr. Curry: We cannot take decisions on capping principles or on designation of individual authorities until after authorities have set their budgets and notified my Department by the end of this week. I expect to designate authorities under the capping procedures at the end of this month or early next.

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what amount was gained by (a) Bedfordshire and (b) Cambridgeshire through area cost adjustment over the last 10 years;

(2) what consideration he has given to reform of the area cost adjustment system for local government finance; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will list the detailed criteria used in determining the area cost adjustment formula and the counties receiving it; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what was the financial effect of the area cost adjustment as between Cambridgeshire, Bedfordshire, Hertfordshire and Oxfordshire in the current financial year.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The methodology that is used to calculate the area cost adjustment is set out in the departmental publication "Standard Spending Assessments: Guide to Methodology 1994–95 edition". A copy of this publication was placed in the Library. The main change introduced for 1995–96 is the replacement of judgmental factors in the calculation by detailed data from the new earnings survey.

We are currently considering with the local authority associations what programme of work should be undertaken on standard spending assessment methodology in 1995. We have indicated that we wish to consider the case for a change in the boundaries of zones used in the area cost adjustment and have commissioned research as a part of this work.

All London authorities, Isles of Scilly and Isle of Wight councils and authorities within the following counties currently receive area cost adjustments: Bedfordshire, Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, East Sussex, Essex, Hampshire, Hertfordshire, Kent, Oxfordshire, Surrey and West Sussex.

Cambridgeshire does not receive area cost adjustment. The other figures requested are:

a. In 1994–95 the county councils for Bedfordshire, Hertfordshire and Oxfordshire received the following contribution to their total standard spending assessment from area cost adjustment:
Bedfordshire: £22.830 million
Hertfordshire: £59.778 million
Oxfordshire: £21.320 million

b. Since 1990–91, the first year of standard spending assessments, Bedfordshire county council has received the following contribution to its total standard spending assessment from area cost adjustment:
1990–91: £9.777 million
1991–92: £13.302 million
1992–93: £16.505 million
1993–94: £20.263 million
1994–95: £22.830 million
1995–96: £17.456 million

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the accumulated financial reserves (a) of the London Borough of Ealing and (b) all other local authorities on 1 April 1994 and at the latest estimate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I have placed the information in the Library of the House.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the purpose of designating local authorities for capping.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The twin purposes of capping are to ensure that all local authorities play their part in the restraint of public expenditure, and to protect council taxpayers from high council taxes.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to set final capping limits for local authorities.

Mr. Curry: We cannot take decisions on capping principles or on designation of individual authorities until after authorities have set their budgets. I expect to designate authorities under the capping procedures at the end of this month or early next.

House Repossessions

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the number of households likely to lose their home through repossession for mortgage arrears in the next 12 months.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Government do not make predictions about future levels of repossessions, but I am pleased to note from the latest figures published by the Council of Mortgage Lenders that the number of properties taken into possession in 1994 was the lowest since 1990 and 35 per cent. lower than the peak in 1991.

Noisy Parties

27. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to curb noisy parties.

Mr. Atkins: Local authorities have powers to deal with noisy parties, but there are many who believe that controls on neighbour noise should be strengthened and we will very shortly be consulting on specific proposal to do this.

Special Protection Areas

29. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has to report on the designation of special protection areas for ornithological purposes and special areas for conservation for other wildlife conservation interests with respect to the European habitats directive.

Mr. Atkins: The Government are making excellent progress on classifying special protection areas for birds. Twenty-three SPAs have been classified in the last 12 months, bringing the UK total to 102. We expect to announce more classifications shortly. Following advice from the statutory nature conservation agencies, I will shortly be consulting on a list of possible areas which could qualify for submission to the European Commission as candidate special areas of conservation.

Negative Equity

30. Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest estimate of the number of households in negative equity.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Estimates of negative equity vary. Based on Department of the Environment house price data, in the fourth quarter of 1994 an estimated 677,440 households in the UK were affected by negative equity. This is over 40 per cent. lower than the peak in the fourth quarter of 1992.

Global Warming

31. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the most recent advice he has received on global warming; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: The most recent, and most authoritative advice, is contained in the interim reports produced by the intergovernmental panel on climate change in 1992 and 1994. They confirm the IPCC's previous predictions of an underlying global warming rate of 0.3 deg C per decade during the next century due to greenhouse gas emissions from human activity.

Uniform Business Rate

32. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what submissions he has received regarding the uniform business rate for 1995–96; and what conclusions he has drawn from them.

Mr. Curry: I have received many representations on this issue. That is only to be expected, since there have been major changes in the market for rented property since the previous revaluation was carried out and rateable values have changed correspondingly. There would have been a great many more had we not taken steps to phase in the impact of the revaluation gently through a transitional scheme.

Standard Spending Assessments, Derbyshire

33. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received this year regarding the standard spending assessments for Derbyshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: My hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration met a delegation from Derbyshire county council on 3 January to discuss the impact of the 1995–96 local government settlement on the county. He also met a wider delegation from the east midlands counties, including Derbyshire, that day.

Lavatory Cisterns

34. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has considered the impact on the environment of different types of lavatory cisterns; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My Department has commissioned research into the efficiency and effectiveness of various types of flushing mechanism and WCs which use lower volumes of water.

Council House Building

35. Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homes have been built by local councils in England over the past five years; and how this compares with the figures for the period 1974 to 1979.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: It is estimated that local authorities completed 27,700 dwellings in the five years up the end of 1994. They completed 460,900 dwellings in the five years from the end of 1974 to the end of 1979.

Housing associations are now the main providers of new social housing. Local authorities' primary housing tasks are the efficient management of their own stock of housing and enabling other organisations to provide new housing.

Councils (Political Publicity)

36. Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines apply to councils devoting spending to propagating political arguments.

Mr. Gummer: Section 2 of the Local Government Act 1986 prohibits local authorities from producing party political publicity, and we have issued under section 4 of that Act a code of recommended practice on local authority publicity, a copy of which I have placed in the Library.

Homelessness

37. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce legislation to change the provisions of part III of the Housing Act 1985 in respect of homelessness.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave the hon. Member for Newham, North-East (Mr. Timms) on 28 November 1994, Official Report, column 479.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total number of homes which have been developed on sites owned by the London Docklands development corporation, broken down by borough; how many of the homes in each borough have been for housing association development for rent and how many for shared ownership; what has been the total subsidy made by the London Docklands development corporation to social housing development in each borough in the urban development area in each year, since its inception, and what is the projected subsidy for the next three years; and what is the future role of the London Docklands development corporation in terms of social housing development.

Sir Paul Beresford: The information is given in the tables:

Note:
In addition, the LDDC spent £90 million to provide 568 socially rented dwellings for the Limehouse link rehousing scheme.

LDDC Strategy

The corporation's continuing strategy is to secure a range of new housing for all sections of the community.

Social housing packages currently planned in partnership with the Housing Corporation, local authorities, housing associations and developers include:

100 dwellings for rent, shared ownership and self-build on five sites in the Isle of Dogs

230 dwellings for rent as part of phase 1 of the west Silvertown urban village; 60 dwellings within phase 2.

Local Authority Mortgage Interest Rates

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if Liverpool city council, when it sold its mortgages in 1985 and in 1992, was required to apply the Department's upper levels of statutory interest rates to mortgages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: No. The statutory provisions governing local authority mortgage interest rates do not apply where a mortgage has been transferred to a commercial lender.

Westminster City Council

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the actions of Westminster city council and the right hon. Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) during the transfer of Walterton and Elgin community homes under the provisions of the Housing Act 1988; and what plans he has to undertake any investigation or action as a result of these representations.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: None.

Planning Permission

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in what situations he expects local authorities to grant planning permission contrary to the major policies in their statutory plans.

Sir Paul Beresford: Section 54A of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 states that where, in making any determination under the planning Acts, regard is to be had to the development plan, the determination shall be made in accordance with the plan unless material considerations indicate otherwise.

Fire Safety

Mr Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many deaths there were in fires in houses in multiple occupation in each of the years 1990 to 1994; what proposals he has regarding certification of fire safety in houses of multiple occupation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Statistics are available for deaths from fire in England and Wales. The Home Office statistics do not correlate exactly with the definition of houses in multiple occupation in section 345 of the Housing Act 1985. The best estimate for multi-occupied houses, excluding shared houses—that is, by students or families taking in lodgers—is as follows:

Deaths from fire in England and Wales 1990–1993

Year	Multiple occupancy houses	All hotels/ boarding houses	All hostels	Total
1990	61	1	—	62
1991	44	3	1	48
1992	76	6	1	83
1993[1]	44	5	1	50

[1] Provisional. Figures for 1994 are not yet available.

The question of certification of fire safety in houses in multiple occupation was addressed by many of those responding to my Department's consultation paper on the case for licensing. The consultation period closed on 18 February and we are now considering what action to take. An announcement will be made in due course.

Housing

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment following the Court of Appeal decision in the case of Mitchell v. Secretary of State of 16 June 1994, what plans he has to issue fresh guidance to local authorities clarifying the extent to which, in the context of the provision of affordable housing, it is material in planning terms to distinguish between different types of tenure.

Mr. Gummer: The Mitchell judgment will be taken into account in the guidance to be issued shortly by the Department.

Temporary Contracts

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for the current year and each of the past five years, how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which his Department is responsible who have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration are re-employed in the same or similar position at a later date.

Sir Paul Beresford: The following information covers non-industrial staff in my Department, excluding Ordnance Survey and PSA Services. All temporary staff are employed on contracts of less than 51 weeks.

	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994	1995
DOE	4.5	18	26	9	5	0
Agencies	3	2	6	15.5	18.5	0.5

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by his Department have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration for the current year and each of the past five years, in each case specifying what percentage of the respective total work force these employees constitute.

Sir Paul Beresford: The following information covers non-industrial staff in my Department, excluding Ordnance Survey and PSA Services. All temporary staff are initially employed on contracts of less than 51 weeks.

	DoE		Agencies
	Number	Percentage	Number	Percentage
1 April 1990	178	3.5	30	3.6
1 April 1991	176	2.6	29.5	3.4

1 April 1994	304	6.5	42.5	3.3
1 March 1995	359.5	8.0	51	3.4

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people he expects to employ in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which he is responsible, on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration in the next three years, in each case specifying the number of employees who had previously been employed in a similar position on the same contract.

Sir Paul Beresford: Departmental policy is only to employ staff on temporary contracts to meet the short-term needs of the Department. It is not possible therefore to forecast accurately the number we expect to employ in the future.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance has been issued in respect of the recruitment and appointment of non-permanent employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by his Department.

Sir Paul Beresford: In early 1994, my Department issued a circular to all its personnel sections, including those in its regions and agencies, giving guidance on the recruitment and appointment of non-permanent staff.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the full terms of employment as specified to employees in his Department and all executive agencies for which he is responsible who are employed on a temporary contract of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration.

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department has a standard letter of appointment for all temporary staff employed centrally in its regions and agencies. A copy has been placed in the library.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what positions in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which his Department is responsible are filled by employees who are employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration.

Sir Paul Beresford: The following information covers non-industrial staff in my Department, excluding Ordnance Survey and PSA Services. All temporary staff are employed on contracts of less than 51 weeks.

Water Investment

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the level of investment in the water industry in 1978–79; and what is the expected level in 1992–93 expressed in constant prices.

Sir Paul Beresford: On a comparable basis at constant prices, water industry capital expenditure in 1978–79 was about £1.1 billion. By 1992–93, it had almost trebled to some £3.2 billion.

Toy Libraries

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the grants to toy libraries in England in each of the last five years.

Mr. Bowis: I have been asked to reply.

The relevant grants given by the Department of Health to the National Association of Toy and Leisure Libraries, known as playmatters, are shown in the table.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Care Disregard

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) pursuant to his answer of 10 January, Official Report, column 53, what has been the average award made to the recipients of the new child care disregard since its introduction; and what was the figure for those receiving maximum family credit and for those on the lowest level of family credit;

(2) how many claims have been made for the new child care disregard since its introduction in October; how many of these claims have been (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful; and if he will break these figures down according to people receiving (i) family credit, (ii) disability working allowance, (iii) housing benefit and (iv) council tax benefit.

Mr. Roger Evans: Information is available for family credit only. In the five-month period to 28 February 1995, the latest date for which information is available, there were 24,600 claims for help with child care charges. Of these, 12,900 families are now receiving higher family credit awards as a result of the new help. In 4,600 of these cases, the additional help increased their award to the maximum amount of family credit. The average additional weekly amount was £16.40.

Some 11,700 families claimed help with child care charges but did not receive it. Of these, 8,800 families were not eligible because they did not satisfy the qualifying conditions and 2,900 families received no extra help because they were already receiving the maximum amount of family credit. Families with child care charges, including those who receive maximum family credit, may get extra help through housing benefit and council tax benefit. No information is yet available on the numbers who have obtained help through these benefits.

It will take some time before the new help takes full effect as existing family credit recipients can only claim the child care help when their current 26-week award expires, while many potential beneficiaries need to find work of 16 hours or more and to make appropriate child care arrangements.

Source:

Five per cent. sample of family credit awards made between 1 October 1994 and 28 February 1995. These figures do not include claims made by 28 February but decided after that date.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what the average award was made to family recipients of the new child care disregard since its introduction in October; and what was the figure for those receiving maximum family credit and for those on the lowest level of family credit;

(2) how many family credit recipients have claimed the new child care disregard since its introduction in October; and how many of these claims have been (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful.

Mr. Roger Evans [pursuant to his answer, 10 January 1995, c.53]: I regret that the information provided contained an error. The correct information is set out.

In the two-month period to 30 November 1994, there were 2,000 families who received additional help as a result of the new help with child care charges where the additional help increased their award to the maximum amount of family credit, and not 4,340 families as stated in the original answer.

Funeral Payments

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what regulations there are in respect of funeral payments under the social fund; and what information claimants must provide to funeral directors about their ability to pay funeral expenses.

Mr. Roger Evans: The relevant regulations are the Social Fund Maternity and Funeral Expenses (General) Regulations 1987, SI 481; the Social Fund Maternity and Funeral Expenses (General) Amendment Regulations 1988, SI 36; the Social Fund Maternity and Funeral Expenses (General) Amendment Regulations 1989, SI 379; the Social Fund Maternity and Funeral Expenses (General) Amendment Regulations 1992, SI 2149; the Social Fund Maternity and Funeral Expenses (General) Amendment Regulations 1993, SI 479, and the Social Fund Maternity and Funeral Expenses (General) Amendment Regulations 1994, SI 506. There is no requirement therein for claimants or potential claimants to the social fund to provide the said information to funeral directors.

Benefits Payments

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people residing in the parliamentary constituency of (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow and (b) Eastwood are presently in receipt of social security payments; and what proportion this figure is of the population of the constituencies.

Mr. Hague: Information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

As information is not available in respect of the total number in receipt of social security payments within the constituencies, it is not possible to provide this figure as a proportion of the population.

The available information, based on the relevant Benefits Agency districts, is in the table.

Invalidity Benefit

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) men and (b) women are currently in receipt of invalidity benefit in the Greenock and Port Glasgow Benefits Agency district; what proportion they represent of the total population of working age; and what are the average proportions for (i) the Strathclyde region and (ii) Scotland.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available in the form requested.

The available information is in the tables.

	Number
People in receipt of invalidity benefit in the district offices that fall within the Strathclyde region on the last working day of January 1995.	152,950

Notes:

1. Figures obtained from a 100 per cent. clerical count of cases in the Benefits Agency offices.
2. The figure will include some people who have claimed but are not actually receiving invalidity benefit because they are in receipt of a higher overlapping benefit.
3. A few of the people quoted as being in the Strathclyde area are actually outside this area.

Table B

People in Scotland in receipt of invalidity benefit on 3 April 1993 by percentage of working population

	People in receipt of invalidity benefit	Percentage of the working population
Males	145,000	9
Females	70,000	5

Notes:

1. The working population has been taken to be 16 to 64 for men and 16 to 59 for women.
2. Invalidity benefit information based on a one per cent. sample of claimants, rounded to the nearest thousand.
3. Estimated mid-year population figures supplied by the population estimates unit, OPCS.

Temporary Contracts

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people he expects to employ in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which he is responsible on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration in the next three years, in each case specifying the number of employees who had previously been employed in a similar position on the same contract.

Mr. Hague: No such projections are available. Recruitment patterns will depend upon the circumstances applying at the time.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the full terms of employment as specified to employees in his Department and all executive agencies for which he is responsible who are employed on a temporary contract of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 week's duration.

Mr. Hague: The terms and conditions of service for temporary staff vary according to the type of temporary appointment, the expected length of the appointment, the agency or other business unit in which they are employed, the grade to which they are appointed, the type of work they are required to do and the location of the work. All temporary staff are, however, bound by the same general rules on matters such as conduct, standards of propriety, and political activities as apply to all civil servants and which are set out in the civil service management code, a copy of which is in the Library.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance has been issued in respect of the recruitment and appointment of non-permanent employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by his Department.

Mr. Hague: Guidance to managers on the recruitment and appointment of non-permanent employees is based on the rules set out in the civil service management code, a copy of which is in the Library.

Blind and Partially Sighted People

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what survey he has carried out into the extent to which Government Departments publish information in Braille or large type;

(2) if he will take steps to ensure that all Government Departments publish information in Braille or large type;

(3) what plans he has to improve access to information to blind and partially sighted people;

(4) if he will bring forward legislation requiring information, with special reference to Bills and public notices, to be sent to the blind and the partially sighted in the form of Braille or large print; and if he will ensure that the blind and partially sighted will be informed of their right to this information;

(5) how he plans to encourage other councils to follow the lead of councils, with special reference to Barnet, to promote services to the blind and partially sighted.

Mr. Hague: The Government recognise the importance of providing information in accessible formats. In the consultation document "Disability on the Agenda" we gave a commitment to seek to increase the range of information made available in this way. Departmental information officers are currently taking this work forward.

The Disability Discrimination Bill will provide a right of access for disabled people. Under that right, service providers, including local authorities, will be required to provide auxiliary aids and services where this is reasonable and necessary to enable disabled people, including those with visual impairments, to use the service in question. Where a service itself consists of either the provision of information of facilities for communication, that service must be accessible where reasonable. The Bill itself is available in Braille.

Benefits (Working People)

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list for (a) 1992, (b) 1991, (c) 1990 and (d) 1989, the total amount of expenditure on (i) income support (ii) housing benefit and (iii) council tax benefit given to families containing one or more adults in work;

(2) if he will list, for (a) 1992, (b) 1991, (c) 1990 and (d) 1989, how many families containing one or more adults in work received (i) income support, (ii) housing benefit and (iii) council tax benefit;

(3) if he will list for (a) 1993, (b) 1992, (c) 1991, (d) 1990 and (e) 1989, the total amount of expenditure on (i) income support, (ii) housing benefit and (iii) council tax benefit given to people in work with no dependants;

(4) if he will list for (a) 1993, (b) 1992, (c) 1991, (d) 1990 and (e) 1989, how many people in work with no dependants, received (i) income support, (ii) housing benefit and (iii) council tax benefit.

Notes:

1. All figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand and expenditure to the nearest million.
2. For this analysis we have taken "recipients" to mean benefit units consisting of single people or couples with no dependants, and "families" to mean benefit units consisting of single people or couples with dependants.
3. For council tax benefit 1993 is the only year that figures have been provided. Prior to 1993 community charge benefit was in payment and figures for this are not comparable.
4. Estimated annual expenditure is calculated as benefit units multiplied by the average weekly amount of benefit in payment for the group, multiplied by 52.
5. IS and HB columns are not mutually exclusive and cannot therefore be summed.

Cold Weather Payments

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what entitlement constituents in Stoke-on-Trent, North have to cold weather payments in respect of (a) January and (b) February.

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the cold weather payment scheme is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Ms Joan Walley, dated 14 March 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about Cold Weather Payments.

Persons become entitled to a Cold Weather Payment if for any part of a period of cold weather they are entitled to Income Support which includes one of the following:

an amount for a dependent child under five or a Pensioner, Higher Pensioner, Enhanced Pensioner, Disability, Severe Disability or Disabled Child Premium.

A period of cold weather is defined as a period of seven consecutive days when the average temperature in a local area is forecast or recorded to be 0°C or below.

Sixty meteorological weather stations in the UK are each linked to a set of postcodes. The Parliamentary constituency of Stoke-on-Trent North is in the area covered by the Benefits Agency District of North Staffordshire. The weather stations linked to postcodes in that district are Manchester Airport, Shawbury, Watnall and Wilsden. None of these weather stations returned forecast or recorded periods of cold weather in January or February and therefore no Cold Weather Payments were paid to people in that area during that period.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Social Fund

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was (a) the average, (b) the lowest and (c) the highest total payout made from the social fund by the Southampton benefits office in the most recent year.

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. John Denham, dated 14 March 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Social Fund (SF) in Southampton.

Since the formation of the Benefits Agency (BA) in April 1991 all former DSS local offices were formed into Districts. The BA's Southampton office is now part of the BA District of Solent and New Forest, which comprises the offices of Southampton, Fareham and New Forest. Information is available only at District level.

I have provided at Annex A the average awards for Community Care Grants (CCG), Budgeting Loans (BLs), Crisis Loans (CLs), Funeral Payments and Maternity Payments made in the Solent and New Forest District in the year 1993–94. No Cold Weather Payments were made in the District during that year. I should add that Maternity payments can be made up to a maximum of £100, although in multiple pregnancies the £100 maximum can be made for each child. Therefore, the average Maternity Payments was slightly above £100.

Statistics showing the lowest or highest amounts awarded are not readily available and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost. However, statistics are readily available showing the number of awards made within certain cash bands and at Annex B I have provided the number of awards within the lowest and highest cash bands for each part of the Fund in 1993–94.

The minimum amount that can be awarded for both CCGs and BLs is £30. There is no minimum award for CLs, therefore, the amount awarded will be enough to relieve the immediate emergency or disaster, after taking into account any income or capital the applicant has.

All SF loans are limited to the amount the individual applicant can afford to repay. The maximum amount of SF loans the individual applicant may have outstanding at any one time is £1,000. Therefore, no award can be made which, either singularly or when added to any outstanding amount, will exceed £1,000. There is no maximum amount rule for CCGs and this accounts for the different high and low cash bands.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Professional Services

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much the Overseas Development Administration spent on contracted external professional services in 1992–93 and 1993–94; what types of services were provided; and how much expenditure related to (a) the Overseas Development Administration's internal administration and (b) the aid programme.

Mr. Baldry: Total expenditure on contracted professional services for 1992–93 and 1993–94 was £204 million and £256 million, respectively. Less than 1 per cent. of this related to consultancy advice to assist our internal management of the aid programme. The remainder was aid programme expenditure relating to the provision of professional services to assist over 80 overseas Governments with the implementation of their development programmes. The services provided include conventional consultancy advice—about 25 per cent. of the total—and project and programme management services provided by external private and public sector organisations such as the British Council.

St. Helena

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy for encouraging entrepreneurial endeavour on St. Helena.

Mr. Baldry: We recognise the importance of encouraging entrepreneurial endeavour on St. Helena, as an essential means of promoting the island's economic prospects, and we are making a substantial commitment to that goal.

Under a three-year project about to be finalised in agreement with the Government of St. Helena, the Overseas Development Administration will be providing some £1.2 million of aid to support the establishment of a new business development organisation for the island, the St. Helena development agency. The aim of the agency is to encourage an export-oriented and import-substituting private sector, reducing the trade deficit and dependence on UK budgetary aid. Its purpose is to promote sustainable private sector development by providing a viable alternative to aid-financed public sector employment in St. Helena. Activities will include the training of private sector staff, the provision of business advisory services and the provision of grants for private sector projects where justified on development grounds.

Iraq

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking within the framework of humanitarian support to restore the economy of areas of Iraq not under the control of the regime of Saddam Hussein.

Mr. Baldry: In the three northern governorates of Iraq, we have this financial year contributed £2 million to help returning villagers become self-sustaining and £1 million to help protect wheat crops from pests. We are also contributing to a programme of clearing land mines from agricultural areas and villages.

TREASURY

Barings Bank

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if Barings bank breached the Banking Act 1987 over transfer of its capital to Singapore;

(2) if Barings bank received permission from the Bank of England to place more than 25 per cent. of its capital in Singapore.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) on what date the issues raised at the board meeting of Barings in September 1994 were first communicated to the Bank of England;

(2) what communications were received by the Bank of England as to developing problems at either Barings in the United Kingdom or Singapore from overseas financial authorities in each of the last 24 months;

(3) when the Bank of England was first made aware of the Barings internal audit report outlining concerns over the activities of Mr. Nick Leeson.

Mr. Nelson [holding answers 8 and 13 March 1995]: As my right hon. and learned Friend told the House on 27 February, he has asked the Board of Banking Supervision to investigate fully and urgently all aspects of the Barings episode and to report back to him. He expects to publish the full report subject only to the need to protect the legitimate confidentiality of innocent third parties and any other legal constraints.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what date Ministers were first informed that Barings was unable to meet its financial commitments.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 13 March 1995]: On 24 February 1995.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he (a) has given and (b) will give directions under section 4 of the Bank of England Act 1946 to the governor of the Bank of England to appear as a witness in inquiries into the Barings bank collapse.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 9 March 1995]: No.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) when the Bank of England was first informed of the previous experience of Barings in establishing banking structures prior to March 1992 where problems arose as referred to in the BAX Memo;

(2) on what date the problems of Barings in Japanese markets in 1990 were first drawn to the attention of the Bank of England;

(3) on what date reassurances given by Mr. Anthony Hawes, Treasurer of Baring Securities to SIMEX on 8 February as to the ability of Barings to meet its financial commitments were made known to representatives of the Bank of England.

Mr. Nelson: As my right hon. and learned Friend told the House on 27 February, he has asked the Board of Banking Supervision to investigate fully and urgently all aspects of the Barings episode and to report back to him. He expects to publish the full report subject only to the need to protect the legitimate confidentiality of innocent third parties and any other legal constraints.

Sterling

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he is taking to reduce sterling to a competitive level against (a) the dollar and (b) the deutschmark.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 13 March 1995]: The Government do not set targets for the exchange rate. Movements in the exchange rate are considered as part of general assessment of monetary conditions in setting monetary policy. United Kingdom firms are very competitive, as shown by our strong export performance; in the fourth quarter of 1994 export volumes, excluding oil and erratics, were up up 13½ per cent. on a year earlier.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he is taking to reduce sterling to a competitive level against the ecu currencies other than the deutschmark; and if he will publish a table showing the sterling exchange rate for ecu currencies other than the deutschmark for each month from August 1992.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 13 March 1995]: The Government do not set targets for the exchange rate. Movements in the exchange rate are considered as part of general assessment of monetary conditions in setting monetary policy. United Kingdom firms are very competitive, as shown by our strong export performance; in the fourth quarter of 1994 export volumes, excluding oil and erratics, were up 13½ per cent. on a year earlier. Sterling's exchange rate against the ecu currencies can be found in table 7.1A of "Financial Statistics" published by the Central Statistical Office.

Construction Workers

Mr. Berry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his estimates for (a) the numbers of individuals working in the construction industry on the basis of SC60 certificates and (b) the numbers of individuals operating with 714Is, in each year following the scrutineering exercise in 1990.

Sir George Young: The number of 714I holders, recorded in April of each year—March for 1995—were as follows:

1990: 513,145
1991: 508,710
1992: 485,668
1993: 450,107
1994: 424,185
1995: 414,040

Numbers of individuals taxed on the basis of SC60 deduction are not compiled. But the Inland Revenue believes that, for each of the above years, the numbers have been lower than for 714I holders.

Mr. Berry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the Inland Revenue estimates for change in (a) relative numbers of 714s, SC60s and PAYE individuals in the constructions industry and (b) the respective tax yield of each category as a consequence of the measures related to thresholds for eligibility for 714 certificates introduced in the Finance Bill 1995.

Sir George Young: No firm estimates have been made. But the purpose of the Finance Bill measures is to reduce the number of 714 certificates in use, so that at least 80 per cent. of subcontractors—mostly those who supply only their own labour—are paid under SC60 deduction. An indirect consequence of the changes may be an increase in the number of individuals in the industry who are directly employed, and therefore taxed under PAYE, but it is impossible to predict the extent of this movement. The overall tax yield from the industry is expected to increase significantly by limiting the scope for evasion and non-payment of tax.

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cost of his Department's expenditure on water and sewerage in (a) the current year and (b) each of three previous years.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury's expenditure on water and sewerage in the current year and each of the three previous years is as follows:

Year	£
1994–95[1]	43,392
1993–94	13,677
1992–93	25,037
1991–92	24,790

[1] Expenditure to 10 March 1995.

Debt Relief

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the outcome of the recent Paris Club meeting with regard to the debts of Guinea, Togo, Uganda, Chad and Guinea-Bissau; and what is the schedule for further debt relief for other countries.

Mr. Nelson: Since the December Paris Club agreement to offer greater debt relief under the full Trinidad terms, Chad, Togo and Guinea-Bissau have been offered maturities treatment with 67 per cent. debt reduction. Guinea has received maturities treatment with 50 per cent. debt reduction. Uganda was offered a debt stock reduction at 67 per cent.

The Paris Club meets monthly to discuss debt relief for countries on a case-by-case basis.

Disabled People (VAT)

Mr. Keen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the benefits which would accrue from making all special equipment for the disabled VAT exempt on proof of disabled registry.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A wide range of goods and services are already zero-rated when supplied to people with disabilities. This includes special equipment designed solely for use by people with disabilities. These reliefs save people with disabilities about £150 million in VAT each year.

Electricity Prices

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Treasury was first told of Professor Littlechild's intention to review electricity price caps, as announced on Tuesday 7 March.

Sir George Young: The Treasury was first told during the afternoon of Monday 6 March that Professor Littlechild had just decided to review further the electricity distribution price caps on the regional electricity companies.

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when Professor Littlechild or his office first informed the Treasury that the Director General of Electricity Supply was considering a new review of electricity price caps.

Sir George Young: Neither Professor Littlechild nor his office directly informed the Treasury that the Director General of Electricity Supply was considering a new review of electricity price caps. The information initially available to the Treasury came via the DTI.

WALES

Countryside Council for Wales

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what formal representations he has received from the chairman of the Countryside Council for Wales concerning the funding of the council from 1 April 1995.

Mr. Redwood: I held a meeting with the chairman on 10 January and with him and the full council on 24 January. These meetings, and letters exchanged between me and the chairman, covered a wide range of issues including future funding of the Countryside Council for Wales.

Languages

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many teachers are teaching English as a second language in (a) Wales and (b) each of the eight Welsh counties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Child Abuse

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 16 February, Official Report, column 766, on what date his Department received copies from other Departments, the Prime Minister's Office and the local government ombudsman of allegations concerning widespread child sexual and physical abuse at north Wales children's homes which were made by a child care officer to the Prime Minister on 17 January 1987, to the Secretary of State for Health dated 29 January 1988, and to the local government ombudsman in late 1986.

Mr. Redwood: The correspondence referred to by the hon. Member concerned allegations of physical abuse at a specific children's home in Gwynedd. It was not until June 1991 that this correspondent made allegations of widespread sexual abuse in children's homes in north Wales. These were already the subject of investigation by the North Wales police.

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 25, regarding a grant for Crickhowell house, what conditions were applied to the grant in respect of (a) the level of employment in Crickhowell house, (b) the completion of the building to suitable standards of resistance to wind and weather and (c) repayment in whole or in part when the conditions (i) and (ii) are not being met in whole or in part; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: This is an operational matter and I have asked the chief executive of the corporation to respond.

Wales European Centre

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency concerning the future provision of funding towards the cost of the Wales European centre in Brussels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The chairman has raised the issue of WDA support for the centre and I have told him it is a matter for the agency to decide within its budget and Welsh Office guidelines for expenditure.

Prescription Pricing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provision he has made in the market testing of the prescription pricing service of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority for the administration of prescriptions dispensed through the medium of Welsh.

Mr. Redwood: The British national formulary advises that the professional communication between prescriber and dispenser should be in English. However, I would expect the Welsh Health Common Services Authority to include, in its specification for the market testing of prescription pricing services, a reference to the possibility that some prescriptions might contain an element of Welsh.

Temporary Contracts

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales for this year and each of the past five years, how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which his Department is responsible who have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks' or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration are re-employed in the same or similar position at a later date.

Mr. Redwood: No staff in my Department or executive agencies have been employed on contracts of 51 weeks. The numbers of temporary staff employed on contracts of less than 51 weeks and then re-employed in each of the last five years was as follows:

(i) Department

1990: 0
1991: 13
1992: 15
1993: 72
1994: 63
1995: 0

(ii) Executive Agencies

1990: 1
1991: 8
1992: 18
1993: 16
1994: 19
1995: 2

The figures include staff employed seasonally. The years relate to the date of re-employment.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people he expects to employ in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which is he responsible on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks' or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration in the next three years, in each case specifying the number of employees who had previously been employed in a similar position on the same contract.

Mr. Redwood: The number of employees in my Department, including Cadw, that will be employed or re-employed on temporary contracts over the next three years is not determined. It will depend on operational requirements.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance has been issued in respect of the recruitment and appointment of non-permanent employees in (a) his Department and (b) all executive agencies supervised by his Department.

Mr. Redwood: Guidance on the recruitment and appointment of non-permanent employees is contained in the Welsh Office terms and conditions code which is available to all staff.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by his Department have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks' or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration for this year and each of the past five years, in each case specifying what percentage of the respective total work force these employees constitute.

Mr. Redwood: These figures are:

51 weeks: none.

less than 51 weeks:

Year	Welsh Office		Cadw
	Number	Per cent.	Number	Per cent.
1990	122	5.1	[1]—	—
1991	71	3.0	[1]—	—
1992	125	5.0	[2]—	—
1993	140.5	5.5	3	1.1
1994	239	9.1	9	4.0
1995	221	8.8	7.5	3.3

Notes:

[1] Cadw became an agency on 1 April 1992.

[2] Separate figure not available.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what positions in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which his Department is responsible are filled by employees who are employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration.

Mr. Redwood: No staff in my Department or executive agencies have been employed on contracts of 51 weeks. Staff employed on temporary contracts of less than 51 weeks are in the following positions:

In my Department: administrative assistant; administrative officer; typist; executive officer; higher executive officer; support grades bands I and II; statistician; legal officer; quality surveyor; and assistant information officer.

In the executive agencies: administrative assistant; support grade band I; typist; museum support grade.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the full terms of employment specified to employees in his Department and all executive agencies for which he is responsible who are employed on a temporary contract of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration.

Mr. Redwood: A copy of the standard appointment documents issued to temporary staff has been placed in the Library of the House.

Cardiac Surgery

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total cost of the market-testing exercise on the cardiac surgery unit for Morriston NHS hospital.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 13 March 1995]: All proposals for capital developments require the submission of business cases whether market testing is involved or not. Business cases vary according to the particular development proposed and the opportunities for involving public and private sector partners. The cost of producing the business case for the cardiac unit at Morriston hospital was around £287,000, which was met in full by the Welsh Office in view of the distinctive nature of the development. In the case of the Morriston cardiac unit, market testing produced innovative proposals which I hope will lead to a high-quality and cost-effective solution.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Harbour Grants

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what grants have been given from European sources in each financial year since 1973 in respect of (a) Larne Harbour Ltd., (b) Belfast habour board and (c) Warrenpoint harbour board.

Mr. Moss: Details of grant paid prior to 1984 no longer exist. Those for 1984–85 and 1985–86 are incomplete, but available details are set out below together with details of grants paid in each financial year from 1986–87 to 1994–95.

	Larne £	Belfast £	Warrenpoint £
1984–85	—	193,838.66	—
1985–86	—	1,000,000.00	350,000.00
1986–87	97,633.00	1,457,920.08	385,102.00
1987–88	560,750.00	325,362.70	44,465.00
1988–89	374,981.08	3,301,363.00	131,727.50
1989–90	340,867.50	1,791,802.11	467,823.10
1990–91	340,408.19	4,447,219.26	257,655.75

1993–94	2,582,036.41	21,554,017.10	3,883,668.00
1994–95	782,831.83	6,219,782.17	441,363.00
Total	6,030,964.59	55,242,794.50	6,782,210.60

Anthrax

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of anthrax were reported in each year since 1985.

Mr. Ancram: There have been two cases of anthrax in Northern Ireland since 1985—one animal reported in 1986 and one in 1990.

Hospitals Review

Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what evidence the McKenna review has taken on the future provision of services in the Greater Belfast area from clinicians of hospitals likely to be affected by the outcome of the review; who else has been consulted; and when the review is expected to report.

Mr. Moss: The McKenna review is primarily concerned with services provided by the Royal Group of Hospitals trust and the Belfast City Hospital trust. Clinicians from both these trusts are leading the reviews of their specialities and will be making their recommendations to the review group. Dr. McKenna has undertaken to consult other trusts whose services may be affected by any of the recommendations made by the group. The group has recently consulted the public on its proposals for the broad direction of services for both trusts, called "In Shape for the Future". The response was generally favourable. The review is expected to take up to two years to complete, but there is likely to be a number of reports during that period.

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the cost of his Department's expenditure on water and sewerage in (a) the current year and (b) each of the three previous years.

Mr. Moss: The cost of water and sewerage is not distinguished on the rates bills in Northern Ireland and it would be possible to provide an answer only at disproportionate cost.

Braidside Integrated Primary School

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he plans to take concerning discrimination contained in an advertisement for a religious education teacher in Braidside integrated primary school.

Mr. Ancram: None. Teaching is an excepted employment under section 37 of the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1976.

Languages

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many teachers in Northern Ireland are teaching English as a second language in public sector schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Temporary Contracts

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what guidance has been issued in respect of the recruitment and appointment of non-permanent employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by his Department.

Sir John Wheeler: The Department of Finance and Personnel had issued guidance to all Northern Ireland Departments and agencies in respect of the recruitment and appointment of non-permanent employees to the Northern Ireland civil service, covering entry requirements in relation to age, nationality, health, character, knowledge and ability; procedures for vetting; and the implementation of the policy of selection on merit in fair and open competition.

Recruitment to the home civil service in the Northern Ireland Office is subject to the provisions of the Civil Service Order in Council 1991, under which staff whose employment will not exceed 12 months, are exempt from selection on merit on the basis of fair and open competition. No specific guidance is produced for such appointments, subject to checks as appropriate in relation to age, education, nationality, health and character.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, what positions in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which his Department is responsible are filled by employees who are employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration

Sir John Wheeler: Employees on temporary contracts are not generally offered employment for a specific period but are retained for as long as required, which in most cases is for 51 weeks. The posts concerned are as follows:

(a) 51 weeks	(b) Less than 51 weeks
NI Departments and the NI Office
Casual Veterinary Officer	[1]Industrial Forest Worker
Casual Assistant Accommodation Manager	[1]Industrial Farm Worker
Casual Typist
Sandwich Course Student
Casual Brucella Tester
Casual Administrative Assistant	Vacation Student
Casual Fisheries Officer II
Casual Assistant Scientific Officer
Support Grade 2
Casual Imports Inspector
Casual Assistant Librarian
Casual Food Technologist
Telephonist
Computer Programme Administrative Officer
Casual Scientific Officer
Grade IV Short Term Relief Environment Service
Legal Assistant
Agencies
Administrative Assistant
Administrative Officer
Instructional Officer 1
Support Grade 2
Telephonist
Security Guard

[1] (Contract for maximum of 12 weeks).

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the full terms of employment as specified to employees in his Department and all executive agencies for which he is responsible who are employed on a temporary contract of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration.

Sir John Wheeler: The information has been placed in the Library.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for this year and each of the past five years, how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which his Department is responsible who have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration are re-employed in the same or similar position at a later date.

Sir John Wheeler: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate costs.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people he expects to employ in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which he is responsible on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration in the next three years, in each case specifying the number of employees who had previously been employed in a similar position on the same contract.

Sir John Wheeler: The Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office, including agencies, employ staff on temporary contracts of up to 51 weeks in order to alleviate the difficulties caused by staff shortages through periods of maternity leave, special leave, long-term illness and special exercises which may arise periodically.

It is not therefore possible to estimate reliable figures of staff who will be employed on such temporary contracts in the next three years.

EDUCATION

University Admissions

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the proportion of pupils from state schools in the total intake of Oxford and Cambridge universities in (a) 1979, (b) 1985 and (c) 1993 (i) in total, (ii) excluding pupils from selective grammar schools in the state sector and (iii) excluding pupils from selective grammar schools in the state sector and grant maintained schools were applicable.

Mr. Boswell: Detailed information on admissions to individual universities is not collected centrally. It is for each university to decide its own criteria for the admission of students. I understand that the admissions offices of both universities do produce annual statistics along these lines and my hon. Friend might care to speak to them directly.

English Language Teachers

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many teachers in England are teaching English as a second language in public sector schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: In January 1992, the most recent date for which figures are available, there were approximately 900 teachers in maintained secondary schools in England who had timetabled teaching assignments in English as a second language. No figures are available for the number of teachers involved in teaching English as a second language outside the usual timetable or in primary schools.

College Funding

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what regulations apply to further education councils in respect of the funding of colleges.

Mr. Boswell: Under the terms of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992, the Further Education Funding Council for England has a duty to secure the provision for the population of its area of sufficient facilities for the full-time further education of 16-to-18 year olds. It also has a statutory duty to secure the provision of adequate facilities for part-time further education of those over 16, and full-time further education of those over 18, and to have regard to the requirements of persons with learning difficulties.

Under the Act, the council may give financial support to the governing body of any institution within the further education sector in respect of the provision of facilities for further education. The Secretary of State may make grants to the council subject to such terms and conditions as she may determine.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what procedure is set down for colleges when trying to appeal against a decision of the Further Education Funding Council;

(2) what criteria the Further Education Funding Council follows in deciding the amount of funding for each college;

(3) what is the average percentage, per pupil, of funding given to colleges in the West Midlands area;

(4) if the Further Education Funding Council takes into account inflation, (a) for the college itself and (b) in respect of its effect on the parents, students and local community when deciding what percentage of the cost of study to fund.

Mr. Boswell: Details of the allocation of funding to colleges are matters for the Further Education Funding Council. I am therefore asking the council's chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Temporary Contracts

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many employees in (i) her Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by her Department have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration for this year and each of the past five years, in each case specifying what percentage of the respective total workforce these employees constituted.

Mr. Boswell: The number of full-time equivalent staff employed on temporary contracts covering periods up to 12 months was:

	DFE	Per cent. of total	TPA	Per cent. of total
1989–1990	41	1.6	—	—
1990–1991	29	1.1	—	—
1991–1992	32	1.2	—	—
1992–1993	80	3.3	6	2.0
1993–1994	71	3.9	10	3.1
1994–1995	85	4.8	17	5.0

The Teachers' Pensions Agency was established on 1 April 1992.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, what guidance has been issued in respect of the recruitment and appointment of non-permanent employees in (i) her Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by her Department.

Mr. Boswell: Recruitment and appointment to the Department and to the Teachers' Pensions Agency follows the principal recruitment rules set out in the civil service management code and in the Civil Service Order in Council.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what positions in (i) her Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which her Department is responsible are filled by employees who are employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration.

Mr. Boswell: The number of full-time equivalent staff currently employed on temporary contracts covering periods up to 12 months by grade are:

	DFE	TPA
Grade 7	0	0
HEO and equivalent	1	0
EO and equivalent	7	0
AO and equivalent	23	0
AA and equivalent	34	13
Total	65	13

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will publish the full terms of employment as specified to employees in her Department and all executive agencies for which she is responsible who are employed on a temporary contract of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration.

Mr. Boswell: I will write to the hon. Member, sending her a copy of the Department's standard letter of appointment and schedule for casual staff.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education for this year and each of the past five years, how many employees in (i) her Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which her Department is responsible who have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration are re-employed in the same or similar positions at a later date.

Mr. Boswell: The full information is not available. However, of the current temporary employees on contracts covering periods up to 12 months, six have been previously employed on temporary contracts.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State, how many people she expects to employ in (i) her Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which she is responsible on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration in the next three years, in each case specifying the number of employees who had previously been employed in a similar position on the same contract.

Mr. Boswell: The estimated number of full-time equivalent staff expected to be employed over the next three years on temporary contracts covering periods up to 12 months are:

	DFE	TPA
1995–1996	18	10
1996–1997	18	10
1997–1998	18	10

It is not possible to predict the number of employees likely to be re-employed.

Schools Funding

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the aggregate special purposes grant—VAT—paid to grant-maintained schools for each of (a) 1991–92, (b) 1992–93, (c) 1993–94 and (d) 1994–95.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is now held by the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman of the funding agency to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will place in the Library a copy of the independent consultants' study into grant-maintained school spending on VAT made to inform her Department on the level of grant for 1994–95.

Mr. Robin Squire: No. It would not be normal practice to publish reports commissioned to advise Ministers and Government.

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the cost of her Department's expenditure on water and sewerage in (a) the current year and (b) each of the three previous years.

Mr. Boswell: The total expenditure incurred by this Department in respect of water and sewerage to date in the current financial year and in each of the previous three financial years is:

Year	£
1991–92	42,376
1992–93	67,759
1993–94	44,750
1994–95	42,922

The figure for 1992–93 includes increased costs incurred pending the consolidation of London-based staff into a single headquarters building.

Student Grants

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans she has to ensure that students grants meet the minimum social security income support threshold; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: The resources available through the grant and loan are adequate for most students. The total resources available in grant and loan are now almost 50 per cent. higher in cash terms and 19 per cent. higher in real terms than in 1989–90, before loans were introduced. Resources will be increased by a further 2.5 per cent. for the 1995–96 academic year.

Income support and housing benefit continue to be available to students in certain groups. The access funds, which will once again be increased for 1995–96, can provide additional assistance to full-time students in particular need.

Chess

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what administrative procedures are involved in the transfer of responsibility for chess from her Department to the Department of National Heritage;

(2) what is the chess budget in her Department;

(3) how many civil servants are responsible for chess in her Department.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has no policy responsibility for chess. However the Department has for some years given grant to the British Chess Federation towards the cost of its activities, in acknowledgement of the game's perceived educational benefits. For the financial year 1995–96, the Department has offered the British Chess Federation grant of up to £48,500. An estimated 50 hours of official time per annum is spent on matters relating to the payment of grant to the British Chess Federation.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Temporary Contracts

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what position in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which his Department is responsible are filled by employees who are employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks' or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration.

Mr. Horam: Employees on temporary contracts, regardless of duration, are used only where there is a genuine management need to employ people for a short period rather than to make a permanent appointment. These types of appointment are concentrated in the more junior administrative grades or secretarial staff.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many people he expects to employ in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which he is responsible on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks' or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration in the next three years, in each case specifying the number of employees who had previously been employed in a similar position on the same contract.

Mr. Horam: In my Department and in the executive agencies, we adopt a policy of staffing on a permanent basis to deal with expected levels of work, and using temporary contracts to cope with unexpected peaks of activity. It is not possible therefore to give meaningful predictions of temporary staffing levels in future years.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster for this year and each of the past five years, how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which his Department is responsible who have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks' or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration are re-employed in the same or similar position at a later date.

Mr. Horam: (i) The Department and agencies for which I am responsible did not exist in any comparable form before the 1992 election, so figures for earlier years are therefore not available. The figures since 1992 for my Department are:

51 Weeks

1992: 4
1993: 4
1994: 4
1995: 4

Less than 51 Weeks

1992: 7

(ii) The figures since 1992 for the agencies are as follows:

Civil Service College

There were no employees on temporary contracts of 51 weeks.

For those on contracts of less than 51 weeks, the figures are as follows:

1992: 0
1993: 4
1994: 6
1995: 1

OHS

There were no employees re-employed on contracts of either up to or exactly 51 weeks.

1993: 11
1994: 2
1995: 0

HMSO

There were no employees re-employed on temporary contracts of either up to or exactly 51 weeks.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by his Department have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks' or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration for this year and each of the past five years, in each case specifying what percentage of the respective total workforce these employees constituted.

Mr. Horam: (i) The Department and agencies for which I am responsible did not exist in any comparable form before the 1992 election, so figures for earlier years are therefore not available. The figures for my Department since 1992 are:

Year	Total	Percentage

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what evidence he has that Government Departments or executive agencies supervised by Government Departments are abusing the extension of temporary contracts of 51 weeks or less in duration in the recruitment and appointment of non-permanent employees.

Mr. Horam: In the course of their 1993–94 programme of monitoring of a sample of departmental and agency recruitment, the civil service commissioners found a number of instances where temporary staff appointed without fair and open competition were retained beyond 12 months without there being any demonstrable exceptional circumstance as required by the Civil Service Order in Council 1991. These instances were not widespread and, following a reminder of the rules from the commissioners, the pattern has not been repeated in 1994–95.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the full terms of employment as specified to employees in his Department and all executive agencies for which he is responsible who are employed on a temporary contract of (a) 51 weeks' or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration.

Mr. Horam: The majority of staff on temporary contracts are issued with a standard letter of appointment. It is too long to be reproduced here and I shall be writing to the hon. Member separately enclosing a copy.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what guidance has been issued in respect of the recruitment and appointment of non-permanent employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by his Department.

Mr. Horam: My Department and the executive agencies follow the rules set out in the civil service management code for the recruitment and appointment of non-permanent employees. A copy of the code can be found in the Library of the House.

EMPLOYMENT

Sheltered Employment

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessement his Department intends to make of the impact of special contracts arrangements upon sheltered employment workshops.

Miss Widdecombe: The Employment Service will consider the operation of the scheme annually.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what body will be responsbile for the inspection of, and standards set in, workplaces which apply to become extended sheltered employers; and how such a body will be constituted and resourced.

Miss Widdecombe: The Employment Service's supported employment programme provides jobs for around 21,000 severely disabled people through contracts held with Remploy, local authorities and voluntary bodies.

The ES's supported employment procurement and consultancy service is responsbile for all contracts for supported employment apart from Remploy which is directly answerable to the chief executive of the ES. The contracts specify standards and SEPACS monitors contractors' compliance with these.

The proposal in the Disability Discrimination Bill to extend the Government's powers to allow direct funding of supported employment in dividend distributing bodies will only be used after consultation with relevant organisations.

Remploy

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been his contribution to Remploy in cash and constant price terms in each of the past 10 years; and what is the projected budget for Remploy for 1995–96.

Miss Widdecombe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's contributions to Remploy since 1984–85 are set out in the follwing table in cash and in 1993–94 constant prices:

Year	Cash prices £000s
1984–85	56,570
1985–86	59,290
1986–87	57,144
1987–88	57,996

1990–91	79,309
1991–92	79,052
1992–93	85,429
1993–94	89,199
1994–95	—
1995–96	—

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the net cost of each Remploy employee to the state after allowing for benefits unclaimed and taxes and insurance contributions unpaid.

Miss Widdecombe: This information is not available. In the 1993–94 financial year, Remploy employed an average of 8,654 people with severe disabilities at an operating deficit of £9,727 per severely disabled worker.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from Remploy about the consequences of Government policies for it employees.

Miss Widdecombe: The chairman and chief executive of Remploy meet Employment Department Ministers and the chief executive of the Employment Service at regular intervals to discuss Remploy's performance. These meetings provide an opportunity to discuss a wide range of topics, including relevant Government policies.

Training

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new businesses have been established and supported by training and enterprise councils in Northumberland, Tyneside, Sunderland, County Durham and Teesside since 1988; and what is the total number of jobs created.

Mr. Paice: The numbers of new businesses helped under the enterprise allowance scheme and business start-up scheme since the start of the 1990–91 financial year to the end of January 1995 are shown in the following table.

TEC	Total number of starts
County Durham	2,801
Northumberland	1,207
Sunderland City	1,100
Teesside	2,886
Tyneside	3,017

The first training and enterprise councils were set up in April 1990 and so figures for earlier years are not available.

National participant survey exercises conducted in the TEC era, found that, on average, approximately 0.3 additional jobs were created per business start-up scheme entrant. Local figures are not available.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the estimated value in turnover added to local economies in respect of new businesses and the impact on economic generation of new businesses established and supported by TECs in each year since 1989.

Mr. Paice: Start-ups in England under the enterprise allowance scheme—known as the business start-up scheme from 1991–92—since the introduction of training and enterprise councils are shown in the following table:

1990–91:—59,300
1991–92:—41,800
1992–93:—33,600
1993–94:—34,500

Business start-up scheme participant surveys provide some information on the average investment in, and income from, these businesses but it is not possible to quantify the value in turnover added or the overall impact on the various local economies.

This scheme has been the main, but not the only, source of TEC support to new businesses. TECs also provide assistance under contract to the Department of Trade and Industry and from their own resources.

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the cost of his Department's expenditure on water and sewerage in (a) the current year and (b) each of the three previous years.

Miss Widdecombe: It is not possible to separate the costs of water from sewerage because the cost of water and sewerage for some buildings are part of service charges paid to landlords, which do not show these items separately. However, the following table shows the overall expenditure on water utilities for each financial year since 1991–92:

Expenditure on Water
Includes Sewerage and "Metered" Water Supplies

Year	£
1994–95 (spend to date)[1]	1,224,950
1993–94	1,895,103
1992–93	1,789,079
1991–92	2,078,444

[1] End February 1995.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs are reserved in his Department for people with disabilities; and what checks exist to ensure that such quotas are adhered to.

Miss Widdecombe: No jobs in the Employment Department group are reserved for disabled people but across the group as a whole, people with disabilities comprise 3.9 per cent. of the work force.

Workstart

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of Employment what is the total cost of Workstart and the total saving from Workstart to date (a) in east Kent and (b) in South London; how many people have been involved to date; and what overall saving per person has been achieved.

Miss Widdecombe: Savings to the Exchequer from any employment programme arise from long-term improvements in the functioning of the labour market, and cannot be calculated in the terms requested.

Under the Workstart pilots, which ran from July 1993 to December 1994, employers who recruited long-term unemployed people were paid £60 a week for the first six months, and £30 a week for the next six. It is not possible to provide costs for each of the pilot areas. The total expenditure for the east Kent, London and Devon and Cornwall pilot areas until the end of February 1995 was £1,586,519.

A total of 468 people have participated in the east Kent pilot and 238 people in London.

Evaluation of Workstart suggested that it has had a positive effect on employers' willingness to recruit long-term unemployed people, and this approach will be explored further using the 5,000 pilot places announced in the Budget.

Temporary Contracts

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidance has been issued in respect of the recruitment and appointment of non-permanent employees in (i) his Department and (ii) the Employment Service.

Miss Widdecombe: Guidance throughout the Employment Department group gives effect to the rules in the civil service management code which are governed by the Civil Service Order in Council 1991.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, how many people he expects to employ in (i) his Department and (ii) the Employment Service on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration in the next three years, in each case specifying the number of employees who had previously been employed in a similar position on the same contract.

Miss Widdecombe: The available information relates to plans for the number of casual staff years. The plans are shown in the following table:

	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98
Employment Service	1,652	1,317	1,202
Rest of Employment Department Group[1]	297	285	285

[1] Employment Department, Health and Safety Executive and Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) the Employment Service have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration for the current year and each of the past five years, in each case specifying what percentage of the respective total workforce these employees constitute.

Miss Widdecombe: The available information about casual staff, with the percentage of the respective workforce in brackets is shown in the following table.

Staff Years—Outturn

	1990–91	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96[2]
Employment Service	1,762 (4.9)	3,750 (8.8)	3,394 (7.1)	3,382 (8.0)	2,428 (5.0)
Rest of Employment Department Group[1]	715 (4.3)	378 (2.5)	592 (4.0)	621 (4.9)	661 (6.0)

[1] Employment Department, Health and Safety Executive and Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service.
[2] Estimated Outturn.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for the current year and each of the past five years, how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) the Employment Service who have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration are re-employed in the same or similar position at a later date.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for each Employment Service office (i) the number of employees employed on temporary (ii) 51 week contracts, (iii) the number of employees employed on temporary contracts of less than 51 weeks duration and (iv) the total number of employees for the current year and each of the past five years, in each case specifying how many employees in (i) have been previously employed on a temporary 51 week contract by the Employment Service.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Ms Harriet Harman, dated 15 March 1995:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question concerning the number of employees employed on temporary contracts by the Employment Service (ES).

All ES temporary employees are currently given contracts for a specific number of weeks of employment up to a maximum of 51 weeks. Detailed information about the length of each individual contract, or personal records on individual employees who have been previously employed on temporary contracts, is not recorded. It is not therefore possible to provide the numbers of employees in the different categories requested for each ES office except at disproportionate cost.

I can however provide staff usage figures (including those on temporary contracts) for the past five years.

All employees (including temporary employees)

April 1989 to April 1990	April 1990 to April 1991	April 1991 to April 1992	April 1992 to April 1993	April 1993 to April 1994	Estimated for 12 months to April 1995
36,445	35,639	42,564	47,763	48,282	44,923

Temporary employees

April 1989 to April 1990	April 1990 to April 1991	April 1991 to April 1992	April 1992 to April 1993	April 1993 to April 1994	Estimated for 12 months to April 1995
1,803	1,762	3,750	3,394	3,882	2,428

I hope this information is helpful.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what positions in (i) his Department and (ii) the Employment Service are filled by employees who are employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration.

Miss Widdecombe: The great majority are in the administrative officer and administrative assistant grades.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the full terms of employment as specified to employees in his Department and all executive agencies for which he is responsible who are employed on a temporary contract of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration.

Miss Widdecombe: Terms of employment vary according to grade and location. Appointment letters throughout the Employment Department group are based on Treasury guidance.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Olner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library a copy of the legal opinion he has received in respect of the legality of a unilateral ban on the export of calves.

Mrs. Browning: My right hon. Friend has published a summary of the conclusions that emerged from the legal advice available to him. This was made available to all Members in my right hon. Friend's letter of 1 February copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many veal calves French authorities have refused to allow into France on (a) health and (b) welfare grounds in each month since December 1994; and how many British calves have arrived in France dead in each month since December 1994;

(2) how many livestock lorries French authorities have banned from entering France due to them not fulfilling animal welfare criteria in each month since December 1994.

Mrs. Browning: The French authorities are, of course, responsible for enforcing Community welfare provisions on their territory. From our exchanges with them, we are not aware that they have refused admission to France of any calves of British origin since December 1994 on either health or welfare grounds. The French authorities are not required to give us information on the number of animals dead on arrival. The information available to us indicates that deaths are rare. The French authorities tell us that they have not banned any British livestock vehicles.

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the cost of his Department's expenditure on water and sewerage in (a) the current year and (b) each of the three previous years.

Mr. Jack: Complete information on water and sewerage charges is not currently held centrally. There would be disproportionate cost in collecting it from the 260 properties occupied by the Ministry, but improvements to our database will enable us to make this information available from 1994–95.

Wild Salmon

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to conserve wild salmon.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member of Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) on 2 February 1995, Official Report, column 848.

Veal Crates

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy in respect of the year in which veal crates will be banned throughout Europe.

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 14 March 1995]: We shall continue to press for an early end to the use of close confinement systems for rearing calves. Although some member states can be expected to seek a transitional period before any such ban comes into force, we shall seek to ensure that this is kept to a minimum.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of milk quotas.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 13 March 1995]: The current EC legislation on milk quotas does not expire until 31 March 2000. The future of the quota system will be reviewed before that date and the Government will be pressing for the replacement of quotas and price supports in the dairy sector by a free market for milk and milk products in which production is based on supply and demand. Meantime, we will continue to resist any further arbitrary cuts in the UK's inadequate quota, press for reductions in support prices and seek a change in the EC rules to permit the transfer of milk quota between producers in different member states.

Piscivorous Birds

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidance he has issued to fishery proprietors and others on recommended methods of scaring cormorants and saw-bill ducks away from fisheries where they are causing or are likely to cause serious damage.

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 14 March 1995]: Advice on predation of fisheries is given by ADAS, the Ministry's wildlife advisers, to those applying for licences to kill or take piscivorous birds under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, for the purposes of preventing serious damage to fisheries. This covers advice on the use of deterrents—for example, scaring with rockets or bird scaring cartridges and human presence; proofing and exclusion; habitat modification and adjusting the stocking regime.

The research programme on piscivorous birds currently being commissioned by the Ministry and the Department of the Environment aims to help establish appropriate management techniques in different situations for reducing the impact of these birds on inland fisheries.

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds about the disturbance caused to other bird species by activity undertaken by fishery proprietors and others to scare away cormorants and saw-bill ducks which threaten to damage inland fisheries.

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 14 March 1995]: I am not aware of any such representations having been received by this Ministry.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of cases of food poisoning that have been reported from (a) salmonella and (b) campylobacter in each of the last ten years.

Mr. Sackville: I have been asked to reply.

Data for 1981 to 1993 are published in the steering group on the microbiological safety of food, annual report 1993, copies of which are available in the Library.

The confirmed total for 1993 for all salmonellas is 30,654 and the provisional figure for 1994 is 30,427.

The provisional figure for 1994 for campylobacter is 44,315. The 1993 figure is still provisional at 39,383.

SCOTLAND

Anthrax

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, how many cases of anthrax were reported in each year since 1985.

Sir Hector Monro: The number of confirmed cases of anthrax reported in Scotland for the years in question is:

1985: 1
1986: 2
1987: 2
1988: 0
1989: 0
1990: 1
1991: 1
1992: 0
1993: 1
1994: 0

Scottish Homes' Tenants

Mr. Galbraith: (1) To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of circulating Scottish Homes' tenants in Strathkelvin with the Gemini housing association leaflet;

(2) who made the decision to circulate Scottish Homes' tenants in Strathkelvin with the Gemini housing association leaflet.

Lord James-Douglas Hamilton: The information requested is a matter for Scottish Homes. I have asked its chairman, Sir James Mellon, to write to the hon. Member.

Police Escorts

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost to Strathclyde police of providing necessary assistance to truck cargo heavy duty mark II vehicles through Strathclyde in (a) 1993–94 and *(b)*1994–95.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Strathclyde police escort all such vehicles from the force area boundary to their destination, but do not separately identify the costs of such duties.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost of providing necessary assistance to truck cargo heavy duty mark II vehicles to (a) Central police, (b) Lothian police and (c) Dumfries and Galloway police.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None of these police forces is routinely involved in escorting duties for these vehicles. The Ministry of Defence police and military security provide the necessary escort.

Student Grants

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to ensure that student grants meet the minimum social security income support threshold; and if the will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Further and Higher Education.

Languages

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many teachers in Scotland are teaching English as a second language in public sectors schools; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on the number of teachers in Scotland teaching English as a second language in public sector schools was collected for the first time in the 1994 annual school census. As this information is still being processed, figures are not available yet.

Victim Support

Dr. A Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to issue a leaflet for those persons who have suffered from criminal activities; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office funds Victim Support Scotland to deal with the interests of victims of crime. In 1995–96, this funding will rise to £985,000. Victim Support Scotland already produces a number of leaflets to help those persons who have suffered from criminal activities. On 20 February 1995, a new booklet for victims of rape and sexual assault was launched in the presence of my noble and learned Friend the Minister of State. The Scottish Office was actively involved in its preparation and an additional grant of £8,000 was made to defray costs.

Public Appointments

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the appointments he has made to non-departmental public bodies and national health service trusts since 2 March 1994.

Mr. Lang: As the information sought is extensive, I shall write to the hon. Member and arrange for copies of the list to be placed in the Library of the House. The list records all appointments made by me, other than re-appointments, to non-departmental public bodies and NHS trusts over the 12 months commencing 2 March 1994.

Forestry

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much forestry owned by the Forestry Commission in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland has been sold in the last 10 years; if moneys obtained in this way are used to fund projects in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: In the 10 years to 31 December 1994, the Forestry Commission sold 43,847 hectares of forestry land in Scotland, of which 9,126 hectares were in Strathclyde. The money raised from the sale of Forestry Commission land is currently paid into the Consolidated Fund.

Parents Charter

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of producing his recent publication of the parents charter; and what is the budget for publicity for the booklet entitled "Higher Still: Opportunity for All".

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 March 1995]: Cost incurred in producing and printing the updated parents charter in Scotland are of the order of £45,000. To date, 80,000 copies have been printed. Initially, 15,000 copies were circulated to schools and other interested parties. Such has been the popularity of the charter that requests have been received for a further 55,000 copies.

Costs incurred in producing and printing "Higher Still: Opportunity for All" were of the order of £10,000.

Maternity Hospitals

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many maternity hospitals in Scotland are located on the same site as acute hospital services.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 March 1995]: There are 53 maternity units where acute services are available on the same site.

Scottish Enterprise Tayside

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland under which statute Scottish Enterprise Tayside may provide public fund assistance for tourist-related capital projects in Tayside; and what share of the total cost involved in approved projects may be paid out of public funds; and what provision has been made in respect of unique projects which began under the Scottish tourist board's grant scheme, to ensure that starting work did not prejudice applications for assistance towards each phase of the cost of the total project.

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 13 March 1995]: The activities of Scottish Enterprise Tayside, including the provision of assistance from public funds, are governed by the terms of its operating contract with Scottish Enterprise. The statutory powers and functions of Scottish Enterprise, including its power to delegate the discharge of some of these powers and functions, are set out in the Enterprise and New Towns (Scotland) Act 1990, as amended. The other matters raised are operational matters for Scottish Enterprise and I have asked its chairman to write to my hon. Friend.

NHS Information and Computer Systems

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date a circular based on DBI Associates Ltd.'s report on NHS information and computer systems was issued to the general manager of the national breast screening service in Scotland; and what action has been taken to date on that circular by that manager.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 March 1995]: The Scottish breast screening programme information system is supported by the computer centre which serves the Common Services Agency.

NHS management executive letter (1992) 45 entitled "Computer Security Guidelines", based on the DBI Associates Ltd.'s report, was issued in September 1992 to all health board general managers, the general manager of the CSA, NHS trust chief executives and unit general managers. It was also copied to all IT directors and computer centre managers.

A full external review of the SBSP information system was carried out in 1992–93 and it was confirmed that the system was working satisfactorily in all its components, including the call-re-call system.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what actions he took to ensure that all of the recommendations in DBI Associates Ltd.'s report on NHS information and computer systems were acted upon by NHS managers in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 March 1995]: Computer security guidelines were issued under NHS MEL(1992)45 in September 1992. The circular notified health boards, NHS trusts and NHS computer centres of the outcome of the DBI study, offered guidance in the form of a guidance booklet and indicated what action was required.

A formal statement of security policy for the NHS in Scotland was agreed and issued in May 1993 under circular NHS MEL(1993)59. This spelled out the roles and responsibilities required within health boards and NHS trusts.

Under the security policy, all health boards and NHS trusts were required to appoint an IT security officer and his duties were detailed. Health systems division also took steps to appoint an IT security specialist to enable the management executive to develop central guidance and advice.

A detailed IT security manual was produced by Health Systems Division and issued under circular NHS MEL(1994)75 in August 1994. The manual is intended for all staff involved in any aspect of IT systems.

Health systems division has sponsored further studies at eight national health service in Scotland sites in 1994–95.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the report on NHS information and computer systems carried out by DBI Associates Ltd. for the NHS management executive in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 March 1995]: A copy of the DBI Associates Ltd.'s report "IT Security Review for the DIS" is being placed in the Library of both Houses together with:

a) Management executive letter (1992) 45 attaching the document "IT Security Guidelines".

b) Management executive letter (1993) 59 attaching the document "IT Security Policy".

c) Management executive letter (1994) 75 attaching the documents comprising the "IT Security Manual".

The management executive letters have been extensively circulated within the NHS in Scotland.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the advice to be issued in April to health boards and trusts by the NHS national working group on the market testing of information technology services will be advisory or mandatory; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 March 1992]: As part of the market testing of computer services, a formal procurement exercise is underway involving three potential commercial suppliers and an in-house bid. The customers have, of course, been involved in the procurement process. Before best and final offers are invited from suppliers who have demonstrated their ability to meet NHS in Scotland requirements, health boards and trusts will state, on an individual basis, the services they require from the successful supplier. On receipt of best and final offers the national working group will evaluate the offers and recommend a winning supplier for each area. Health boards and NHS trusts will sign individual contract documents with the successful supplier for the services they have specified. It will be for each health board and NHS trust to decide whether it will sign the contract documents.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the membership of the NHS national working group on the market testing of information technology services:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 March 1995]: The membership of the NHS working group on computer services is as follows:

Mr. L. E. Peterken	Chairman	Director of Special Projects
Mr. R. Calderwood	Chief Executive	Southern General NHS Trust
Miss L. Barrie	General Manager	Tayside Health Board
Mr. J. Hudson	Director of Finance	Tayside Health Board
Mr. I. C. Smith	General Manager	Argyll and Clyde Health Board
Mr. F. Gibb	Acting General Manager	Common Services Agency
Mr. D. Wright	Director of Acute Care Purchasing	Highland Health Board
Mr. J. Owens	Chief Executive	Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh NHS Trust
Mr. M. Ord	Chief Executive	Fife Health Care NHS Trust
Mr. C. Knox	Head of Computing and IT Strategy	Management Executive
Mr. D. Hogg	Branch Head	Management Executive

National working group meetings are also attended by the chairman and project managers for each of the three package areas as follows:

North/North East
Chairman	Mr. R. Fletcher—Chief Executive	Angus NHS Trust
Project Manager	Mrs. R. Jack—IS Director	Grampian Health Board
	Mr. M. Murray	Grampian Health Board
West
Chairman	Mr. K. Brewer—Chief Executive	Renfrewshire Healthcare NHS Trust
Project Manager	Mr. W. Hart	Greater Glasgow Health Board
Central
Chairman	Mr. K. Thomson—Chief Executive	Law Hospital NHS Trust
Project Manager	Mr. M. Cook	Lothian Health Board

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance has been issued centrally to health boards and trusts in respect of market testing of NHS information technology services and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 March 1995]: The fundamental guidance to health boards and trusts on market testing is contained in the NHS circular GEN(1993)13 "Market Testing in the NHS".

In the course of market testing of the NHS computer services, the national working group on computer services has ensured that health boards and NHS trusts have been kept up to date with the progress of the exercise, the actions required of boards and trusts and the issues which have arisen.

Advice has been available to the NHS in Scotland through the central legal office on contractual matters and from the CCTA on procurement issues. The procurement is being conducted in accordance with EC procurement regulations.

Guidance to health boards and trusts has also been directed through local implementation groups for each of the three package areas—north/north-east, west and central—under which the service requirements of each individual board and trust have been co-ordinated and discussions and negotiations with potential suppliers have been held.

Breast Screening

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to ensure that the national breast screening service in Scotland carries out a regular audit of systems it uses for patient recall and other patient centre activities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 March 1995]: The national Scottish breast screening programme information system is run at local offices but nationally maintained, supported and developed in line with recognised NHS information technology standards.

Audit is a fundamental element of systems management and development and is undertaken regularly on the SBSP information system.

In 1992–93, a full external review of the system was commissioned by the SBSP. It was confirmed that the system was operating satisfactorily and all additional recommended enhancements have been put in place.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date Ministers were informed that a mistake had been made at Dundee royal infirmary in the patient recall system of the national breast screening service, in respect of the records of women who had used that service; and when a decision was taken by Ministers not to carry through a national check of the records of all the women who had used the service in Scotland since 1989.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 March 1995]: Ministers were informed of the procedural error which had occurred at the Dundee breast screening centre based at Dundee royal infirmary, on 2 December 1994. Ministers were kept informed about the action taken to check the records of all the women who had attended the Dundee centre since it opened in December 1989. Professional and medical advice was taken at all stages and, in particular, on the need to preserve patient confidentiality.

The other six Scottish breast screening centres were asked to check their fail-safe procedures immediately and confirmed that they were fully operational in line with the tight standards set by the Scottish breast screening programme to minimise the risk of error. In addition, a check of all the interval cancers—that is, cancers which occur in the three-yearly interval between screenings—identified in the SBSP was instituted to ensure that no other cancers had been diagnosed following such a procedural error. This was the case.

The Scottish breast screening programme decided that the scale of any problem should be fully assessed before taking any action which would cause public alarm. The Dundee record review showed a rate of procedural errors which was 1.1 in 10,000 screenings. Against that background and the action which had already been taken to verify fail-safe procedures and check interval cancers, SBSP professionals considered that they should undertake a managed review of all Scottish records without causing disruption to the screening programme.

That recommendation was made to Ministers on 2 March 1995. They agreed immediately that, in the light of public concern, a review exercise should commence in the other six Scottish breast screening centres to offer full reassurance to women.

Disabled Employees

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the percentage of disabled people directly employed by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 6 March 1995]: At 1 July 1994, 1.4 per cent. of non-industrial staff within the Scottish Office core and its executive agencies other than the Scottish Prison Service were registered disabled. Central personnel records indicated that a further 0.2 per cent. of staff were disabled, although not registered.

At that time, 0.05 per cent. of non-industrial staff in the Scottish Prison Service were registered disabled.

In 1993, the Scottish Office and its agencies—excluding the Scottish Prison Service other than headquarters administration staff—together with its associated departments of General Register Office for Scotland and Scottish Records Office, undertook a survey of disability and long-term health conditions in the workplace. Some 1.7 per cent. of staff identified themselves as registered disabled. Moreover, a total of 5 per cent. of staff indicated that they were affected "a great deal" or "to some extent" by some form of disability or long-term health condition.

DEFENCE

Royal Marines Reserve

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his plans for the future of the Royal Marines Reserve.

Mr. Soames: The size of the Royal Marines Reserve has been examined to determine whether there should be some adjustment in the light of the current strategic environment. We have concluded that there should be no major reduction in strength. We continue to look at the roles of the Royal Marines Reserve to ensure the best utilisation of their many skills.

Medals (Second World War Veterans)

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he proposes to take to expedite the issue of medals to second world war veterans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: My Department's medal offices have already taken measures to expedite the issue of awards and medals to those who served in the second world war. Additional staff have been allocated to the task of assessing claims for medals and overtime is being worked on a regular basis to reduce the backlog. We do not believe that it would be helpful to recruit new staff for assessment work as the task of training and supervising them would divert existing staff from the work in hand and would lead to further delays. Given the number of claims received and the time-consuming and exacting nature of assessing entitlements, medals for second world war veterans are being issued as quickly as possible.

Military Vehicles

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many unscheduled stops there have been involving truck cargo heavy duty mark II vehicles since January 1994; and if he will provide a breakdown of the circumstances which resulted in these incidents.

Mr. Soames: Between January 1994 and 13 March 1995, there were four occasions on which truck cargo heavy duty mark II vehicles were obliged to make unscheduled stops to deal with technical problems. The circumstances are set out in the table.

TCHD Mk 2 operational convoy unscheduled stops (29 January 1994 to 13 March 1995)

				Cause
Serial number	Date	Location	Fault	Quality	Design	Rectification	Delay time
1	6 June 1994	M1, Tibshelf near Mansfield	Knocking sound from tractor unit	—	—	Precautionary stop, no fault found.	33 minutes
2	7 June 1994	A696, south of Otterburn	Air pressure warning buzzer sounded	—	—	Air pressure found satisfactory.	34 minutes
3	2 August 1994	A68, south east of Edinburgh	"Clonking" sound when turning	—	—	Precautionary stop, no fault found.	26 minutes
4	21 September 1994	A696, near Ponteland	Discharge from sump oil connecting pipe	—	—	Tractor unit changed.	[1] 1 hour 10 minutes

Note:
[1]The fault developed shortly after departure. After replacement of the spare tractor unit the convoy returned to await arrival of a substitute spare unit. Movement therefore suspended for 24 hours.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total cost of maintaining and operating convoys of truck cargo heavy duty mark II vehicles and their escort in (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94 and (c) 1994–95.

Mr. Soames: The truck cargo heavy duty mark II entered operational service in September 1992. In 1992–93 the cost of operating the convoys—including their MOD escorts—and maintaining the vehicles was about £800,000; in 1993–94, £1,200,000; and to date in 1994–95, £950,000.

United States Bases

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United States bases and facilities were located in the United Kingdom in (a) 1985, (b) 1989 and (c) 1992; and how many such bases and facilities there are at present.

Mr. Soames: The number of United States bases and facilities in the United Kingdom at the end of each years in question was 75, 73 and 54 respectively. At present, there are 44 United States bases and facilities in the United Kingdom.

European Armaments Agency

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy concerning the European Armaments Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: My Department is playing a full part in discussions in the western European armaments group on the concept of a European armaments agency. Our support for the establishment of an agency would be subject to its adding value to existing arrangements. Initially, an agency would be concerned with co-operative activities on behalf of member nations; the conditions do not exist for an agency to undertake the full range of procurement activities.

European Defence Market

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications of article 223 of the treaty of Rome for the development of a common European defence market.

Mr. Freeman: The United Kingdom has been working in the western European armaments group towards the liberalisation of the European defence equipment market. The existence of article 223 of the treaty of Rome does not prevent nations from agreeing to an open defence equipment market.

Procurement Executive

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when and by whom the decision was taken to site the Procurement Executive at Abbey Wood, Bristol; how many employees will work there; what is the estimated value of Abbey Wood; and how much (a) has been and (b) will be spent on the site to provide suitable accommodation.

Mr. Freeman: The Government's decision to site the Procurement Executive headquarters at Abbey Wood was announced in November 1991. Current plans envisage that some 4,300 PE staff, together with a further 600 PE-related project support and integrated logistics systems personnel, will work at Abbey Wood. Consideration is being given to accommodating additional staff at Abbey Wood to allow further rationalisation of MOD property holdings.

The project is estimated to yield some £40 million in direct annual departmental running cost savings and will enable annual PE staff reductions of some £35 million which the PE was already committed to prior to the defence costs study.

The defence costs study reconfirmed that the project represented good value for money and would support additional annual savings worth a further £30 million by taking advantage of the benefit of the new working environment at Abbey Wood, improved working practices, and a more streamlined organisation.

The estimated cost of the Abbey Wood development, inclusive of site acquisition, construction, fitting out, professional works management fees and VAT, is £254,136 million at 1993 prices of which some £134,6 million, inclusive of VAT, has been spent to date. The project remains within budget.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the estimated total cost of the new Procurement Executive headquarters at Abbey Wood in Bristol;

(2) how many people will be employed at the Procurement Executive headquarters based at Abbey Wood in Bristol;

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I have given to the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) today.

Western European Union

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he is considering to enhance Britain's ability to partake in future Western European Union military operations.

Mr. Soames: The Government have suggested a number of areas in which the WEU will need to develop its ability to mount effective European-led missions, and which will in turn enhance the United Kingdom's ability to partake in such operations. These were set out in the "Memorandum on the United Kingdom Government's approach to the treatment of European Defence Issues at the 1996 Inter-governmental Conference" that has recently been placed in the Library of the House. The memorandum explains that a key element will be the successful implementation of the combined joint task force initiative, launched at the 1994 NATO summit, whereby NATO can make available separable but not separate elements of its command structure for European-led missions. We believe that there is also a need to strengthen the WEU's planning capabilities and to put in place other measures to ensure that the WEU has the necessary capacity to organise, mount and control operations. These measures include development of practical arrangements such as a situation centre and improved intelligence handling capabilities. The Government have indicated their intention to make a significant contribution to this, including making available relevant national expertise.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the types of military operations in which the Western European Union should be able to participate.

Mr. Soames: Our proposals on these matters have been set out in the "Memorandum on the United Kingdom's approach to the treatment of European Defence Issues at the 1996 Inter-governmental Conference", copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House. Under this approach, the Government believe that defence of the territory of NATO member states should remain a matter for NATO, in accordance with article 5 of the Washington treaty. In this context, the role of the Western European Union should be to act as a more effective European pillar of the alliance. But, in the new strategic environment, we believe that military forces are more likely to be used for: crisis management combat operations; peacekeeping tasks, including embargo or sanctions enforcement; and humanitarian and rescue missions. There may also be other tasks, such as the evacuation of our nationals from trouble spots, which are normally a national responsibility but where it may well make sense for European nations involved to act together. The Government believe that it is on these tasks that the WEU should concentrate without in any way claiming an exclusive prerogative to tackle particular operations.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of whether any proposed reforms of the Western European Union will require changes to: (a) the 1948 Brussels treaty and (b) the Maastricht treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: We assess that the Government's proposals for the handling of defence issues at the 1996 intergovernmental conference would not necessarily require amendment of either treaty.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the Western European Union's decision-making process and of how this process can be enhanced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The Government's proposals for the handling of defence issues at the 1996 intergovernmental conference include, as a major element, the creation of a new WEU body at head of state and Government level, involving full members of the WEU, association members and observers, with the aim of providing a reinforced decision-making process for matters related to European defence and for mobilising effective European military capabilities.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy concerning the use of Western European Union associate partners in future Western European Union military operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Our intention will be to seek to ensure that the arrangements that are set in hand for the development of the WEU allow for the voluntary participation of association partners in missions undertaken by the WEU, where appropriate.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy concerning European burden sharing in relation to future developments in the Western European Union.

Mr. Soames: It is the Government's view that European members of NATO should develop arrangements in the defence and security field that will ensure that they are able, collectively, to shoulder more effectively their share of the burden of promoting security and stability on the European continent, on its periphery and beyond. The Government will also want to see arrangements put in place that ensure that the burden is shared equitably among European nations. The proposals that we have made to our partners, in the context of the review of defence matters at the 1996 intergovernmental conference, are designed to promote these aims, among others.

Temporary Contracts

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by his Department have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration for this year and each of the past five years, in each case specifying what percentage of the respective total workforce these employees constitute.

Mr. Freeman: The available figures requested are as follows:

Full time equivalent United Kingdom based civilian staff rounded to nearest hundred

	1 April 1990	1 April 1991	1 April 1992	1 April 1993	1 April 1994	1 January 1995

as a percentage of total agency staff	—	—	—	0.99	1.36	1.40

Note:
Figures marked as n/a are not available. The information has been held in a form which allows such analysis only since April 1993.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people he expects to employ in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which he is responsible on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration in the next three years, in each case specifying the number of employees who had previously been employed in a similar position on the same contract.

Mr. Freeman: The fact that casual staff are recruited only where there is a genuine management need for short-term assistance—for example to cover unexpected and unforeseen increases in work load—means that it is not possible to predict the demand for casual staff. My Department cannot, therefore, forecast numbers needed one or more years in advance. Casual appointments may not exceed two years, even in exceptional cases. If the staff requirement can be identified far enough in advance, or if it is likely to be of longer duration, then other recruitment action should be taken and staff should be employed on different terms of service.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for this year and each of the past five years, how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which his Department is responsible who have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration are re-employed in the same or similar position at a later date.

Mr. Freeman: The figures available for UK-based staff are as follows:

Leaving date in financial year	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
Staff employed more than once as casuals with a total of less than 51 weeks service	333	228	265
Casual staff employed more than once as casuals with a total of 51 weeks or more service	19	39	50

In no case were staff employed under these terms for two years or more. Information on the positions held by staff in each appointment is not available without a manual search of all the relevant personnel records.

Data for earlier years are not available in a form which would enable this analysis to be done except at disproportionate cost.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidance has been issued in respect of the recruitment and appointment of non-permanent employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by his Department.

Mr. Freeman: My Department and its executive agencies issue general guidance to managers and specific guidance to recruitment authorities on the circumstances in which it may be appropriate to recruit casual staff. This guidance incorporates the principles of the civil service management code, and emphasises that casual staff should be appointed only where there is management requirement for short-term assistance. Casual staff should not be recruited if the requirement is likely to be longer term.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what positions in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which his Department is responsible are filled by employees who are employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration.

Mr. Freeman: Information about individual posts and individual lengths of contract held by casual staff is held manually and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Details of casual staff in my Department and its agencies categorised by broad occupational groups, showing those who have served fewer than 51 weeks and those who have served 51 weeks or more are as follows:

Non-agency non-industrial casual staff with less than 51 weeks service as at March 1995

	Number
Admin and secretarial staff	1,066
Specialist staff	106
Medical staff	104
Students	131

Miscellaneous	0

Industrial casual staff including agencies

	Number
Industrial casual staff with less than 51 weeks service	1,171
Industrial casual staff with 51 weeks service or more	171

Records by agency for industrial staff are not held in the form requested and could be extracted only at disproportionate cost.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will publish the full terms of employment as specified to employees in his Department and all executive agencies for which he is responsible who are employed on a temporary contract of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration;

(2) if he will publish the full terms of employment as specified to employees in his Department and all executive agencies for which he is responsible who are employed on a temporary contract of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration.

Mr. Freeman: No distinction is made between casual staff employed for 51 weeks or less than 51 weeks. Casual staff are recruited to fill short-term appointments of up to one year—and, exceptionally, up to two years—in accordance with the civil service management code. These centrally prescribed principles and standards are reflected in departmental or agency rules. Letters of appointment state the terms and conditions of service for such staff as set out in departmental or agency manuals, but may also be amended to reflect particular departmental needs—for example, full or part-time appointment.

Remploy

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the cost of each contract that his Department has awarded to Remploy in each year since 1990.

Mr. Freeman: Costs of individual contracts awarded by the Ministry of Defence are commercial in Confidence. Therefore I am unable to provide the hon. Gentleman with the information he has requested. However, I can give the total annual cost of contracts awarded to Remploy for the period requested, and these are detailed below. The average number of contracts won by Remploy over the same period was 35 per year.

1990–91: 12.3 million
1991–92: 18.7 million
1992–93: 16.6 million
1993–94: 18.8 million
1994–95: 10.8 million

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Mining Subsidence

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to receive British Coal's sixth report on the administration of the coal mining subsidence damage repair and compensation scheme.

Mr. Page: I have now received this report from British Coal and have arranged for copies to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses today.

Emergency Services (Caller Identification)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what considerations he has given to introducing a statutory responsibility for British Telecom to extend caller line identification to the emergency services.

Mr. Ian Taylor: BT operators already provide the emergency services with information about callers, including caller identification where technically possible. BT is also working to provide a direct CLI service in London, where it has been requested by an emergency authority.

East Germany (Reconstruction)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the likely effect on United Kingdom trade in 1996, 1997 and 1998 of reconstruction in the former East Germany; and if he will make a statement on his assessment of the extent to which the United Kingdom will become less competitive than Germany.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Germany is the United Kingdom's largest export market. Over 1,000 British firms have subsidiaries or joint ventures there, and this country is among the leading investors in the new Länder.

Annual growth of 8 to 10 per cent. is expected in the new Länder over the next few years, and 2.5 to 3 per cent. in Germany as a whole. Britain's market share is on the increase, and there is no reason why this should not continue.

The Government have been active in developing trade promotion initiatives in key sectors of the new Länder which will help British companies, in the United Kingdom and in Germany, to capitalise on trade openings in 1995 and beyond.

Some of the newly established German plant in the new Länder is likely to be highly competitive but the prospects for UK firms are excellent. The gap in manufacturing productivity between this country and Germany has narrowed since 1979, and the Government remain committed to creating the right framework for improving industrial competitiveness. The United Kingdom's continuing ability to attract very significant inward investment is a testament to the competitiveness policies that the Government are pursuing.

Water and Sewerage Expenditure

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the cost of his Department's expenditure on water and sewerage in (a) the current year and (b) each of the three previous years.

Mr. Taylor: Within DTI, information on expenditure on water and sewerage is not held centrally. Expenditure in relation to DTI's London headquarters buildings was as follows:

Year	Cost £
1994–95	[1]44,055
1993–94	52,618
1992–93	65,595
1991–92	62,006

[1] To end of January.

EMPLOYMENT

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress has been made with the implementation of the jobseeker's allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The project to implement jobseeker's allowance, subject to parliamentary approval of the Jobseekers Bill, is on schedule for implementation in April 1996. Planning guidance has now been issued to the Employment Service and Benefits Agency field organisations. An external review of the project is under way and will report in early April.

World Conference on Women

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment who will represent the United Kingdom at the fourth UN world conference on women.

Miss Widdecombe: I am pleased to announce that key members of the delegation to represent the Government at the fourth UN world conference on women vote held in Peking from 4 to 15 September, have now been agreed. Three Ministers will be in attendance during the period of the conference: myself, my noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development, and my hon. Friend the Member for Tiverton (Mrs. Browning), the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and Government appointed co-chairman of the Women's National Commission.

They will be joined by Kamlesh Bahl, chairwoman of the Equal Opportunities Commission, Great Britain, Joan Smyth, chair and chief executive of the Equal Opportunities Commission, Northern Ireland, and Liz Bavidge, elected co-chair of the Women's National Commission. We also expect to include delegates from Hong Kong, Bermuda, the Turks and Caicos Islands, Montserrat and the British Virgin Islands, further representation from non-governmental organisations with expertise on women in development and officials from the relevant Government Departments to support the work of the delegation.

Employment Initiatives

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consideration he gives to regional differences when developing plans for employment initiatives; and what initiatives will be the subject of legislation in the near future.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department's initiatives are targeted primarily on those who need it most, particularly those who have been unemployed for some time. Other than provisions in the Jobseekers Bill, no legislation on initiatives is planned for the near future.

Productivity Increases

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the Government's policy on increases in productivity being rewarded by increases in pay; and what evidence he has of the extent to which that principle has been followed in the (a) manufacturing and (b) service industries.

Mr. Oppenheim: The extent to which increases in productivity are rewarded by increases in pay is a matter for organisations to decide in the light of their particular circumstances. However, productivity is one of many factors which need to be taken into account when making such decisions. The Employment Department does not collect data on how far productivity influences such decisions, but whereas both productivity and pay stagnated from 1974–1979, both productivity and real pay at all levels have risen sharply since 1979.

The Government, however, also believe that increases in pay need to be more than matched by improvements in productivity in order to free resources for investment, which in turn will feed through to greater competitiveness.

South Thames TEC

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment who is still owed money by the South Thames training and enterprise council; how much they are owed; and when they will be paid.

Mr. Paice: The total amount of money owing to individual contractors which submitted claims for payment for work carried out for South Thames training and enterprise council is a matter for the receiver.

Unemployed Students

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the hours of guided learning undertaken by a student (a) in the evening and (b) on Saturdays will count towards the new 16-hour limit for guided learning allowed to unemployed students who are required to be available for work; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: All hours that are classified as guided learning hours will count towards the threshold of 16 guided learning hours per week.

The Further Education Funding Council has introduced the definition of guided learning hours in place of the distinction between part and full-time courses. This reflects the fact that courses are increasingly delivered flexibly, to meet the needs of individuals. The Government's proposals for the rules under jobseeker's allowance are designed to accommodate this change, while ensuring that the same number of people will be able to benefit as do so now.

SCOTLAND

Permanent Secretaries

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which permanent secretaries have left his Department's employment in the last five years; and which public positions they have been appointed to subsequently.

Mr. Lang: There is only one permanent secretary at the Scottish Office and he has been in post for over five years.

Sheriffs

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes he proposes to introduce in the procedures for appointing sheriffs.

Mr. Lang: These procedures are kept under constant review. A number of improvements were introduced in the procedures adopted in a recently completed round of temporary shrieval appointments. Consideration is now being given to the further development of these procedures and their application to the appointment of permanent sheriffs. it is proposed that applications will be sought, by annual advertisement, for these appointments and that suitable candidates will be interviewed by a panel, whose membership will include lay representation. Consultation on the proposals will take place shortly and I shall arrange for copies of the consultation paper to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Further Education

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, when he proposes to publish his report on the discharge of his duties for further education in Scotland as required under section 1 of the Further and Higher Education (Scotland) Act 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I am pleased to say that the report entitled "Further Education in Scotland 1994: Report by the Secretary of State for Scotland" has been published today and has been laid before each House of Parliament. Copies are available in the Libraries of the House.

The report shows that good progress has been made in further education colleges in 1994. Members of the college boards of management and college staff continue to manage enthusiastically the changes and challenges arising from incorporation. The colleges have built on the success of the first year of incorporation and are working hard to continue to raise standards and increase efficiency.

Lobby Organisations

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if Ministers in his Department have on any occasion in the last seven days met representatives of (a) Messrs C. S. M. Parliamentary Consultants Ltd., (b) Dewe Rogerson Ltd., (c) Decision Makers Ltd., (d) G.J.W. Government Relations Ltd., (e) G.P.C., (f) G.J.W., (g) Ian Greer Associates Ltd., (h) Market Access Group, (i)

Politics International, (j) Westminster Communications Group, (k) Westminster Strategy, (l) Good Relations, (m) Rowland Sallingbury Casy, (n) Lowe Bell, (o) Profile Corporate and Political Relations and (p) Shandwick Consultants Ltd. and discussed issues relating to the clients of these companies.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 March 1995]: Neither I nor any of the Ministers in my Department had meetings with representatives of any of these organisations.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service and Serious Fraud Office

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects decisions to be announced regarding (a) the possible transfer to agency or private status of the Crown Prosecution Service and the Serious Fraud Office and (b) the possible merger of the fraud divisions of the Crown Prosecution Service with the Serious Fraud Office.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to him on 8 July, Official Report, column 337. The steering group on agency status has not yet concluded its work.

The consideration of merger group has reported its findings. The report is at present under consideration.

Decisions will be announced as soon as possible.

PRIME MINISTER

Leeds Central Infirmary

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Prime Minister what highly specialised form of treatment was available to Mr. Murray at Leeds Central infirmary.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has asked for an initial report on this matter from South Thames regional office in the near future. A report will be published as soon as possible thereafter, and any issues arising will be further investigated. It would be inappropriate for me to comment further.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Byers: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral Statement of 9 March, Official Report, columns 455–56, which companies provided the independent financial and legal advice to the Government on the question of whether to proceed with the sale of National Power and PowerGen; and when the advice was received.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 14 March 1995]: The Treasury took advice on the evening of Friday 3 March from its financial advisers, Barclays de Zoete Wedd Limited and Kleinwort Benson Limited and its legal adviser, Slaughter and May.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

50th Anniversary

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what expenditure will be incurred in the current financial year on the commemorations to mark the 50th anniversary of the end in Europe of the second world war.

Mr. Dorrell: The cost in 1994–95 of commemorations to mark the 50th anniversary of the end in Europe of world war II is expected to be £3,000,000. I announced on 17 January, Official Report, columns 424–25, that parliamentary approval for this new service would be sought in a supplementary estimate for the Department of National Heritage's film, tourism, sport and broadcasting vote, class XI, vote 5. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure of up to £3,000,000 will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund.

Temporary Contracts

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage for this year and each of the past three years how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which his Department is responsible who have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration are re-employed in the same or similar position at a later date.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 15 March 1995]: The information for the Department of National Heritage and its two agencies—the Royal Parks Agency and the Historic Royal Palaces Agency—is as follows:

Year	DNH		RPA		HRPA
	51 weeks	Less than 51 weeks	51 weeks	Less than 51 weeks	51 weeks	Less than 51 weeks
1990	—	—	—	—	Nil	19
1991	—	—	—	—	Nil	22
1992	—	—	—	—	Nil	52
1993	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil	62
1994	Nil	1	Nil	Nil	Nil	51
1995	Nil	1	Nil	Nil	Nil	58

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by his Department have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration for this year and each of the past three years, in each case specifying what percentage of the respective total work force these employees constitute.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 15 March 1995]: The Department of National Heritage was created in April 1992. It has two agencies—the Royal Parks Agency created in April 1993 and the Historic Royal Palaces Agency created in October 1989. The information requested is shown in the following table.

(a) Less than 51 weeks

Years	DNH		RPA		HRPA		Total
	Number of casuals	Percentage of total staff	Number of casuals	Percentage of total staff	Number of casuals	Percentage of total staff	Number of casuals	Percentage of total staff
1990	—	—	—	—	66	19.4 (340)	66	19.4 (340)
1991	—	—	—	—	66	18 (365)	66	18 (365)
1992	—	—	—	—	69	19.4 (355)	69	19.4 (355)
1993	1	0.3	—	—	127	33 (961.5)	128	13.3 (961.5)
1994	11	3.4	11	4.4	103.5	22 (1,059)	125.5	11.9 (1,059)
1995	3	0.8	13	4.6	48.5	10.3 (1,084.5)	65	6 (1,084.5)

b) 51 weeks Nil for all years

Explanatory note: These figures are based on staff in post returns for 1 April each year, except for 1995 where they are based on the most recent staff in post return—1 January. Figures in ( ) represent total staff in post for each year.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, how many people he expects to employ in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which he is responsible on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration in the next three years, in each case specifying the number of employees who had previously been employed in a similar position on the same contract.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 15 March 1995]: The information for the Department of National Heritage and its two agencies—the Royal Parks Agency and the Historic Royal Palaces Agency—is as follows.

The Department of National Heritage does not anticipate recruiting any staff on temporary contracts over the next three years.

The Royal Parks Agency expects to recruit two full-time staff and one part-time member of staff on temporary contracts of less than 51 weeks duration. The Historic Royal Palaces Agency expects to employ 53 members of staff on contracts of less than 51 weeks duration during 1995, 21 in 1996 and 22 in 1997. It is not possible to say, for any of these anticipated vacancies, whether previous temporary staff will fill the posts.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, what positions in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which his Department is responsible are filled by employees who are employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 15 March 1995]: The latest available information shows for DNH and its two agencies—the Royal Parks Agency and the Historic Royal Palaces Agency is as follows:

	Contracts of less than 51 weeks
DNH	Administrative assistant Administrative officer Personal secretary Statistical officer
RPA	Administrative officer Grooms
HRPA	Administrative assistant Administrative officer Warders Shop staff

No positions in the Department of National Heritage or its two agencies are filled by employees who are employed on temporary contracts of 51 weeks.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) if he will publish the full terms of employment as specified to employees in his Department and all executive agencies for which he is responsible who are employed on a temporary contract of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks duration;

(2) what guidance has been issued in respect of the recruitment and appointment of non-permanent employees in (i) in his Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by his Department.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 15 March 1995]: The Department and its agencies—the Royal Parks Agency and the Historic Royal Palaces Agency—have their own independent personnel units which produce separate recruitment and appointment documentation. The terms of employment are set out in letters of appointment and I have placed copies of these for the Department and each of its agencies in the Library of the House.

In the recruitment and appointment of casual employees the Department and its agencies are guided by the relevant civil service central policies. These policies are contained in the personnel management section of the civil service management code which sets down the principal recruitment rules for casual staff and is consistent with the provisions of the Civil Service Order in Council Regulations. I have placed copies of the relevant extracts of these documentations as annexes to the appointment letters in the Library of the House. My Department and its agencies also operate all recruitment within current employment legislation.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Government Information

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will specify what code of conduct applies to information on Government business supplied by Ministers to staff employed by them as House of Commons secretaries and researchers; and if such staff are governed by a code of conduct analogous to the Official Secrets Act for civil servants with respect to such business.

Mr. David Hunt: House of Commons secretaries and researchers are not employed by the Government and are not therefore subject to rules of conduct applying to the civil service. Like other citizens, they are subject to relevant provisions of the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent reports have been received concerning leakages of information concerning Government business from staff employed by Government Ministers as House of Commons secretaries and researchers.

Mr. David Hunt: None.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) how many requests for information have been made to Departments following the introduction of the open government code; how many of these requests have been (a) met and (b) refused; and in how many cases of requests, Departments have had to review refusals to release information;

(2) if he will give the current figures of charges made by individual Departments and agencies for information requested under the open government code;

(3) when the Government's review of the operation of the open government code will be published.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply today to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey). Copies of the Government's report on the implementation of the code of practice on access to Government information during 1994 are available in the Library of the House. Appendix 1 of the report gives figures for the numbers of code requests received by Departments in 1994, the numbers of requests refused in full or in part, and the numbers of internal reviews conducted by Departments. A schedule of departmental charging schemes for information requested under the code is included as appendix 4.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the operation of the code of practice on access to Government information during 1994.

Mr. David Hunt: I have today announced the publication of the Government's report on the operation of the code of practice during 1994, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Personal Records

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when legislation will be introduced to give effect to the commitment in the Open Government White Paper, Cm 2290 1993, to create a right of access to personal records and a right of access to health and safety information.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my answer to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 6 March, Official Report, column 15.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Turkey

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has recently made to the Turkish Government regarding (a) the killing of civilians, (b) the destruction of homes and villages and (c) general abuses of human rights.

Mr. David Davis: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs raised our concerns about human rights in Turkey with the Turkish Foreign Minister in London on 2 February. My right hon. Friend subsequently met the Turkish Prime Minister and Foreign Minister at the EU-Turkey Association Council on 6 March. They were left in no doubt of our human rights concerns and those or our European partners. We shall continue to take every opportunity, at ministerial and official level, to remind the Turks of the need for improvement in their human rights performance.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, what recent representations to the Turkish Government he has made regarding the activities of Turkish special intelligence—MIT—in Britain.

Mr. David Davis: None.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the numbers of Kurdish refugees from Turkey in northern Iraq; what contribution is being made towards UNHCR programmes in that area; if he will list the British non-governmental organisations which are involved in implementing the relief programmes; and what representations he has made to the Turkish authorities regarding their military activity against the civilian population in the border areas with northern Iraq.

Mr. David Davis: The following British registered non-governmental organisations are receiving assistance from ODA for helping with relief work among the Kurds: British Red Cross, Christian Aid, Kurdish Life Aid, Mines Advisory Group, Oxfam and Save the Children Fund.

We frequently make clear to the Turkish Government, at ministerial and official level, our view that the conflict in the south-east of Turkey must be settled within the rule of law and with due respect for human rights.

We are seeking the further information requested by the hon. Member. I shall write to him with this information as soon as it is obtained.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding the involvement of the Turkish Government in crimes of violence in London; what representations he has made to the Turkish authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Davis: We have made no representations to the Turkish Government relating to crimes of violence in London.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received that Turkish military aircraft have penetrated northern Iraq and bombed refugee camps; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Davis: We are not aware of any recent reports of Turkish military aircraft bombing refugee camps in northern Iraq. We have made clear to the Turkish Government our view that the conflict in the south-east of Turkey must be settled within the rule of law and with due respect for human rights.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 686, if he will provide details of the contract, firm, designate, costs and outcome of the arbitration case involving his Department and a consultancy.

Mr. Goodlad: Arbitration has not yet been completed. Because the arbitration process is confidential, it would be inappropriate for me to give details of the case at this stage.

Mr. Zia Rahman Farooqi

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs at which British post overseas Mr. Zia Rahman Farooqi, the leader of the Soldiers of God, based in Pakistan, was issued with a visa to visit the United Kingdom; if the application was referred to London; if the application was referred to the Foreign Secretary or ministerial colleagues in his Department or to the Home Office for a recommendation prior to the decision being taken on Mr. Farooqi's application; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Mr. Farooqi was last issued with a United Kingdom visa by our high commission at Islamabad in July 1994. He already held multiple entry visas for the United States and Australia and had been issued with UK visas in 1991 and 1992. At the time he appeared to meet the requirements of the immigration rules, so his application was not referred to London.

Kenya

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Government of Kenya concerning the arrest and imprisonment of opposition Member of Parliament, Mr. Njenge Mungai.

Mr. Baldry: We remain deeply concerned about such arrests. Our high commission has raised this issue at the highest level with the Kenyan Government.

North-West Atlantic Fisheries Dispute

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current fisheries dispute between the EU and Canada in the north-west Atlantic.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The dispute is about allocating the total allowable catch from Greenland halibut among the contracting parties in the North West Atlantic Fisheries Organisation—in particular the EU and Canada. The goal of all involved must be to conserve fish stocks so as to allow fishermen from both the EU and Canada a viable future. This requires proper conservation measures, including an equitable division of the agreed total allowable catch. It also requires strict enforcement to ensure that the rules are obeyed by all. We are pleased to hear that the Spanish vessel detained last week has been released. All concerned can now concentrate on resolving the wider issues through negotiation, in a way acceptable to the members of NAFO.

The UK has been using its position as a member of both the Commonwealth and the EU to promote solutions to the immediate difficulties and to contribute to an outcome in the longer term which is satisfactory to all. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs yesterday spoke to his Canadian and Spanish opposite numbers as part of those efforts. The way ahead must be through negotiations undertaken in a calm and co-operative spirit and by avoiding actions which might make a solution more difficult.

EDUCATION

School Toilet Facilities

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many and what percentage of (a) primary and (b) secondary school have outside toilets;

(2) how many and what percentage of schools fail to provide one toilet for every 20 pupils over five years old;

(3) how many and what percentage of schools do not have hot and cold running water in all hand basins for their toilet areas.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many and what percentage of (a) primary and (b) secondary schools have no suitable toilet facilities for disabled pupils.

Mr. Forth: This information is not yet available. Local Education Authorities and the Funding Agency for Schools are required to provide such data to the Secretary of State after 1 May and by 1 June 1995, and biennially thereafter.

School Budgets

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) primary, (b) secondary and (c) special schools overspent their budget in (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Non-statutory Services

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment she has made of the extent to which local education authorities are expanding in relation over the last two years non-statutory services at the expense of statutory education services; and if she will list the increase in expenditure on non-statutory services in each local education authority in the last two years.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information at LEA level on statutory and non-statutory spending is not available, as LEAs' returns of their expenditure do not distinguish between expenditure on pupils of statutory and non statutory school age.

Estimated outturn expenditure in 1994–95 by LEAs on under-fives, further education for adults, the youth service and discretionary awards total £1,964 million. Provisional outturn expenditure on these headings in 1993–94 was £1,858 million.

School Inspectors' Reports

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what recent representations she has received from parents and governors about the standards of reports published by school inspectors; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will make a statement on the publication of parent-friendly reports by school inspectors;

(3) what action she intends to take to ensure that teachers in schools in West Yorkshire have full confidence in inspectors working for the Office of Standards in Education; and if she will make a statement;

(4) what recent representations she has received on the standards of reports issued by school inspectors; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Department has received two letters about the standards of individual school reports in the last six months. Such letters are normally referred to Her Majesty's Chief Inspector as the independent Office for Standards in Education is responsible for monitoring the quality of inspection reports. Ofsted is also responsible for the employment of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools and for the training and monitoring of registered inspectors.

The content of inspection reports is similarly a matter for HMCI. The Government's intention is that reports should be rigorous, clear and easily understood by parents. HMCI has recently issued guidance to registered inspectors on making inspection report summaries more user friendly. He is also consulting on a revision to the framework for inspection and this includes taking the views of parents, teachers and others.

LEA Funding

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the average standard spending assessment for primary school pupils for local education authorities in England; and what is the average for local education authorities excluding the Isles of Scilly and inner London boroughs.

Mr. Robin Squire: The average amount per five to 10-year-old which local education authorities in England will receive in the primary sub-block of their education standard spending assessments for 1995–96 is £1,981. The comparable figure for local education authorities excluding the Isles of Scilly and inner London boroughs is £1,941.

The Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment has been made of the effect on children's education following the proposed reduction in funding for schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: The local government finance settlement for England for 1995–96 allows a 1.1 per cent. cash increase over the equivalent figure for 1994–95. The effect of the settlement will depend on decisions made by local education authorities and schools.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the net standard spending assessment for (a) a child of primary school age and (b) a child of secondary school age in Shropshire and in the London borough of Southwark for the financial year 1995–96.

Mr. Robin Squire: The standing spending assessment for a pupil of primary school age for the financial year 1995–96 in Shropshire is £1,862 and in Southwark £2,947. For a child of secondary school age, the figures are £2,482 for Shropshire, and £4,097 for Southwark. These differences arise from disparities in assessed education spending need and costs between different areas.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement on the standard spending assessment for Hereford and Worcester following the transfer of five schools to Birmingham from 1 April.

Mr. Robin Squire: The standard spending assessment for Hereford and Worcester reflects the transfer of five schools to Birmingham from 1 April.

London Borough of Havering

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, what representations she has received following the announcement of the education settlement for 1995–96 for the London borough of Havering.

Mr. Forth: We have received representations from the hon. Member and others about Havering's education standard spending assessment for 1995–96. The reduction results from a number of factors, including a below average increase in pupil numbers and other reductions in indicators of spending need.

School Buildings

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many schools had to close all or part of a school building because its condition posed a danger to staff and pupils in each of the last two years.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is not held centrally.

Solvent Abuse

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what provisions exist for education on the dangers and prevention of solvent abuse, and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The national curriculum, which all maintained schools must provide, requires that pupils are taught about the harmful effects of solvent abuse. My Department is providing £6 million of new grant to support teacher training and innovative projects concerned with the prevention of drug and solvent abuse. Following recent consultation, we will also issue shortly guidance on drug prevention and schools, together with guidance on teaching about drugs within the school curriculum and a digest of drug education teaching materials.

Branch Employment

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Eduction how many people were employed in the (a) grant-maintained schools branch, (b) further education branch, (c) teacher training branch and (d) higher education branch of her Department for each year since 1992–93; how many are forecast to work in each branch in 1995–96; what was the pay bill for each branch in each year since 1992–93; and what is the forecast pay bill in 1995–96.

Mr. Boswell: The distribution of responsibilities among branches within the Department was reorganised in 1994. No one branch is or has been solely responsible for grant-maintained schools: presently both school organisation branch and schools funding branch have, among their other duties, responsibility for such schools. Certain duties also fall to the Funding Agency for Schools. The further education branch and higher education branch also took their present form in 1994, each taking over some of the responsibilities of the former student affairs branch. Work on teacher training is part of the work of the teachers branch; significant responsibilities also rest with the teacher training agency. Figures are not therefore available in the form sought. The full-time equivalent staff employed in the five branches at 14 March 1995, forecast average staff numbers in 1995–96 and budgets for the two years are as follows:

	1994–95[1]		1995–96[2]
	Staff at 14 March 1995	£ million	Staff	£ million
School organisation branch	283	6.6	304	7.1
Schools funding branch	95	2.3	107	2.7
Further education branch	66	1.6	74	1.9
Higher education branch	79	2.0	78	2.0
Teachers branch	72	1.8	65	1.4

NORTHERN IRELAND

Government of Northern Ireland Act 1920

13. Mr. Heppel: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what changes he is proposing to the Government of Northern Ireland Act 1920.

Mr. Ancram: We have expressed a willingness, in the joint framework document, to amend or replace what little remains of the Government of Ireland Act as part of and contingent upon an agreed, comprehensive settlement, to emphasise the principle of consent. The precise detail of any changes would be a matter for discussion, negotiation and agreement with the political parties in future talks.

Framework Document

14. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in what circumstances a referendum will be held in Northern Ireland following the consideration of the framework document.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: We have undertaken to put to the electorate in Northern Ireland for approval in a referendum any agreed outcome of a three-stranded process of talks.

Explosives and Arms, Libya

15. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when was the last occasion, and in what year, Her Majesty's Government had reason to suppose that Libya-based sources supplied explosives and arms to organisations associated with the island of Ireland.

Sir John Wheeler: Substantial quantities of Libyan arms and explosives reached the Provisional IRA in the mid-1980s. Their recovery has been the objective of intensive searching by the Garda in the Republic of Ireland and by the police and Army in Northern Ireland. For operational reasons it would not be appropriate to give details of the amount of arms and explosives expended and recovered.

Political Training

16. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to provide political training, political, educational and exchange programmes for young people, politicians and community groups in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: The Government have no plans at present to introduce programmes on the scale and in the manner indicated by the question. The Government remain committed, however, to encouraging mutual understanding within the community wherever possible, and to assisting political and educational development among young people in Northern Ireland.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

17. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received regarding the future of the RUC since the cease-fire.

Sir John Wheeler: Since the cease-fires, Ministers and officials have continued to hold meetings with interested bodies and individuals, including district councils, political parties, community organisations and police staff associations, on a variety of issues related to the police service. Several letters have also been received, mostly from members of the public. A wide range of views has been expressed; a key note to emerge has been the welcome for debate on policing matters, especially on strengthening links between the community and the police. The Government welcome this debate and are keen to hear constructive comments and proposals.

Families against Intimidation and Terror

18. Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met representatives of Families against Intimidation and Terror.

Sir John Wheeler: The Secretary of State has had no formal meetings with representatives of FAIT. I last met representatives from this group in September 1993. Since then there have been no further meetings with Ministers but contact at official level has been maintained.

Firearms and Explosives

20. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what quantities of firearms and explosives have recently been voluntarily surrendered by Republican terrorist organisations in Northern Ireland.

Sir John Wheeler: No weaponry or equipment has been surrendered.

Inward Investment

21. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about inward investment into Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: The year 1993–94 was Northern Ireland's most successful from an inward investment standpoint. The Industrial Development Board secured 13 new inward investment projects, together representing an investment potential of £259 million and 2,309 jobs.

22. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of the level of inward investment to Northern Ireland since the cease-fire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The climate for investment in Northern Ireland from overseas has been greatly enhanced by a sustained absence of violence. Though it is too early to quantify the results in terms of new projects secured there are substantial indicators of heightened interest in Northern Ireland as an investment location—particularly in its primary target markets of the far east and the United States.

23. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he next expects to meet business leaders to discuss inward investment.

Mr. Ancram: My noble Friend Baroness Denton, the Minister for the Economy, is already heavily involved in meetings with potential inward investors. Her programme last week alone included a meeting with seventy Korean businessmen and the president of a potential Japanese investor. Baroness Denton will also meet business leaders during her visits to North America and Japan. Additionally, my noble Friend meets regularly with the business organisations in Northern Ireland.

Prisoners (Early Release)

24. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the practice with regard to the early release of prisoners.

Sir John Wheeler: There is no general practice of early release for prisoners. Those convicted by the courts and given sentences of imprisonment will serve their sentences according to the law. Individual prisoners may be released early by exercise of the royal prerogative, but this power will be used only in exceptional circumstances such as when a prisoner is terminally ill or has given assistance to the prison authorities or the police.

Trade and Economic Development

25. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to transfer responsibility for trade and economic development to a devolved assembly in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: "Frameworks for the Future" explains that, should there be agreement on the creation of new institutions in Northern Ireland, as part of a comprehensive political settlement, these will have legislative and executive responsibility over as wide a range of subject as in 1973, including those aspects of trade and economic development currently discharged by the Department of Economic Development.

Peace Process

26. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the peace process.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Members for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley), for Woolwich (Mr. Austin-Walker), and for Neath (Mr. Hain).

Trade Unions (Dialogue)

27. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what machinery exists for regular dialogue between Ministers and the trade unions representing workers in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: There is no formal machinery for dialogue between Ministers and the Northern Ireland trade unions. Ministers meet trade union leaders from time to time to discuss specific matters and are always ready to give favourable consideration to requests for such meetings.

Midwives

28. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on trade union rights for midwives in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Moss: The joint council machinery, which is responsible for the implementation of Whitley council agreements in Northern Ireland, is to be abolished from 1 April 1995. As in Great Britain, the application of such agreements will be left to management and staff interests at local level.

I have met staff representatives, including the professional officers of the Royal College of Midwives, and they have been given an assurance that their organisations will continue to be recognised by all employers as representing staff on joint council terms and conditions of service. This will include those staff transferring to health and social services trusts. Such staff have their joint council terms and conditions protected.

HSS trusts are, of course, completely free to establish their own arrangements for deciding the pay and conditions of service for new staff.

Terrorists

29. Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made on disarming terrorist organisations.

Sir John Wheeler: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan).

Police Reform

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to reform the police force in Northern Ireland.

Sir John Wheeler: The Government published proposals last year for the reform of the framework for policing in Northern Ireland. On 15 December 1994 my right hon. and learned Friend announced that work is in hand, in continued consultation, to develop ideas for legislation.

Drugs

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultations he intends to have with representatives of (a) the Housing Executive and (b) the Royal Ulster Constabulary to resolve the problem of Housing Executive dwellings being used by tenants alleged to be associated with supplying illegal substances.

Mr. Moss: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Housing Executive and the Chief Constable of the RUC. However, I have been assured that there is regular contact between the Housing Executive and the RUC and where evidence is available in relation to drugs offences, appropriate action will be taken under the criminal law to search premises, arrest offenders and bring them before the courts.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agriculture Support (Cost)

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total net cost to the Exchequer of support for agriculture and the common agricultural policy, after deducting any relevant refunds and grants received in each year since 1991; and what amount per week per family of four this net figure represents for each year since 1990–91.

Mr. Jack: Figures on total Exchequer expenditure on agricultural support within the United Kingdom, and associated receipts from the European Community budget, are available for each of the years in question in table 9.1 of the publication "Agriculture in the United Kingdom 1993", a copy of which has been deposited in the Library of the House. The 1994 version will be available shortly. In addition, the UK contributes to the cost of EC-funded agricultural support in other member states through its net contributions to the EC budget. A note entitled, "The Cost of the Common Agricultural Policy to Taxpayers and Consumers", produced by my Department, was deposited in the Library of the House on 9 March. This includes details of transfers from taxpayers to farmers both in the UK and in other member states under the common agricultural policy. For the purpose of expressing costs per person or per family of four, the population of the UK is assumed to be 58 million.

Fisheries Inspectors

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the ratio of his Department's fishery inspectors to United Kingdom registered fishing vessels.

Mr. Jack: The sea fisheries inspectorate of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food employs 81 fisheries inspectors, based mainly at the major fishing ports in England and Wales. At end 1994, there were 10,296 UK-registered fishing vessels, of which 5,332 vessels were administered by MAFF.

Fishing

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will recommend a moratorium on all fishing in specific areas during the different spawning seasons.

Mr. Jack: On the basis of scientific advice, the common fisheries policy of the EU already contains a number of provisions, which are modified when necessary, defining areas in which fishing for certain species is prohibited or restricted for some or all of the year, in order to conserve fish stocks.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will recommend to the European Commission that it funds an educational campaign across southern Europe to inform consumers about dangers to fish stocks from the purchase of under-sized fish.

Mr. Jack: I believe that the problem, which the hon. Member rightly identifies, about the danger to fish stocks when under-sized fish are marketed, is best addressed at the point at which the problem arises. That is, when the fish are caught. It is essential that the Commission ensures that the existing provisions of the EU's common fisheries policy, which are intended to protect fish stocks and prevent the landing of under-sized fish, are rigorously enforced in all member states. I made the point to the EU Fisheries Commissioner, Signora Emma Bonino, when I met her recently.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what Britian vessels are fishing in north Atlantic waters off Canada; what vessels fished there last year; and what catch is allocated to them and by whom.

Mr. Jack: No British vessels have fished in the regulatory area of the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Organisation last year or this. The United Kingdom had a quota of three tonnes of cod in area 3NO and 1,022 tonnes of cod in area 3M in 1994. For 1995, there is a moratorium for cod 3NO. The cod quota for area 3M is 1,022 tonnes. These quotas are allocated to the United Kingdom by the Fisheries Council in accordance with relative stability.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what support Her Majesty's Government are giving to Spain in its fishing dispute with Canada;

(2) what plans he has to disassociate Her Majesty's Government from Spanish overfishing and use of prescribed nets and gear in the north Atlantic; and if he will issue a statement on the representation he is making to Canada on its fishing dispute with Spain.

Mr. Jack: In the present dispute over Greenland halibut, we are taking all the steps we can to promote a reduction in tension, avoidance of confrontational action, and an early return to negotiations to result in an equitable settlement.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what EEC controls are applied to Spanish vessels fishing the north Atlantic outside Canadian waters; what inspection of mesh sizes, gear, catch quotas and discards is applied on those fishing grounds; what control is exercised of the port of landing; and what representations he is making to the Commission for more effective controls.

Mr. Jack: Rules of fisheries conservation and technical measures, including mesh size, minimum fish sizes, gear, catch quotas and discards, agreed in the North West Atlantic Fisheries Organization, are incorporated into EU law by the Fisheries Council. Fishing vessels may be inspected by the enforcement vessels of any NAFO contracting party operating the NAFO enforcement and controls scheme and apparent infringements are followed up by the flag state. There is an EU-funded enforcement vessel operating in the NAFO regulatory area. All Spanish and Portuguese vessels fishing in the area last year were inspected at sea on a number of occasions and all were checked at the port of landing. Any proposals for further enforcement and control measures would be considered at a meeting of the organisation.

Organochlorine

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what monitoring his Department carries out for organochlorine levels in sea birds or their eggs, and what range of chemicals has been found.

Mrs. Browning: The Department is not conducting monitoring of organochlorines in sea birds or their eggs. If any sea birds were suspected of being poisoned by OC or other pesticides, the incident would be investigated under the Department's wildlife incident investigation scheme.

Milk Quota Leasing System

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of whether the milk quota leasing system is working in the interests of the British farmer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 13 March 1995]: With the full support of the British dairy industry, the Government have sought to provide the most flexible conditions possible for producers to lease milk quota. The current leasing arrangements offer ready access to quota for those who do not have the resources to purchase quota outright or who want the flexibility to acquire extra quota as the need arises.

Marine Mammals Strandings Project

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many strandings of dolphins, porpoises or whales there have been in each year since 1990; what analysis was carried out of the carcasses; if the results are available; and how the carcasses were disposed of.

Sir Paul Beresford: I have been asked to reply.

The marine mammals strandings project has recorded strandings in England and Wales since 1990 and in Scotland since January 1992. The numbers of whales, dolphins and porpoises recorded as stranded were 144 in 1990; 191 in 1991; 418 in 1992; 320 in 1993; and 360 in 1994.

Analyses of carcasses include tissue and stomach samples for studying viruses and dietary constituents. Post mortems also address contaminant levels and incidences of bycatch in fishing nets. Results are periodically published in scientific journals, and basic strandings information is recorded on a national database.

Carcasses are disposed of by a variety of methods. The decision rests with the relevant local authority.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Data Protection

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to reviewing the Data Protection Act 1984 to permit the emergency services direct access to the databases of British Telecom and Mercury.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: There are no plans for direct access by the emergency services to the British Telecom, Mercury and other telephone operator databases other than to the publicly available directory services.

Mrs. Sadetha Hafejee

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his letter of 6 March, ref: IMP H322601/3 (S); and PO 01835/95 to the hon. Member for Bradford West, concerning Mrs. Sadetha Mohammed Amin Hafejee, when Mr. Hafejee replied to the letter, dated 20 February, from Leeds/Bradford airport; when and where Mr. Hafejee is to be interviewed; and when is a decision to be taken on Mrs. Hafejee's application to enter the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Mr. Hafejee replied on 28 February to Leeds/Bradford airport's letter of 20 February. As a result, an appointment has been made for Mr. Hafejee to be interviewed at 12 pm on Tuesday 21 March 1995 at the immigration office at North Shields. A record of the interview will be reported to the entry clearance officer in Bombay in the normal way. I understand from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs that a decision will then be made as soon as possible.

Mrs. Quereshian Bibi

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 26 January, Official Report, column 302, if Mr. Rahgzeb has been interviewed, to date, in relation to the application by Mrs. Quereshian Bibi—BV100/25109 and when a decision is to be taken on her application to enter the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Mr. Rahgzeb was interviewed on 5 February. A report of the interview was sent to the entry clearance officer Islamabad on 1 March. I understand from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs that a decision on the entry clearance application will be made as soon as possible.

Turkish Special Intelligence

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, what evidence he has received of links between Turkish Special Intelligence—MIT—and crimes of violence in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: It has been the long-standing practice not to comment on stories about the purported activities of domestic or overseas security and intelligence agencies.

Mr. Zia Rahman Farooqi

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will arrange for Mr. Zia Rahman Farooqi to be removed from the United Kingdom on the grounds that his presence is not conducive to public order; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when Mr. Zia Rahman Farooqi, leader of the Soldiers of God, based in Pakistan, entered the United Kingdom as a visitor; for how long his visa was endorsed; and how many representations he has received from individuals and organisation in the UK protesting at Mr. Farooqi's being allowed to visit the UK.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: It is not our normal practice to disclose information to third parties about an individual's immigration status. No representations have been received protesting against Mr. Farooqi's presence in the United Kingdom.

Turkish-occupied Northern Cyprus

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to seek the extradition of a Turkish citizen from Turkish-occupied northern Cyprus in connection with an attempted murder in London on 29 December 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The United Kingdom does not have any extradition arrangements with Turkish-occupied northern Cyprus.

Baglinton Airport (Policing)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost to date of the West Midlands police operation at Baglinton airport; and what is his policy on the payment for the costs of policing on private property.

Mr. Maclean: I understand that, as at 14 March, the total additional costs incurred in policing the demonstrations against live animal exports from Coventry airport were about £55,000.

Police officers are not being deployed on private property, and the question of charging does not arise since they are enforcing the peace and preventing breaches of the law.

Reconviction Rates

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the average rates of reconviction for (a) community (b) custodial sentences in each of the past 15 years.

Mr. Maclean: Comparisons between reconviction rates are affected by differences in age, sex, previous convictions and other characteristics of offenders receiving the sentences, as described in Home Office research study 136, "Explaining reconviction rates: a critical analysis". The decrease in the reconviction rate for those discharged from prison between 1987 and 1990 is partly due to the decrease in the number of young offenders discharged from prison, who have a relatively high reconviction rate.

The information is published annually in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales and Probation Statistics, England and Wales", copies of which are available in the Library. The available information is as follows:

Percentage of sentenced prisoners discharged from prison or of offenders commencing probation or community service who are reconvicted within two years of discharge or commencement by year of discharge or commencement

	Custody	Probation	Community Service
1976[1]	58	—	—

1981	58	—	—
1982	59	—	—
1983	56	—	—
1984	54	—	—
1985	52	—	—
1986	50	—	—
1987[2]	57	53	55
1988[2]	55	52	54
1989[2]	53	54	56
1990[2]	52	56	56

[1]Rates for those discharged from prison exclude those discharged from prison sentences of 3 months or less.

[2]Figures for 1987 and after are not directly comparable with those from earlier years due to a change in methodology. If the old methodology had been followed it is estimated that the reconviction rates would be about 5 to 6 percentage points lower.

Prison Service

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Prison Service staff have been used for training private prisoner custody officers; at what cost; and at whose cost, giving figures for each year since 1991 and for the latest date available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 16 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about how many prison service staff have been used for training private prisoner custody officers; at what cost; and at whose cost, giving figures for each year since 1991 and for the latest date available.

The information is outlined below:

1991: No training provided

1992: No training provided

1993: A total of 135 trainer days employing 9 individual trainers for varying lengths of time, all in control and restraint skills.

1994: A total of 234 trainer days employing 12 individual trainers for varying lengths of time, all in control and restraint skills.

1995: 4 prisoner custody officers attended courses run by the National Control & Restraint (Advanced) Training Centre alongside public sector colleagues.

The companies employing the officers trained were charged aggregate amounts of £40,500, £87,000 and £4,000 in 1993, 1994 and 1995 respectively for this training. These charges fully recovered the costs incurred.

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost of his Department's expenditure on water and sewerage in (a) the current year and (b) each of the three previous years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Estimated expenditure on water and sewerage in the current financial year is about £8.3 million. Complete details of expenditure on these services in earlier years are not available.

Young Offenders

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many 15-years-olds have (a) been cautioned and (b) been found guilty of any offence in each year since 1980.

Mr. Maclean: Information on the number of 15-year-olds cautioned and found guilty is published in the annual Command Paper "Criminal Statistics England and Wales". Table 5.21 of the 1985 edition, table 5.23 of the 1991 edition and table 5.25 of the 1993 edition refer to it. Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

The 1994 data will not be available until the autumn.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many 15-year-olds have been sentenced to immediate custody on their first conviction in each year since 1990; and for which offence types.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not collected routinely. A special study of a sample of those convicted of indictable offences in 1991 revealed that of 319 15-year-olds in the sample, three, 1 per cent. were sentenced to immediate custody on their first conviction for an indictable offence.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the disposals given to (a) 15-year-old boys and (b) 15-year-old girls by the youth, magistrates and Crown courts in each year since 1990.

Mr. Maclean: The information is given in the following table.

The 1994 data will not be available until the autumn.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, what was the length of immediate custody to which 15-year-old boys and girls were sentenced by (a) magistrates courts and (b) Crown courts in each year since 1985 broken down by the type of offence.

Mr. Maclean: As the information for 1985 to 1993 is given in a large number of tables, I shall place them in the Library.

The 1994 data will not be available until the autumn.

Prisons (Drug and Alcohol Programmes)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what drug or alcohol programmes are available in prisons; and what percentage of prisons have each type of programme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 16 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about what drug or alcohol programmes are available; and what percentage of prisons have each type of programme.

All prisons within England and Wales provide prisoners with access to education, treatment and counselling services for substance misuse via the prison health care centre, the probation service or outside agencies and visiting self help groups such as Alcoholics Anonymous and Narcotics Anonymous. A survey in December 1994 of 130 prisons found that 119 prisons provide some form of additional treatment programme. Some but not all of these facilities are already used by both alcohol and drug misusers.

The main types of treatment programme currently on offer are one-to-one counselling, group therapy and intensive treatment programmes such as therapeutic communities or the Minnesota 12-Step Programme. 78 per cent of prisons provide one-to-one counselling, 72 per cent provide group therapy and seven per cent provide intensive treatment programmes.

As part of the new Prison Service drugs strategy, expected to be published in the spring, all prison governors will be required to develop and implement local drug strategies which will form part of their contract with their area manager. The local strategies will include provision for education, treatment and throughcare for prisoners who misuse, have misused, or are at risk of misusing drugs.

Next month the Prison Service is launching the first phase of a new range of enhanced treatment services for drug misusers including: detoxification units; therapeutic communities; 3-month treatment programmes; intensive counselling and education services; and community-linked throughcare programmes. The effectiveness of the different programmes will be independently evaluated and the findings used to develop treatment programmes available to all prisoners according to their needs.

Prisons (Absconders)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners absconded from open prisons in each of the last three years; how many have been returned to prison; and how many of the absconders were convicted of drug offences.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Alan Williams, dated 16 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many prisoners absconded from open prisons in each of the last three years; how many have been returned to prison; and how many of the absconders were convicted of drug offences.

The information requested is given in the following table.

Year	Number of absconders	Number of absconders convicted of drug offences
1992	1,427	44
1993	1,384	41
1994	1,300	51

The number of absconders who are either recaptured by the police or who surrender to the prison is not recorded centrally.

Prisons

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the certified normal accommodation level, population and percentage overcrowding for each local prison for the latest date available; and how many assaults on (a) staff and (b) prisoners have occurred in each prison since 1st April 1994.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 16 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the certified normal accommodation, population and percentage overcrowding for each local prison for the latest date available; and how many assaults on (a) staff and (b) prisoners have occurred in each prison since 1st April 1994.

The information requested is given in the attached tables, copies of which have been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Identity Cards

Mr. Renton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider again the question of the introduction of compulsory identity cards as a means, inter alia, of helping those entitled to social security benefits by more effectively clamping down on fraudulent and bogus claims.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: My right hon. and learned Friend announced on 13 October 1994 that the Government intend to publish a Green Paper on identity cards in the spring. The Green Paper will set out the options for a national identity card scheme, including whether an identity card should be voluntary or compulsory and the possible benefits of identity cards—for example in helping to combat crimes involving fraud and impersonation. Any decision on the introduction of identity cards will be made in the light of the comments we receive on this consultative document.

Pakistani Mullahs (Visas)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visas have been issued since 1990 to Pakistani mullahs to preach in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: No information is available on Pakistanis citizens entering the United Kingdom as visitors who undertake preaching tours. However, since 1990, 130 visas have been issued to people applying in Islamabad, Pakistan to come to the United Kingdom for employment as ministers of religion.

Karens (Political Asylum)

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Karens have been granted political asylum since 1990.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Information on applications for asylum by Karens is not separately identified in the statistics. The available information relates to asylum applications by Burmese nationals and data on these, for the years 1992 to 1994, are given in the table. Figures for 1990 and 1991 are published in tables 4.1 and 4.2 respectively of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Asylum Statistics United Kingdom 1992", issue 19/93, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Decisions on applications for asylum[1] received from nationals of Burma in the United Kingdom, excluding dependents, 1992 to 1994.

number of principal applicants

	1992	1993	1994
Asylum applications[2]	20	15	20
Decisions[2,3]	45	20	5
Recognised as a refugee and granted asylum	*	5	0
Not recognised as a refugee but granted exceptional leave to remain[4]	40	10	5
Refused[3]	*	5	*

[1]Provisional figures rounded to the nearest 5, with '*' = 1 or 2.

[2] Figures exclude information on applications made overseas.

[3]Decisions do not necessarily relate to applications made in the same year.

[4]Usually granted for a year in the first instance, subject then to further review.

'Refusals include those made after full consideration, refusals under para 180F for failure to provide evidence to support the asylum claim within a reasonable period, and refusals on the grounds that the applicant had arrived from a safe third country.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make an appropriate allowance on capping limits for 1996–97 for metropolitan fire and civil defence authorities which had already set their budget for 1995–96 before the capping limits were raised on 17 February.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Secretary of State will carefully consider this point when he comes to announce his preliminary capping criteria for 1996–97 later in the year.

Coastal Pollution

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the pupils of Canon Slade school, Bolton from whom he has received letters about pollution and the environment; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received copies of 17 letters from pupils of Canon Slade school which my hon. Friend sent him. The letters are about coastal pollution and a full reply will be sent shortly enclosing literature which we hope they will find interesting and informative.

The Government are concerned about coastal pollution and are committed to securing improvements to our coastal waters. The water industry's investment programme of some £2 billion is accomplishing a steady increase in the quality of our bathing waters—82 per cent. achieved the mandatory coliform standards of the bathing water directive last season. It is our firm intention that the programme should be completed as soon as practical constraints, such as planning procedures, permit. The bulk of the schemes will be complete by around the end of this year.

Dormice

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates have been made of the numbers and locations of the national population of dormice.

Sir Paul Beresford: The national population of dormice is estimated to be between 100,000 and 500,000. The dormouse is found in parts of England and Wales, with the strongest populations in the south of England. Counties with large populations include Cornwall, Devon, Somerset, Avon, Dorset, Hampshire, Isle of Wight, east and west Sussex, Kent, Gwent, Gloucestershire and Hereford and Worcester. Scattered populations exist in Wiltshire, Hertfordshire, Shropshire, the Glamorgans, Dyfed and Powys. Isolated populations occur in Cumbria, Northumberland, Clwyd and Gwynedd. The species is apparently absent from all other English counties.

Dead Livestock

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reports his Department has received in respect of dead livestock being washed up on the south coast of England in the last three years.

Sir Paul Beresford: No record can be traced of the receipt of any such reports by the Department of Environment or the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Overhead Powerlines

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what guidance his Department proposes to offer to regional electricity companies to lessen the impact of overhead powerlines; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what recent representations he has received on the impact of both health and visual matters on overhead powerlines, and if he will make a statement;

(3) what (a) code of practice and (b) other criteria have been established concerning the health and visual impact of overhead powerline as a result of planning inquiries; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what is the planning guidance to local planning authorities on planning applications for overhead powerlines; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: Responsibility for authorising overhead power lines above 20kv capacity rests with the President of the Board of Trade under the Electricity Act 1989. Guidance on this authorisation procedure, which requires consultations with local planning authorities, is published in Department of the Environment circular 14/90—Department of Energy circular 1/90—"Electricity Generating Stations and Overhead Lines". Proposals which may have a significant impact on the environment must be accompanied by an environmental statement. Each case is considered on its own merits. The President of the Board of Trade is under a duty to take environmental considerations into account in deciding whether to authorise a proposal.

Responsibility for advising on health impacts of power lines rests with the National Radiological Protection Board. I refer to my written answer of 3 November 1994, Official Report, column 1265.

Atmospheric Pollution

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list those district and metropolitan council areas in order of atmospheric pollution by (a) nitrogen dioxide, (b) sulphur dioxide and (c) particulates in the last five years in terms of annual average ground level concentrations in nanograms per cubic metre;

(2) if he will list those city and district council areas in order of atmospheric pollution by (a) nitrogen dioxide, (b) sulphur dioxide and (c) particulates in the last five years in terms of annual average ground level concentrations in nanograms per cubic metre.

Mr. Atkins: My Department makes measurements of NO_2, SO2 and particulates using non-automatic methods in collaboration with local authorities at over 1,200 sites for nitrogen dioxide and 257 sites for sulphur dioxide and black smoke. Data from the non-automatic sites are published in a number of reports, as listed, which are available from the National Environmental Technology centre, Culham, Abingdon, Oxfordshire.

Affordable Family Homes, London

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of any surplus or shortfall of affordable family homes in London in 1998; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My Department does not make regional assessments of possible surpluses or shortfalls of affordable housing.

Environment Council

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Environment Council on 9 March.

Mr. Atkins: I represented the United Kingdom at the Environment Council held in Brussels on 9 March. During the lengthy discussion on the proposed directive on integrated pollution prevention and control, I made it clear that the UK continued to welcome this proposal. I indicated that we wished to see a directive which achieved a high level of protection for the environment while providing a level playing field for industry in the UK. The subsequent debate assisted in resolving a number of issues but an overall agreement was not reached.

The Council agreed conclusions setting out the EU's position for the first conference of the parties to the UN climate change convention, building on those agreed at its meeting in December. The conclusions call for the negotiation of a protocol to the convention, setting out new targets and timetables beyond 2000 and for the agreement by all developed countries of policies and measures aimed at reducing emissions of greenhouse gases.

There was a useful initial discussion of the proposals for an ambient air quality framework directive, in which I indicated UK support for measures to tackle the problems of air pollution. Discussions also took place on the proposals for the ecological quality of water and on the revision of the Seveso directive.

The Council also agreed a paper setting out the current EU position on the preparations for the third meeting of the Commission on Sustainable Development.

British Waterways Board

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in implementing the recommendations in the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report published in January 1994 on the British Waterways Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I am pleased to report that the British Waterways Board is continuing to make good progress in implementing the Commission's recommendations. I am placing a copy of its second response in the Library of the House.

The board had already made significant progress in addressing the Commission's findings and recommendations by the time it submitted its first response in June 1994. Since then, the BWB has generally met its target for further action. A review of management systems has been completed which has identified new user requirements, including the need for new financial systems and improved management information, as well as offering opportunities for cost savings. In addition, a review of procurement procedures has also been completed. I particularly welcome the board's decision to undertake an employment review of the full range of its employment practices, taking into account the Commission's recommendations on staff appraisal and training.

The board has also taken action to promote its waterways through the launch of its "Canals Alive" marketing campaign and is undertaking more market research into demand for waterway recreation, including commissioning, jointly with the National Rivers Authority, research into demand for leisure boating.

I shall pay particular heed to the Commission's recommendations when considering with the board's strategy for the future and the criteria against which its performance should be assessed. I shall continue to take into account as appropriate the Commission's recommendations on development of BWB property, development control, the prospects for BWB securing contributions to its costs from those who benefit from its waterway activities but do not at present contribute, wayleaves and inland waterway commercial transport.

The board aims to produce its final report on the implementation of the Commission's recommendations by January 1997. I shall make a further statement when it is received.

Local Government Commission

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now announce the name of the new chairman of the Local Government Commission.

Mr. Gummer: I hope to announce the name of the new chairman shortly. In the meantime I am pleased to say that Professor Malcolm Grant, an existing member of the commission, has agreed to take on the chairmanship on an interim basis.

Countryside Stewardship Scheme

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent or is contracted to be spent in (a) England and (b) each county in England on the public access element of the countryside stewardship scheme for the period of the scheme's existence.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 13 March 1995]: Total sums spent, or contracted to be spent, on public access under countryside stewardship from 1992–93 to 2004–5 inclusive are given in the table.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Public Record Office

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list all the current charges made to members of the public for the use of the services provided by the Public Record Office at (a) Chancery lane and (b) Kew; what plans he has to increase these charges; what new charges he intends to introduce; and when he plans to make these increases or introduce new fees.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Public Record Office is best placed to provide an answer. I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from Sarah Tyacke to Mr. Paul Boateng, dated 13 March 1995:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTION: CHARGES FOR SERVICES

I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply to your question about charges made to members of the public for the use of services provided by the Public Record Office at Kew and Chancery Lane.

The current charges are listed in the Statutory Instrument made on 6 September 1994. I enclose a copy. It applies to Kew and to Chancery Lane.

A revised Statutory Instrument is under discussion and if approved by the Lord Chancellor it is intended that it will be made so as to come into force on 1 May 1995.

Court Users Survey

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the cost of his Department's survey last year of 4,000 court users; and when he intends to publish the results of that survey.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The cost of the survey is £141,438 including VAT. The report of the survey's findings will be published in April 1995.

Court Service Agency

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received from (a) hon. Members and (b) other people concerning the creation of the Court Service agency; and what percentage of these representations has been (i) in favour and (ii) not in favour of its creation.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have received a number of representations from hon. Members and others on this issue. Most have been concerned with practical considerations and have not addressed the question of the desirability or otherwise of agency status for the Court Service. In the process of working towards the launch of the Court Service as an agency, we have consulted the judiciary and a number of interested organisations including the Bar, the Law Society and the departmental trade union side. We have received responses from these organisations and have held discussions with some of them.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what the total cost of management consultancy and other professional consultancy fees will be for the launch of the Court Service agency.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The total amount of management consultancy and other professional consultancy fees incurred so far in the process of making the Court Service into an executive agency is £103,966. This amount has been spread over the two financial years 1993–94 and 1994–95. There may be a very small amount of further expenditure on consultancy fees in the remaining period leading up to the launch of the Court Service as an agency.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if there was an open and competitive selection process for the post of chief executive of the Court Service agency; and when and where this post was advertised.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Following the decision to proceed with agency status for the Court Service, the existing head of the court service was appointed in 1993 as chief executive designate, with the intention that he should continue in post to prepare the court service for establishment as an agency and to take the agency into its early stages. It is intended that the post will be subject to publicly advertised open competition not later than April 1997.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the current job title and salary of Michael Huebner; for how many years' duration is his current contract for the position of chief executive of the Court Service agency; and what his total salary will be for each of those years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: At present, Michael Huebner is grade 2 head of the court service and chief executive designate of the Court Service agency. His current salary is £73,750. On becoming chief executive of the Court Service agency, he will remain an established civil servant on the same terms and conditions of employment as at present. Any performance pay awards he receives will, however, take into account the achievement of the targets set for the Court Service. In common with other members of the proposed senior civil service, he will in due course be expected to sign a contract, as outlined in the White Paper on the civil service.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what provisions for performance-related pay on top of basic salary are contained in the contracts of (a) the chief executive and (b) other staff of the new Court Service Agency; what criteria will determine whether or not this additional pay is awarded; and what is the maximum amount each could claim under these provisions.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Staff of the Court Service, including the first chief executive, will remain as established civil servants and will not be employed within the agency on a contractual basis, with the proviso that it is intended that contracts will be introduced for the proposed senior civil service as announced in the White Paper "The Civil Service: Taking Forward Continuity and Change" (CM2748).

For details of the performance pay scheme for the chief executive, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I have given today to his question on the salary and contract of Michael Huebner. Performance pay awards to staff at grade 3 in the Court Service will continue to be made by the permanent secretary on the basis of performance against objectives and on advice from the chief executive, taking into account job weight and loading.

The pay of staff in the Court Service below grade 3 is currently determined in accordance with a number of national pay agreements negotiated by the Treasury. The provisions of these agreements are described in the "Civil Service Management Code", a copy of which is in the Library. Under the agreements staff receive pay increases in accordance with their personal performance, measured in terms of the overall "box mark" in their annual report. The maximum increases which may currently be awarded to individual staff in the main grades employed in the Court Service are as shown in the following table.

Grade	Box Mark	London £	National £

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the cost of the Court Service for the current financial year; what the cost has been for each of the last five financial years; and what the planned cost of the Court Service agency will be for each of the next three years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The figures requested are set out in the table.

1989–90	396,125
1990–91	453,970
1991–92	544,626

	£000
1992–93	586,199
1993–94	581,656
1994–95	[1]598,411
1995–96	[2]627,024
1996–97	[2]632,298
1997–98	[2]632,254

[1] Estimated.

[2] Planned.

The figures showing the planned expenditure from 1995–96 onwards cannot be compared directly with the current and previous year's expenditure. The Court Service becomes an executive agency on 3 April 1995, and a number of the central functions which are currently provided by the Department's headquarters will transfer on that date to the Court Service's headquarters.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the Department began paying rent on the new Court Service agency headquarters; what the yearly rent is; how long the lease is for; when Court Service staff are to move in; and what is the cost of furnishing and equipping the headquarters for its first two years of operation.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Court Service headquarters will be accommodated in an office building in which the Department has leased space since 1989; two additional floors were acquired in the building in 1994. However, as part of providing a separate headquarters for the Court Service, the Department has rationalised its departmental headquarters accommodation, which will result in savings.

The rental costs of the accommodation that will ultimately be allocated to the Court Service headquarters is approximately £2 million per annum. There are several leases under which the accommodation is held, all due to expire in 2003–4.

Some of the staff who will be working in the Court Service have already moved into their proposed headquarters accommodation; the remainder, currently accommodated in buildings elsewhere on the estate, will be moved into the building as part of the on-going rationalisation process over the remaining months of this year.

The cost of furnishing and equipping the Court Service headquarters is anticipated to be minimal as staff moving into the Court Service headquarters building have taken, and will continue to take, furniture and equipment with them from their previous locations.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what office rental and other administrative savings are being made by moving Court Service staff to new Court Service agency headquarters.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The setting up of a headquarters for the Court Service has taken place at the same time as a wider rationalisation of the Lord Chancellor's Department's headquarters estate. This is anticipated to provide estimated savings of £1.8 million in 1995–96. These savings include office rental and estimated administrative costs.

TRANSPORT

M62

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has had from the Greater Manchester passenger transport authority in regard to the proposed M62 relief road; what reply he is sending; what action he is taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: The chairman of the Greater Manchester passenger transport authority wrote to my hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 10 February requesting an early announcement about the future of the proposed M62 relief road.

The authority was advised that on 22 June 1994 my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) announced further studies of the M62 which are now in progress. The studies are expected to take about two years to complete. The authority is among those who have been invited to assist in the work.

Roads

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many priority road building schemes due to start this year he now expects will begin construction this year.

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Paul Tyler, dated 16 March 1995:

The Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State for Transport, how many priority 1 road building schemes due to start this year he now anticipates will begin construction this year.

The 'Trunk Roads in England 1994 Review' did not give a Priority to any of the schemes listed as agreed 1994/95 starts.

On 2 March 1995 Mr. Watts announced a revised target of 13 new starts this year. I expect to have awarded contracts for all these schemes by the end of the financial year.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much he estimates it will cost his Department this year to compensate house owners for the loss of value on their property due to road–building projects.

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Paul Tyler, dated 16 March 1995:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State for Transport, how much he anticipates it will cost his Department this year to compensate house owners for the loss of value on their property due to road building projects.

Compensation for loss of value is not separately identified from expenditure on acquisition of property in central budgets or expenditure returns. Therefore, I am sorry that this information cannot be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many of the targets for progress set for priority road building schemes planned this year will now be achieved on schedule

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Paul Tyler, dated 16 March 1995:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State for Transport, how many of the targets for progress set for Priority 1 road building schemes planned this year will now be achieved on schedule.

Mr. Watts announced on 2 March a revised set of milestones for the Agency. Of the 33 milestones set for Priority 1 schemes the Agency has already met 29 and expects to meet another one before the end of the financial year. The 3 remaining schemes have been delayed to accommodate further traffic appraisal.

Newbury Bypass

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) letters and (b) other forms of representation he has received since 1 January (i) in favour of and (ii) against the western route bypass for Newbury, Berkshire.

Mr. Watts: Since 1 January we have received some 230 letters and 2,400 pre-printed postcards supporting the western bypass route for Newbury. Most of these came from the local Newbury area. We have also received some 220 letters opposing the western bypass route for Newbury. About half of these came from outside the local area.

RAF Northolt

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to give RAF Northolt a subsidiary passenger role in relation to Heathrow; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: I have no such plans. We are considering responses to last year's consultation exercise on the scope for a civil enclave for business aviation within the existing infrastructure at Northolt, and hope to make a statement on that shortly.

Airline Operators

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions United Kingdom-registered airline operators have been (a) granted and (b) refused permission to operate aircraft registered in countries outside the European Union.

Mr. Norris: Between 1 January and 31 December 1994 a total of 40 applications were received for the use of non-EU registered aircraft by United Kingdom airlines. Eight were for Swedish or Norwegian-registered aircraft to which the EC third aviation package applied from August 1993. These figures do not include late, short-term substitutions for aircraft which had become unserviceable due to technical problems. With one exception, all these applications were granted.

Joint Aviation Requirements

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the legal implications of the joint aviation requirements which are now being promoted by the Civil Aviation Authority; and what assessment he has made of whether they should be adopted in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norris: Joint aviation requirements are complex technical requirements agreed by the joint aviation authorities. There are several draft JARs currently being developed by the JAA. The Civil Aviation Authority participates fully in the development of the JARs and makes a thorough assessment of their implications. The United Kingdom will not approve a JAR unless the CAA is satisfied that it would enable the UK to maintain its very high level of aviation safety.

WALES

Civil Actions

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many civil actions for damages arising from alleged medical negligence were started against each NHS trust in Wales in (a) 1992 and (b) 1993 and (c) 1994.

Mr. Redwood: The information is not held centrally.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was paid out in damages by each NHS trust in Wales in (a) 1992, (b) 1993 and (c) 1994.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested is not readily available. I will write to the hon. Gentleman with the information as soon as possible. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what consultation he has had with the member at the European Commission responsible for regional development in relation to the calculation of European regional development fund receipts to the Welsh development agency in those financed years where no European regional development fund programme has yet been agreed;

(2) what consultation he has had with the European Commission in relation to the anticipation of European regional development fund receipts by the Welsh development agency; and what agreement he has reached as to the level of fund receipts anticipated in the agency's corporate plan; and

(3) what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Welsh development agency regarding the methods of estimating receipts from the European regional development fund to the agency in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98.

Mr. Redwood: None.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the incidence of breast cancer in Wales and the success rate of its treatment, relative to the rest of the United Kingdom; and what plans there are to introduce stem cell removal and replacement treatment after high dose chemotherapy, with a view to its establishment as a clinical treatment for breast cancer under the national health service.

Mr. Redwood: The incidence of breast cancer in Wales is above the average for England and Wales. Information on the success rate of treatment, either in Wales or in comparison with the rest of the United Kingdom, is not centrally held. The national breast screening programme, undertaken in Wales by Breast Test Wales, is enhancing the prognosis for women in the most vulnerable age group through early detection of the disease.

I am advised that high dose chemotherapy involving stem cell removal and replacement is a relatively new procedure. In some rarer tumours the technique is becoming well established but for the most common cancers, including breast cancer, treatment is advised only as part of a properly designed clinical trial.

Appointments

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, (1) if he will make a statement on the appointment of the chairmen of the University Hospital of Wales, Cardiff Royal Infirmary trust and the Cardiff community healthcare trust;

(2) what information he had in relation to the political party affiliation of the successful candidates for appointment as the chairmen of the University Hospital of Wales, Cardiff Royal Infirmary trust and the Cardiff community healthcare trust prior to their appointment; what account he took of it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Posts to chair the University Hospital of Wales and Cardiff Royal Group NHS trust and the Cardiff community healthcare NHS trust were advertised in the national and local press in December 1994. Both the successful candidates applied, along with over 40 others. A panel of officials chaired by the accounting officer for the NHS in Wales conducted a sift of applicants and recommended a shortlist of candidates to Ministers.

Candidates were interviewed before appointments were made. The Welsh Officer does not seek information about the political affiliations of candidates for public appointment, as it is not relevant.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for appointing a chairman to the vacant post of chairman of Bridgend and District NHS trust.

Mr. Redwood: I hope to make an announcement shortly.

Morriston Hospital

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his oral statement of 2 March, Official Report, column 1281, to the Morriston hospital cardiac surgery unit, what is his current estimate of capital expenditure on the unit during (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97.

Mr. Redwood: This is a matter for the Morriston NHS trust which has not yet determined the profile of capital expenditure.

Browning Ferris plc

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what factors he will take into account in considering the award of an operating licence to Browning Ferris plc in Newport; and when he expects to announce his decision.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend's principal concern is to establish whether the plant can be operated without pollution of water or danger to public health. In determining this, he will take account of all relevant factors. His decision will be announced as soon as possible.

Housing

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the United Nation's Target 2000 housing strategy; and if he will make a statement on how his Department is seeking to meet this target.

Mr. Redwood: The Welsh Federation of Housing referred to the target in a report which it discussed with me in January. The Government's aims and objectives for housing in Wales are set out in "An Agenda for Action", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what clawback arrangements will apply to the payment of a derelict land clearance grant for land reclamation and asbestos removal at the Blue Circle site at Rhoose; when Blue Circle Industries acquired the site; on what date it first enquired about derelict land clearance grants to (a) his Department and (b) the Welsh development agency; and what consultations there have been with the two relevant local authorities concerning the after-use of the site.

Mr. Redwood: The administration of the land reclamation programme in Wales is the responsibility of the Welsh development agency. I have, therefore, asked the chief executive of the agency to write to the hon. Member and will arrange for a copy of his letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

General Practitioner Lists

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients were removed from the treatment lists of their general practitioners in 1990 and in each of the succeeding years.

Mr. Richards: The information is not available centrally.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairmen of (a) the Welsh Health Common Services Authority and (b) the Cardiff Bay development corporation concerning the repayment of part of the grant paid to Grosvenor Waterside plc for the development of Crickhowell house in cognisance of (i) roof leaks, (ii) wall leaks, (iii) window leaks and (iv) basement leaks in Crickhowell house; and what notification his Department has had of negotiations in relation to such building defects.

Mr. Redwood: None. Any building defect is a matter for Grosvenor Waterside to resolve with the parties responsible for the design and construction of the building.

Crown Buildings

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the installation work being carried out in that section of the Crown Buildings, Cathays park occupied by the information technology branch of NCM Ltd. prior to its transfer to Llanishen.

Mr. Redwood: NCM is carrying out some preparatory work for its move from Cathays park.

Cash Limits

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for changes to the local authority capital—WO/LACAP—and Housing for Wales—WO/HFW—cash limits for his Department in the current financial year.

Mr. Redwood: The cash limit for WO/LACAP will be reduced by £5,437,000 from £490,215,000 to £484,778,000 and the cash limit for WO/HFW will be increased correspondingly by £5,437,000 from £120,740,000 to £126,177,000.

These changes reflect a transfer a provision from local authorities to Housing for Wales which enables housing associations to provide additional housing units.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Internal Fraud

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security pursuant to his answer of 22nd February, Official Report, column 245, if he will give details of the charges made against the 16 staff of his Department prosecuted for fraud and the outcome of the legal actions.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Since 1 April 1994, 34 staff have been prosecuted for matters relating to benefit fraud. The charges and results of the prosecutions are:

Case No.	Charges	Outcome
1	Theft and deception	Awaiting trial
2	Deception	Awaiting trial

Residential Care Homes

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) when he proposes to revise the fees available for retirement pensioners in residential homes to meet the actual costs of the accommodation and services provided;

(2) if he will identify his expectations of the liability of the state for retirement pensioners living in residential homes after their assets had run out in each year up to 2002;

(3) if he will estimate the additional cost to public funds at current rates, if his Department matched the real costs met by retirement pensioners in residential homes.

Mr. Roger Evans: I infer that these questions are about the higher levels of income support, which are available to people living in residential care and nursing homes on 31 March 1993 with preserved rights. These range between £194 and £262 for residential care homes and £290 and £325 for nursing homes with higher amounts available in London.

All income support limits are reviewed each year taking account of a variety of available information as well as representations from interested parties. Any extra help is targeted within available resources at specific groups where the need is greatest. All the limits will be increased in April. It has never been the intention to meet all fees, however high they may be set. That would be an unrealistic commitment.

We will continue to look carefully at these amounts each year as part of the uprating exercise. Any increases which result from that uprating will apply equally to people living in registered residential care homes on 31 March 1993 who were self-supporting at that time but who need to claim income support at a later date when their assets run out. Forecasts about the state's liability are not appropriate in these circumstances.

The estimated additional cost to public funds if the Department were the meet the full costs charged to people above pension age in residential care homes would be £56 million and for those in nursing homes £79 million. These figures are based on the February 1994 income support quarterly statistical inquiry, and reflect the limits in payment at that time. The figures assume that homeowners do not make further increases in charges.

Residential Care and Nursing Homes

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the aggregate spending of his Department on residential and nursing home care in the financial year 1992-93.

Mr. Roger Evans: The estimated annual expenditure for those in residential care and nursing homes in receipt of income support including other social security pensions and benefits taken into account, for 1992-93 was £3.05 billion.

Source:
Income Support Statistics Annual Enquiry, May 1992.

Expenditure (Water and Sewerage)

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the cost of his Department's expenditure on water and sewerage in (a) the current year and (b) each of the three previous years.

Mr. Hague: The information requested for the current year is available only for the period up to and including 31 January 1995.

Period	Departmental costs
1 April 1991 to 31 March 1992	2,788,734
1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993	3,081,113
1 April 1993 to 31 March 1994	2,852,609
1 April 1994 to 31 January 1995	2,409,267

Mullahs

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Secuirty if he will make a statement on the entitlement to benefits of Pakistani mullahs who have been issued visas to preach in mosques in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Roger Evans: Visiting mullahs are admitted to the United Kingdom under the immigration rules for up to six months as a visitor on the understanding that they do not become a charge on public funds. They are not entitled to income support, housing benefit or council tax benefit. They would not be entitled to contributory benefits because they would not have paid British national insurance contributions.

Benefits

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost and how many individuals would be successful in claims of (a) unemployment benefit, (b) sickness benefit and (c) invalidity benefit through qualification of sickness benefit if the pre-1988 contribution rules were re-established.

Mr. Hague [holding answer 3 March 1995]: The estimated cost and caseload increases of restoring the pre-1988 contribution conditions are given in the tables:

Table 1: Effects of restoration of pre-1988 National Insurance contribution conditions on claims to and cost of unemployment benefit

Gross cost (£million)	115
Net cost (£million)	20
Increase in unemployment benefit recipients	45,000

Notes:
The following assumptions have been made:
1. Costs have been rounded to the nearest £5 million and caseloads to the nearest 5,000.
2. Calculations are based on an unemployment benefit caseload of 500,000.
3. Calculations have been based on data taken from the 1992–93 National Insurance Recording System data-base, the 1993 Annual Statistical Enquiry and the 1990/91/92 Family Expenditure Surveys, updated to 1994–95 prices and benefit levels.
4. Some people who would satisfy revised contribution conditions may be disallowed, or disqualified for, unemployment benefit on other grounds (eg leaving work voluntarily, misconduct, compensation from an employer).
5. The figures are an under-estimate as no allowance can be made for people who sign as unemployed for the first time as s result of the change in contribution conditions.

Table 2: Effects of restoration of pre-1988 National Insurance contribution conditions on claims to and cost of incapacity benefit

Long-run gross cost (£ million)	500
Long-run net cost (£ million)	100
Estimated number of successful new Short-term (lower rate) Incapacity Benefit claims (per annum)	50,000
Long run increase in number of longer term Incapacity Benefit recipients	100,000

Notes:
1. "Longer term incapacity benefit" means those receiving short-term (higher rate) and long-term incapacity benefit.
The following assumptions have been made:
1. Costs have been rounded to the nearest £50 million and caseloads to the nearest 50,000.
2. Calculations have been based on data taken from the 1992–93 National Insurance Recording System data-base, and the 1993 Annual Statistical Enquiry, uprated to 1994–95 prices and benefit levels.
3. New entitlements come from either the current severe disablement allowance caseload or from those, registering as sick, who are less than 80 per cent. disabled and who currently have insufficient contributions.
4. Allowance has been made of the effect of the incapacity benefit changes and the expected effect of the new medical test on the long-term Incapacity Benefit caseload.
5. The new contribution conditions for the lower rate of short-term incapacity benefit are assumed to apply to long-term incapacity benefit. This means that all those who get lower rate of short-term incapacity benefit will move onto long-term incapacity benefit as long as their incapacity continues.
6. The figures are an under-estimate as no allowance can be made for people registering as sick for the first time as a result of the change in the contribution conditions.
7. These estimates are highly uncertain and should be treated with extreme caution.

Social Fund

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the net value after repayment of loans of the social fund budget for 1994–95; and what percentage this was of the net value of the social fund budget for 1988–89.

Mr. Roger Evans: The net value of the social fund discretionary budget in 1994–95 was £140 million. This is equivalent to 112 per cent. of the net social fund discretionary budget of £125 million for 1988–89.

The improved recovery of loans means that over this period the gross discretionary budget increased from £203 million to £368 million, an increase of over 81 per cent. The recycling of loans has allowed more people to get more help while protecting the public purse.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current total number of staff employed by the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) by Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive on 7 March 1995, Official Report, column 165.

Appointments

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he intends to appoint a new chairman of the social security advisory committee.

Mr. Lilley: The current chairman of the social security advisory committee, Mr. Michael Bett, will be giving up his post following his appointment as First Civil Service Commissioner. He has agreed to continue as chairman until a suitable successor is found. I shall be advertising the post nationally.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the statutory sick pay entitlement for individuals undertaking the Government's youth training scheme.

Mr. Hague: For trainees who have employed status and are paid wages by their employer while on youth training, entitlement to statutory sick pay is assessed on the same basis as for any other employee employed under a contract of service. The remaining trainees, who have non-employed or self-employed status and receive a training allowance, are excluded from entitlement to SSP.

Mortgage Interest

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants received sums for income support for mortgage interest under the deserted partners rule allowing interest on normally ineligible loans to be paid to the remaining partner, in 1994–95 and in each of the five preceeding years;

(2) what was the average expenditure on income support for mortgage interest for each claimant who received a payment of income support for mortgage interest under the deserted partner rule in 1994–95 and in each year of the five preceeding years;

(3) what was the total expenditure on income support for mortgage interest under the deserted partner rule in 1994–95 and in each of the five preceeding years; and what percentage of total expenditure on income support for mortgage interest it represented in each of these years.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information collected on income support mortgage interest paid to claimants does not differentiate the amounts paid for otherwise ineligible loans. The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Habitual Residence Test

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the methods by which his Department is monitoring the outcomes of the appeals made by British nationals who are refused income support because they have failed to satisfy the habitual residence test.

Mr. Roger Evans: The independent tribunal service identifies appeals according to the benefit involved at the appeals tribunal stage but does not categorise the reason for each appeal.

School Meals

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated cost of extending access to free school meals to children whose parents are in receipt of family credit.

Mr. Roger Evans: Around £120 million a year.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the back-to-work bonus under the jobseeker's allowance will affect claims for (a) family credit and (b) housing benefit.

Mr. Roger Evans: The back-to-work bonus will be treated as capital for the purposes of claims to income-related benefits. Bonus payments made to people who move from jobseeker's allowance or income support into work and claim family credit and housing benefit will be disregarded as capital for 52 weeks from date of receipt.

Where a claimant returns to income-based jobseekers allowance or income support after claiming the bonus, the payment will be taken fully into account in assessing the claimant's capital resources. Any person qualifying for these benefits will continue to be entitled to maximum help with rent as now.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the total cost to each local authority in England and Wales of making payments to housing benefit claimants under regulation 11 to the Housing Benefit General Regulations and in each year since 1988–89.

Mr. Roger Evans [holding answer 7 March 1995]: The available information has been placed in the Library.

Fraud

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many officials of his Department in each of the last 30 years have been prosecuted for making fraudulent benefit claims.

Mr. Arbuthnot [pursuant to his reply, 22 February 1995, c. 245]: I regret that the information provided was incorrect. The correct information is as follows.

The figures requested are not available for any of the past 30 years. However, the Benefits Agency recently conducted a special survey to ascertain how many staff were prosecuted for benefit fraud, including instrument of payment fraud and benefit fraud where the member of staff was involved in fraudulent benefit claims by others, since 1 April 1994. There were 34 such prosecutions.

HEALTH

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost of her Department's expenditure on water and sewerage in (a) the current year and (b) each of the three previous years.

Mr. Sackville: Following the splitting of the Department of Health from the Department of Social Security, expenditure on water and sewerage was not separately recorded from expenditure on other utilities. Information for 1991–92 is therefore not available. Expenditure by the Department in subsequent years is shown in the table. The figures include expenditure by the Department's agencies with the exception of the NHS Estates agency. The landlord of the building occupied by NHS Estates levies a single, fixed service charge, and does not separately bill the agency for water and sewerage.

1992–93: £334,920[1]
1993–94: £102,233
1994–95[2]: £66,120

[1] This figure included overpayment in respect of the London estate, as a result of which expenditure in subsequent years has been reduced.
[2] Year to date.

NHS Complaints

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she now expects to announce the Government's response to the review of the national health service complaints system.

Mr. Malone: Shortly.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of complaints about the NHS in each of the last three years.

Mr. Malone: The latest information available about numbers of complaints about the national health service are shown in the tables. The rise can be attributed to the increase of patient awareness and confidence due to the patients charter.

Family Health Services: Number of complaints investigated formally:
1991: 2,205
1992: 1,974
1993: 2,520

Hospital Complaints:
1990–91: 37,350
1991–92: 51,130
1992–93: 58,443*Notes:*
1. Information for 1994 for family health services will be available in the autumn, and will be contained in "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics", copies of which are routinely placed in the Library.
2. Information on hospital complaints for 1993–94 will be available shortly.

NHS Administration

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on any aspects of NHS administration that arise from the necessity to transfer an accident victim in Orpington to Leeds Royal infirmary.

Mr. Sackville: Responsibility for identifying health care needs rests with the local health authorities who, together with local providers, should ensure there is sufficient provision. The South Thames region of the national health service executive is conducting a full investigation.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has to indicate how widespread is the practice of consultants refusing to accept on to their waiting lists patients referred by GPs for non-urgent operations on the basis that this would extend the waiting lists beyond Government guidelines of acceptability.

Mr. Malone: None.

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the present waiting lists for hospitals in the borough of Barnet; and if she will estimate what she expects them to be in 1997.

Mr. Malone: Barnet General and Edgware General hospitals are both managed by the Wellhouse national health service trust. At 30 September 1994, there were 5,671 patients waiting for in-patient or day case treatment at the trust, of whom none were waiting more than 18 months. I expect further progress to be made in reducing waiting times at the trust.

Solvent Abuse

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths were caused by solvent abuse (a) in Lancashire, (b) in the north-west and (c) in the United Kingdom in respect of those aged (i) under 16, (ii) 16 to 24 and (iii) 25 years and over for the years 1990 to 1995.

Mr. Bowis: The information for the last five years available is shown in the table:

Age	1990	1991	1992
Lancashire
Under 16	2	0	2
25 + over	0	0	0
North West
Under 16	6	2	5
16–24	9	8	8
25 + over	1	3	1
United Kingdom
Under 16	47	44	19
16–24	98	55	45
25 + over	6	22	15
Total	151	121	79

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what price increase the London ambulance service is imposing for its emergency service; how much extra each London district health authority will have to pay; what choice they have about paying it; what considerations have caused the Government not to pay directly to rectify any problems in the emergency service in respect of the London ambulance service; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: It is for district health authorities in London and the London ambulance service to agree contracts.

Private Patients

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were admitted to NHS trust hospitals directly from (a) private hospitals and (b) private beds in NHS hospitals.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many finished consultant episodes there were on private patients in NHS facilities in each of the last four years (a) in total, (b) by region and (c) by district health authority.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested in total and by region is published in "Hospital Episodes Statistics, Volume 1"; copies for the four latest years of published data to 1992–93 are available in the Library. The corresponding information by district health authority is not available centrally.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the income from private patient activity in each NHS trust and directly managed unit for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the right hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 13 January, columns 267–68.

Statistics

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 24 February, Official Report, columns 355-56, if she will list the health statistics in the categories in the answer for the top five district health authorities or family health service authorities as appropriate.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

a) the five district health authorities with the highest crude birth rates in 1993 were:

	Crude birth rate[1]
East London and City	19.3
West Birmingham	18.2
East Birmingham	17.9
North Manchester	17.3
South East London	16.7
England	13.1

[1] Number of births per 1,000 population of all ages.

b) The five local authority areas in England with the highest number of notifications of tuberculosis in 1993 were:

	Notifications of tuberculosis
Birmingham	319
Bradford	164
Leicester	162
Newham	137
Brent	129

Data for district health authorities are not available.

c) The five district health authorities with the highest conception rates to women under 20 in England, 1991, were:

	Conception rates[1]
North Manchester	139.2
City and Hackney	113.9
West Lambeth	112.4
Tower Hamlets	111.4
East Birmingham	105.5
England	64.8

[1] All conceptions to women under 20 per 1,000 females aged 15-19.

d) Residents of three health districts accounted for 35 per cent. of all AIDS notifications in England and Wales in 1993. The districts were:

Kensington, Chelsea and Westminster
Camden and Islington
Ealing, Hammersmith and Hounslow

e) The six district health authorities in England with the highest rates of perinatal mortality[1] in 1993 were:

	Perinatal mortality rates
West Birmingham	14.9
South Birmingham	14.1
Central Manchester	13.8
Gateshead	13.3
South Manchester	13.2
Worcester and District	13.2

[1] Per 1,000 live and still births

Clinical Services

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which clinical and clinical support services which have been market tested are now (a) viewed as suitable for privatisation in the future or (b) available for tender to private contractors in 1994–95.

Mr. Sackville: None—contracts for clinical and clinical support services awarded as a result of a market testing exercise remain national health service contracts whether they are won in-house or by another public or private contractor. At the end of the relevant contract period, they will again be subject to fresh market testing under NHS arrangements.

We have been advised of local plans to market test some 20 clinical and clinical support services for 1994–95.

Long-Term Care

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many letters were received from individuals and from organisations concerning the draft guidance on long-term care of the elderly; and how many were opposed to the Department's proposals.

Mr. Bowis: A total of 182 responses were received from both individuals and organisations in response to our invitation for comments on the draft guidance on NHS responsibilities for meeting continuing health care needs. We considered very carefully the range of views expressed on the draft guidance in finalising HSG(95)8/LAC(95)5, which was issued on 23 February 1995. Copies are available in the Library. The guidance has been widely welcomed.

Hospital Staff (Recruitment)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money was spent by her Department, NHSE, district health authorities and trusts on recruiting hospital staff from overseas in each of the last three years.

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Market Testing

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost to her Department and the NHS of management consultants advising on market testing of (a) clinical and clinical support services and (b) other NHS services.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health and national health service summary accounts do not separately record expenditure on management consultancy advice for market testing issues.

Consultancy

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total cost estimated by the Audit Commission or her Department on management consultants by her Department, NHSE, regional Health authorities, district health authorities, family health service authorities, trusts and general practitioner fundholders in the last three years.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health and the national health service executive, however, have spent the following amounts from running costs on consultancy in the last three years;

1991–92: £24,258,000
1992–93: £18,399,000
1993–94: £15,933,037

Information is not available centrally about expenditure on management consultants by regional health authorities, district health authorities, family health services authorities, trust and general practitioner fundholders.

Operation Cancellations

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, how many operations were cancelled on the day of or after the date the patient was due to be admitted to hospital by regional health authority, district health authority and in total; and how many were not re-admitted with one month during each quarter since March 1993.

Mr. Malone: This information was not collected in the form requested until April 1994 when the national patients charter standard on cancelled operations was improved so that a patient whose operation is cancelled for non-medical reasons on the day of, or after, admission is admitted for treatment within one month of the first cancellation. The information from 1 April 1994 will be placed in the Library. Performance against this patients charter standard is being kept under review.

Waiting Times

Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each regional office the latest waiting times for each fundholder procedure for (a) patients funded by health authorities and (b) patients funded by general practitioner fundholders.

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

GP Fundholding

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what was the total amount of savings made by fundholders in the last three years.

Mr. Malone: I refer the right hon. Member to the replies I gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 24 November 1994, columns 321-22 and on 14 March, column 545.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, if she will give the aggregate level of savings by fundholding general practitioners in each family health service authority for the years 1991–92, 1992–93 and 1993–94.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what was the number of general practitioner fundholding practices and the amount of savings (a) by family health service authority and (b) in total for (i) 1991–92, (ii) 1992–93 and (iii) 1993–94.

Mr. Malone [holding answer 24 February 1995]: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) on 15 March for information on the number of general practitioner fundholding practices.

I refer the right hon. and hon. Members, to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 24 November 1994, columns 321-22 which provides information on fundholder savings at regional health authority level in 1991–92 and 1992–93. Information on fundholder savings at family health services authority level for these years is not available centrally.

The requested information on fundholder savings for 1993–94 will be placed in the Library. Nationally, retained savings in 1993–94 equalled £64.2 million, about 3.5 per cent. of budgets set—similar to the levels of efficiency savings made by fundholders in the first two years of the scheme.

Savings may be spent only after external audit of the fundholding account by the Audit Commission. Fundholder savings are held by FHSAs on behalf of the patients of fundholders and may be retained for up to four years. With the agreement of the regional health authority, savings may be used for the benefit of patients of the practice as outlined in the practice's annual business plan.

Special Hospitals

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what difficulties she has identified in integrating special hospitals into the internal market; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what are her plans regarding the status of special hospitals; what is the timescale for changes; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Barnsley, Central (Mr. Illsley) on 3 February, column 872.

Edgware

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what basis the present capitation formula for Edgware is calculated; and what evidence she has on whether the census figures for 1991 still represent the true picture in the case of the London borough of Barnet.

Mr. Sackville: For 1995–96, the modified national weighted capitation formula has been used to set targets for regional health authorities. It is for North Thames RHA to determine both its own sub-regional formula and how much funding is to be made available to its district health authorities. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir William Staveley, the chairman of North Thames regional health authority.

The population base used for revenue resource allocation is the mid-year sub-national population projections, that is mid-1995 for 1995–96. These are currently based on the 1991 census, however, they do take account of assumed rates of births, deaths and migration since 1991.

Minor Accident Treatment Service Units

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the minimum number of staff at any one time at a minor accident treatment service unit: what is the level of qualification of those staff; and whether it is part of their responsibility to diagnose acute medical conditions.

Mr. Sackville: These aspects are determined by individual hospital trusts according to local needs.

Grading Appeals

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will estimate how long it will take until all the outstanding nurses' grading appeals have been heard; and what steps she is taking to speed up the waiting times;

(2) how many nurses' grading appeals have not been heard; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: At 1 March 1995, there were just over 2,500 nurse grading appeals in England which were still unresolved. This is about half of the number outstanding a year ago. The Nursing and Midwifery Staffs Negotiating Council is operating an agreed appeals mechanism for clearing all outstanding appeals. The aim is for all appeals to be cleared by 31 December 1995.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses' grading appeals have been conducted since 1988; and how many were outstanding in each year since 1990.

Mr. Sackville: Since 1988, approximately 98,000 nurse clinical grading appeals have been heard. Information on the number of appeals outstanding at the end of the last three years is shown in the table. Comparable information is not available for 1990 and 1991.

Outstanding nurses and midwives clinical grading appeals (England)

Year ending	Number of appeals outstanding
31 December 1992	21,326
31 December 1993	4,819
31 December 1994	2,964

The aim is for all appeals to be cleared by 31 December 1995.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals she has to secure the financial future of NHS trusts against medical negligence claims; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: The management of medical negligence claims is a matter for individual trusts. At present, where a trust has, in any financial year, to pay claims with a total value in excess of 0.5 per cent. of its turnover, the trust may apply to the national health service executive for a loan in order to spread the cost of meeting the claims. A scheme is being developed under section 21 of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 for trusts to pool the financial liabilities arising out of clinical negligence. Discussions are continuing on the details of the proposals and if trusts are sufficiently supportive, the scheme is likely to be introduced in 1995–96 on a voluntary basis.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was paid out in damages by each NHS trust in England in (a) 1992, (b) 1993 and (c) 1994.

Mr. Malone: The information will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many civil actions for damages arising from alleged medical negligence were started against each NHS trust in England in (a) 1992, (b) 1993 and (c) 1994.

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all the current (a) chairs and (b) non-executive directors of each trust board by region, indicating the gender and occupation of each individual.

Mr. Malone [holding answer 23 February 1995]: The latest information available centrally will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those trust boards that currently have vacancies for chairs and non-executive directors; and whether the posts will be filled under the new appointments regime.

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him earlier, for details of vacancies on the boards of national health service trusts. All appointments made after 1 April will be in accordance with new guidelines on appointments procedures.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all the current (a) chairs and (b) non-executive directors of each trust board by region, indicating the gender and occupation of each individual.

Mr. Malone [holding answer 23 February 1995]: The latest information available centrally will be placed in the Library.

Immunisation and Cancer Screening

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made of the effect of the GP contract on immunisation and cancer screening services.

Mr. Malone: When the new general practitioner contract was introduced in 1990, 89 per cent. of GPs met targets for childhood immunisation and 86 per cent. for cancer screening. By April 1993, this had increased to 96 per cent. of GPs meeting childhood immunisation targets and 98 per cent. cancer screening targets. This shows clearly the positive impact of the GP contract on these services.

Chemotherapy

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what NHS trials are being conducted of treatment for breast cancer involving the removal and replacement of stem cells after high dose chemotherapy analogous to recent trials in the United States of America; and what plans she has to make this treatment available under the national health service.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 15 March, Official Report, column 549.

NHS Accountants

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many accountants were employed within all sections of the NHS in each of the last 15 years.

Mr. Malone: In the years 1991 to 1994, the years for which information is available, some 1,463, 1,701, 2,176 and 2,174 staff in the national health service were recorded as holding qualifications recognised by the consultative committee of the accounting bodies.

GP Lists

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 9 December, Official Report, column 400, when she will publish data for 1993 on patients removed from general practitioners' lists.

Mr. Malone: Information for all family health services authorities for 1993–94 is not yet available.

Pinderfields Hospital

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will seek reports regarding the future of Pinderfields hospital, Wakefield from (a) the chair of the Yorkshire and Northern health region, (b) the chair of the Wakefield health authority and (c) the chair of the Pinderfields trust; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for Wakefield Healthcare. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Brian Hayward, chairman of Wakefield Healthcare, for details.

Form FP10

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total estimated cost of printing and distributing the amended form FP10 required to be available as from 1 April next; what was the total cost of printing and distributing the forms that the amended FP10 will replace; and what representations she has received from professional bodies about the lack of consultation over the design and content of amended FP10 prior to printing.

Mr. Malone: No new costs have been incurred by introducing a revised print of form FP10. At about £1.38 million, the costs of printing and distributing the forms for 1995–96 are expected to be some 11 per cent. higher than in 1994–95 because of a rise in the cost of paper.

Representations have been received from the General Medical Services Committee of the British Medical Association and the Pharmaceutical Services Negotiating Committee with whom there are on-going consultations about the new arrangements.

NHS Supplies Contracts

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total value of contracts placed by the NHS Supplies Authority for cash registers and other accounting devices in each of the last 15 years.

Mr. Sackville: The National Health Service Supplies Authority was set up in October 1991, and has no specific contracts for cash registers or accounting devices.

Emergency Admissions

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the change in emergency admissions to hospital by regional health authority and in total for each quarter of 1993 and 1994.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 13 March 1995]: The table shows numbers of non-elective admissions in the general and acute specialties for each regional health authority in England and in total, using information collected by the national health service executive.

For England as a whole, the national proportion of non-elective admissions in relation to total admissions has remained at about 47 per cent. for all the period.

DEFENCE

Nerve Agents

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of research on the nerve agent GB at the nerve agent plant at Nancekuke, Cornwall; what quantities of nerve agent GB were used at this research; when the results of this research were shared with other countries; and under which defence agreements these results were exchanged.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 16 March 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what was the purpose of research on the nerve agent GB at the nerve agent plant at Nancekuke, Cornwall; what quantities of nerve agent GB were used at this research; when the results of this research were shared with other countries; and under which Defence Agreements these results were exchanged, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them.

3. The research work carried out at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Nancekuke involving the nerve agent GB focused on the following:

(a) Developing a specification for the materials used in the preparation process.

(b) To study the impurities and by-products found in the GB product.

(c) To examine alternative preparation processes and to compare the differences in the GB product.

(d) To study the amount of GB in the by-products from the preparations.

(e) To investigate the storage of GB.

(f) To study the corrosion properties of materials used in the construction of the GB preparation facility.

4. During the period 1951–1956 some 20 tonnes of GB were produced. Most of this was used in the storage studies and then subsequently destroyed.

5. After 1956 some research on the stability of GB continued until 1979 when the Chemical Defence Establishment at Nancekuke closed. The results of the research and studies into GB were part of the chemical and biological defence programme and would have formed part of the technical database drawn upon in collaboration with the United States, Australia and Canada under the Technical Cooperation Programme and its predecessors and with the United States and Canada under the Memorandum of Understanding on Chemical and Biological Defence.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 3 February, Official Report, column 888, what was the conclusion of the studies to find out if it was easier to produce the nerve agent GE than the nerve agent GB; in which years these studies were carried out; and when the results of these studies were exchanged with Canada and the United States of America under the tripartite conferences on toxicological warfare.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Ken Livingstone, dated 16 March 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking pursuant to his Answer of 3 February, Official Report, column 888, what was the conclusion of the studies to find out if it was easier to produce the nerve agent GE than the nerve agent GB; in which years these studies were carried out; and when the results of these studies were exchanged with Canada and the United States of America under the Tripartite Conferences on Toxicological Warfare, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them.

3. The studies to determine whether it was easier to produce the nerve agent GE rather than the nerve agent GB confirmed that this was not the case. Earlier studies had suggested that the phosphorus intermediate ethyl derivative was simpler to synthesise but when alternative processes were explored it was found that the primary intermediates for GB (methylphosphonic difluoride and methylphosphonic dichloride) could be more readily produced.

4. These studies took place during the late 1940s and early 1950s and the exchange of this data with the USA and Canada under the Tripartite Conferences would have taken place during this period.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the names of the experiments carried out by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment on service volunteers with the incapacitating agent BZ since 1965; in which years each of these experiments took place; how many service volunteers were involved; what was the nature of these experiments; what were the conclusions of these studies; and what follow-up checks were conducted on these service volunteers in the years after they left Porton Down to monitor the long-term effect of the experiments on their mental and physical health.

Mr. Soames: This matter is for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 16 March 1995.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what were the names of the experiments carried out by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment on Service volunteers with the incapacitating agent BZ since 1965; in which years each of these experiments took place; how many Service volunteers were involved; what was the nature of these experiments; what were the conclusions of these studies; and what follow-up checks were conducted on these Service volunteers in the years after they left Porton Down to monitor the long-term effect of the experiments on their mental and physical health, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them. This work includes the evaluation of the potential hazard of possible agents such as the incapacitating agent BZ.

3. Studies involving Service volunteers and BZ since 1965 were not given a specific operational name. Our records indicate that 4 Service volunteers were given BZ between 1965 and 1967. No studies involving Service volunteers have taken place since 1967.

4. The purpose of the studies was to assess the effects of a potential agent which might affect the volunteers' behaviour. The conclusion of the evaluation of BZ was that it could affect the behaviour of Service personnel and as such presented a potential hazard which should not be ignored in considering the potential hazards to which UK Forces might be exposed.

5. The volunteers were examined before and after the tests by the resident Army psychiatrist and no indication of any continuing effect was observed. There have been no reports of any subsequent sequelae from any of the volunteers .

Service volunteers return to their units on completion of the study, where they are, medically, the responsibility of the unit Medical Officer. There is no history of Service doctors in their units seeking advice from CBDE Porton Down on any subsequent illnesses that may have been reported by volunteers who have been exposed to agent during studies at CBDE.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 3 February, Official Report, columns 887–88, in which scientific journals the results of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment's studies on nerve agent pre-treatment sets were published; when NAPS was first issued for use by the armed forces; in which years the results of these studies were exchanged with other countries; and under which defence agreement these results were shared.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Livingstone, dated 16 March 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking pursuant to his Answer of 3 February, Official Report, columns 887–8, in which scientific journals the results of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment's studies on NAPS were published; when NAPS was first issued for use by the Armed Forces; in which years the results of these studies were exchanged with other countries; and under which Defence Agreement these results were shared, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the UK Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them.

3. Our records indicate that the results of our studies on NAPS were published in the following scientific journals:

a. Fundamentals of Applied Toxicology.

b. Journal of Pharmacy and Pharmacology.

c. Toxicology and Applied Pharmacology.

4. NAPS was first issued for use by the Armed Forces following its acceptance into service in August 1981.

5. The results of this work were part of the chemical and biological defence programme and have formed part of the technical database drawn upon in collaboration with our Allies under the agreements covering research, development, deployment and standardisation of chemical and biological defence equipment such as those listed by the Rt Hon Archie Hamilton in his reply of 21 May 1992, Official Report, column 255–256.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research has been carried out on the nerve agent VX at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down since the closure of the nerve agent plant at Nancekuke; what quantity of the nerve agent VX has been used in this research at Porton Down; when the results of this research were exchanged with other countries; and under which defence agreements these results were exchanged.

Mr. Freeman : This is a matter for the chief executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment. I have therefore asked him to reply.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 16 March 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what research has been carried out on the nerve agent VX at the Chemical and Biological Establishment at Porton Down since the closure of the nerve agent plant at Nancekuke; what quantity of the nerve agent VX has been used in this research at Porton Down; when the results of this research were exchanged with other countries; and under which Defence Agreements these results were exchanged, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. Since the closure of the Chemical Defence Establishment at Nancekuke in 1980 research on VX has covered all aspects concerned with the provision of effective protective measures against the threat that VX might be used by an aggressor against the UK Armed Forces. This has included hazard assessment, detection and identification, physical protection, contamination control and the use of prophylactic and medical countermeasures. Our records are not maintained in such a way as to readily identify the quantity of VX used since 1980. However, the quantity of VX used in research at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment from 1985 to the present day is about 1.25 Kgs.

4. The results of this work were part of the chemical biological defence programme and have formed part of the technical database drawn upon in collaboration with our allies under the agreements covering research, development, deployment and standardisation of chemical and biological defence equipment such as those listed by the right hon. Archie Hamilton in his reply of 21 May 1992, Official Report, columns 255-256.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 20 December 1994, Official Report, columns 1176-77, why the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment felt it necessary to carry out further studies on the nerve agent pretreatment set at the Cambridge military hospital in 1993.

Mr. Soames: This matter is for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 16 March 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking pursuant to his Answer of 20 December, Official Report, columns 1176–7, why the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment felt it necessary to carry out further studies on the Nerve Agent Pretreatment Set at the Cambridge Military Hospital in 1993, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the UK Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. In order to carry out this work, it is necessary to use Service volunteers to:

a. assess the ability of Service personnel to function with new equipment and procedures,

b. develop medical countermeasures to protect Service personnel and,

c. evaluate the effects of very low and medically safe concentrations of CW agents on the ability of unprotected personnel to operate normally.

No studies involving volunteers are carried out unless there is a clear military need and a detailed protocol has been reviewed and approved by an independent Ethics Committee in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Royal College of Physicians.

3 The Nerve Agent Pretreatment Set (NAPS) was developed in response to a requirement which called for a pretreatment effective against poisoning by all known nerve agents. A number of studies were conducted by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment to identify the effective oral dose regime which used in conjunction with therapy would provide protection against nerve agent poisoning whilst producing minimal or nil side effects.

4. The administration of NAPS during the Gulf conflict of 1990/91 confirmed the results of the NAPS studies previously carried out at CBDE and in various external trials in that the side effects from the taking of NAPS were minimal and did not interfere with military efficiency. However, the MOD considered that a further more extensive study should take place at the Cambridge Military Hospital in order to assess the significance of the side effects from the taking of NAPS over a longer period. The study lasted for eight weeks. The conclusions of the study confirm the earlier findings in that the side effects from the taking of NAPS were minimal and did not interfere with military efficiency.

Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 3 February, Official Report, column 886, how many safety audits of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment have been carried out by the Safety Services Organisation of his Department since 1965.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment. I have therefore asked him to reply.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 16 March 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking pursuant to his Answer of 3 February, Official Report, column 886, how many safety audits of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment have been carried out by the Safety Services Organisation of his Department since 1965, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them.

3. Our records are not maintained in such a way as to easily provide the number of safety audits carried out since 1965 and to do so would involve disproportionate effort and cost.

4. Since 1987, the Safety Services Organisation has carried out a total of 21 safety audits made up of individual audits in each of four broad areas which are general, range safety, explosives and fire services.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service volunteers have been involved in studies with the NBC suit No. 1 Mk 4 at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down since 1965; when these studies were carried out; what was the nature and conclusion of these studies; under which defence agreement the results of these studies were shared with other countries; and when this suit was issued for use by the armed forces.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 16 March 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking how many Service volunteers have been involved in studies with the NBC suit No. 1, Mk 4, at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down since 1965; when these studies were carried out; what was the nature and conclusion of these studies; under which Defence Agreement the results of these studies were shared with other countries; and when this suit was issued to use by the Armed Forces, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them. In order to carry out this work, it is necessary to use Service volunteers to:

a. assess the ability of Service personnel to function with new equipment and procedures,

b. develop medical countermeasures to protect Service personnel and

c. evaluate the effects of very low and medically safe concentration of CW agents on the ability of unprotected personnel to operate normally.

No studies involving volunteers are carried out unless there is a clear military need and a detailed protocol has been reviewed and approved by an independent Ethics Committee in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Royal College of Physicians.

3. Studies into the Mk IV NBC suit involving Service volunteers began in the early 1980s. Since then approximately, 500 Service volunteers have been involved in studies of the Mk IV NBC suit at CBDE. The studies have investigated the physiological load imposed by wearing the Mk IV suit in various climatic conditions and the integrity of the complete ensemble when challenged with aerosols of sodium chloride and sodium fluorescein.

4. Further studies have been conducted at intervals since the introduction into service of the Mk IV suit in 1987. The physiological trials confirmed previous findings that wearing extra clothing over normal combat clothing reduced work tolerance times under certain climatic conditions and the integrity trials confirmed that the various items of UK NBC protective equipment provide effective protection.

5. The results of this work were part of the chemical and biological defence programme and have formed part of the technical database drawn upon in collaboration with our Allies under the agreements covering research, development, deployment and standardisation of chemical and biological defence equipment such as those listed by the Right Hon. Archie Hamilton in his reply of 21 May 1992, Official Report, columns 255–256.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the current Director-General of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down is expected to retire; and what is the name and background of his appointed successor.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Chemical and Biological Establishment. I have therefore asked him to reply.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 16 March 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking when the current Director General of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down, is expected to retire; and what is the name and background of his appointed successor, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the UK Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them.

3. I shall retire on 19 July 1995 although I shall cease to be the Director General and Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment on 31 March 1995. On 1 April 1995 CBDE becomes a division of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) whose Chief Executive will be John Chisholm, currently Chief Executive of the Defence Research Agency (DRA). This division will include the present CBDE and the Chemical and Electronic Systems Sector of the current DRA.

4. I shall be replaced at Porton Down by Dr Graham D Coley who will become the Managing Director of CBDE. His background includes 20 years at the Atomic Weapons Establishment, (Aldermaston) in a number of scientific and managerial posts, followed by various posts in Whitehall, including being Deputy Head of the Efficiency Unit in the Prime Minister's Office, and latterly Assistant Chief Scientific Adviser (Projects) in the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in which years since 1965 the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment has carried out studies with service volunteers at Bulford; what was the purpose and conclusion of these studies; how many studies were carried out there; and how many service volunteers were involved in these tests.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 16 March 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking in which years since 1965 the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment has carried out studies with Service volunteers at Bulford; what was the purpose and conclusions of these studies; how many studies were carried out there; and how many Service volunteers were involved in these tests, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the UK Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. In order to carry out this work, it is necessary to use Service volunteers to:

a. assess the ability of Service personnel to function with new equipment and procedures,

b. develop medical countermeasures to protect Service personnel and,

c. evaluate the effects of very low and medically safe concentrations of CW agents on the ability of unprotected personnel to operate normally.

No studies involving volunteers are carried out unless there is a clear military need and a detailed protocol has been reviewed and approved by an independent Ethics Committee in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Royal College of Physicians.

3. In a previous answer (Official Report, 24 June 1994, column 374–5); I said that studies involving Service volunteers took place inter alia at Bulford. A further check of our records has now shown that a transcription error occurred and that the Service volunteer studies took place at Bordon and not at Bulford.

4. One NAPS study took place at Bordon in 1981. Twenty five Service personnel took part of whom 15 received NAPS and 10 received a placebo. The conclusions of the study confirmed earlier findings that the side effects from the taking of NAPS were minimal and did not interfere with military efficiency.

5. The Nerve Agent Pretreatment Set (NAPS) was developed in response to a requirement which called for a pretreatment effective against poisoning by all known nerve agents. A number of studies were conducted by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment to identify the effective oral dose regime which used in conjunction with therapy would provide protection against nerve agent poisoning whilst producing minimal or nil side effects.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many times staff in (a) the biology division and (b) the chemistry and decontamination division of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down, have published the results of their research in scientific journals in the past two years; when they were published; and in which journals.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment. I have therefore asked him to reply.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 16 March 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking how many times staff in (a) the Biology Division and (b) the Chemistry and Decontamination Division of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down, have published the results of their research in scientific journals in the past two years; when they were published; and in which journals, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is carry out work to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them.

3. Staff in the Biological Division and the Chemistry and Decontamination Division of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down have had 21 and 6 publications respectively in scientific journals during 1993 and 1994. The journals in which these were published are:

a. Analytical Proceedings.

b. Biochemical Pharmacology.

c. Biochemical Society Transactions.

d. British Journal of Pharmacology.

e. Chemistry in Britain.

f. Human and Experimental Toxicology.

g. International Journal of Biochemistry.

h. Journal of Applied Toxicology.

i. Journal of Chromatography.

j. Journal of Pharmacology.

k. Journal of Pharmacy and Pharmacology.

l. Journal of Psychopharmacology.

m. Society for Neuroscience Abstracts.

n. Toxicology.

o. Toxicology In Vitro.

p. Xenobiotica.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what is the nature of the collaboration between the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment and the Institute of Aviation Medicine with regard to the service volunteers programme; and in which years this collaboration took place.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 16 March 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what is the nature of the collaboration between the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment and the Institute of Aviation Medicine with regard to the Service Volunteers programme; and in which years this collaboration took place, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the UK Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. In order to carry out this work, it is necessary to use Service volunteers to:

a. assess the ability of Service personnel to function with new equipment and procedures,

b. develop medical countermeasures to protect Service personnel and,

No studies involving volunteers are carried out unless there is a clear military need and a detailed protocol has been reviewed and approved by an independent Ethics Committee in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Royal College of Physicians.

3. There has been long standing collaboration between CBDE Porton Down and the Institute of Aviation Medicine on a wide range of topics of mutual interest involving visits to and by each Establishment. This collaboration has addressed inter alia the effects of nerve agents on the visual acuity of pilots. Insofar as the Service Volunteer programme is concerned, CBDE and IAM have collaborated in the analytical methods used in carrying out studies with the Nerve Agent Pretreatment Set (NAPS).

Respirators

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service volunteers have been involved in studies with the S6 respirator at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down since 1965; in which years these studies took place; what was the nature and purpose of these studies; and under which defence agreement the results of these studies were exchanged with other countries.

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 16 March 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking how many Service volunteers have been involved in studies with the S6 respirator at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down since 1965; in which years these studies took place; what was the nature and purpose of these studies; and under which Defence Agreement the results of these studies were exchanged with other countries, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the UK Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. In order to carry out this work, it is necessary to use Service volunteers to:

a. assess the ability of Service personnel to function with new equipment and procedures,

b. develop medical countermeasures to protect Service personnel and,

c. evaluate the effects of very low and medically safe concentrations of CW agents on the ability of unprotected personnel to operate normally.

No studies involving volunteers are carried out unless there is a clear military need and detailed protocol has been reviewed and approved by an independent Ethics Committee in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Royal College of Physicians.

3. Our records are not maintained in such a way as to identify the number of Service personnel who have participated in studies with the S6 respirator at CBDE. Studies have been carried out at CBDE on the protection afforded by the S6 respirator when worn by human beings. In addition, during the research and development phases of the S6 programme, user trials were conducted to determine the military acceptability of various aspects of the design. There trials took the form of issuing prototype respirators to units for use during routine exercises.

4. The results of this work were part of the chemical and biological defence programme and have formed part of the technical database drawn upon in collaboration with our Allies under the agreements covering research, development, deployment and standardisation of chemical and biological defence equipment such as those listed by the Right Hon. Archie Hamilton in his reply of 21 May 1992, Official Report, columns 255–56.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 3 February, Official Report, column 889, when the S10 respirator was issued for use by the armed forces; when the NATO triptych was laid down; and what are its provisions.

Mr. Soames: This matter is for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Graham Pearson to Mr. Ken Livingstone, dated 16 March 1995:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking pursuant to his Answer of 3 February, Official Report, column 889, when the S10 respirator was issued for use by the Armed Forces; when the Nato triptych was laid down; and what are its provisions, has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out work to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them.

3. The S10 respirator began entering service with UK Armed Forces in 1986–87, and is now the standard issue respirator for all Service personnel.

4. The current version of the NATO NBC Respirator Triptych was issued in May 1991 and replaced the original version issued in 1967. The Triptych comprise three sections headed: Operational Requirements, Technical Specifications, and Evaluation Tests and Criteria. These are further sub-divided into sections on protection characteristics, use characteristics, survivability, and storage and service life. These lay down the minimum requirements for various parameters such as comfort, compatibility with other equipment, field of vision, protection properties, flash resistance, care and maintenance, canister thread dimensions, and communication. A series of Annexes describe some of the test methods used in determining compliance with the requirements.

War Widows

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in how many cases a post-1973 war widow has (a) been warned that she might lose her attributable forces family pension or (b) had the pension terminated on the ground that she had been co-habiting.

Mr. Soames: Each new award to a service widow or widower is accompanied by a guide explaining the conditions of the award. The information includes advice to the pensioner that the pension ceases on remarriage or on living with a partner as husband and wife. The Paymaster General also issues an annual newsletter to every pensioner which contains a reminder that the Paymaster General is to be informed in the event of a service widow or widower's remarriage or living with a new partner.

Information on the number of widows whose attributable forces family pension has ceased on living with a man as his wife is not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many post—1973 war widows are currently in receipt of an attributable forces family pension.

Mr. Soames: Departmental records of service widows pensions in payment do not separately identify those in receipt of attributable forces family pensions. There are, however, some 64,000 armed forces dependants' pensions in payment of which it is estimated some 2,000 will be attributable forces family pensions to service widows.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total annual cost of the attributable forces family pension currently being paid to post-1973 war widows.

Mr. Soames: Departmental records of service widows pensions in payment do not separately identify those in receipt of attributable forces family pensions and therefore it is not possible easily to isolate the total annual cost of such pensions.

The current rates of attributable pensions for the dependants of those who gave service on or after 31 December 1994, excluding senior officers, range between £4,882 and £20,493 per annum.

Anglo-French Nuclear Co-operation

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many French Government employees have visited the United Kingdom to discuss or review nuclear matters during the last year; and if he will list the locations where the meetings took place.

Mr. Freeman: French Government employees frequently visit the United Kingdom to discuss a wide range of issues, including nuclear matters.

AWE Aldermaston and Burghfield

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the Health and Safety Executive issued a prohibition notice on the A45 facility at atomic weapons establishment Aldermaston; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Two prohibition notices relating to the A45 complex at AWE Aldermaston were issued by the Health and Safety Executive on 3 September 1993 following the spillage of some coolant from a lathe. The notices are a matter of public record and both have since been lifted.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the decision to end the requirement at the atomic weapons establishments Aldermaston and Burghfield to submit fire reports to Berkshire fire and rescue service.

Mr. Freeman: It has long been the practice to alert the Berkshire fire and rescue service to all fire service calls received at AWE Aldermaston and Burghfield other than those concerning minor on-site road traffic accidents. There are no plans to change these arrangements.

Blinding Laser Weapons

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what action he is taking to arrange the UN conference, convened for September 1995 in Vienna, to update the UN weapons convention to stop the development, production and use of blinding laser weapons;

(2) what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to bring about international agreement to make illegal and ban the use of weapons purely made for the blinding of people.

Mr. Soames: We are considering proposals to add to the UN weaponry convention a new protocol covering the employment of lasers.

NATO Air Defence Agreement

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what factors led the United Kingdom not to become party to the recent NATO agreement to develop co-operatively a medium extended air defence system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: A quadrilateral statement of intent on MEADS was recently agreed by France, Germany, Italy and the USA. We are currently reviewing the nature and timing of our requirement for a future medium surface-to-air missile, in parallel with studies into ballistic missile defence options. At this stage it would be premature to commit ourselves to meeting any such requirements through the MEADS programme, although we are keeping in close touch with its progress.

Boarding School Allowance

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many serving armed forces personnel in the United Kingdom who live within daily travelling distance of their work base have financial support from his Department for their children to attend independent schools; and what is his estimate of the cost.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at a disproportionate cost. Boarding school allowance is paid to assist eligible service parents of all ranks to provide a stable education for their children and to avoid the disruptive school changes which would otherwise be likely to occur as a result of the frequent postings within the United Kingdom and abroad to which service personnel are liable. Eligibility depends on the liability of service parents to be posted within the course of a discrete stage of education for the child. It may well happen, therefore, that for part of this period the service parent is working and living close to the school selected for the child.

Clothing Contracts

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the delay in the allocation of Ministry of Defence clothing contracts in the current year.

Mr. Freeman: There have been no general delays in placing MOD clothing contracts in the current year. The placement of a small number of these contracts has, however, been delayed while Ministers reviewed MOD's response to the demise of the priority suppliers scheme.

Injury Compensation Claims

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance is normally given to members of the armed forces in pursuing claims against third parties for compensation for injuries in the course of their duties.

Mr. Soames: There is no general provision for such assistance from the Ministry of Defence either for members of the armed forces or for civilian employees. All personnel do, of course, have the same entitlement as members of the public to apply to the Legal Aid Board for assistance in bringing claims through the courts against third parties for damages for personal injury.

Service Housing

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the reasons for the failure of the project to transfer MOD married quarters to a housing trust; and what are his present intentions for the married quarters owned by his Department;

(2) what severance payments are to be paid to Mr. Mike Robinson and Mr. Mark Taylor in respect of the failed

MOD housing trust project; how far these exceed the amounts required by contract; and who was responsible for negotiating the original contracts.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the employment of (a) Mike Robinson, as chief executive, and (b) the senior managers of the housing trust; and what sum of public money will be used to terminate their contracts.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will give details of the severance clauses contained in the employment contracts of the current (a) chairman and (b) finance director of the Defence housing trust;

(2) what are his Department's future plans for the married quarters housing stock;

(3) what is the total cost of the severance pay, including pension rights, for (a) Mr. Mike Robinson, chairman of the Ministry of Defence Housing Trust, and (b) Mr. Mark Taylor, finance director of the Ministry of Defence Housing Trust.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is (a) the minimum and (b) the maximum amounts of severance pay that Michael Robinson and Mark Taylor, employees of the housing trust, are entitled to under their contracts;

(2) if he will list the criteria which will be used to decide if the Chief Executive of the housing trust receives a performance related bonus in April 1995;

(3) how much the chief executive of the housing trust has received, or will receive in severance pay;

(4) how much Mark Taylor, an employee of the housing trust, has received or will be receiving in severance payment.

Mr. Soames [holding answers 8 and 9 March 1995]: In keeping with our determination to improve the management of service housing, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State announced on 17 November 1994, Official Report, column 1, our plans to establish a Defence Housing Executive. This organisation will manage the married quarters estate on a fully integrated basis an deliver important management improvements as sought under the earlier proposals for a housing trust.

The trust proposals had to be abandoned when it was concluded that the proposed new body could not properly be classified to the private sector, and would not therefore be able to gain access to private sector capital to fund its operations and improve the housing stock. Since the three senior managers of the embryo housing trust had originally been recruited and appointed by the Ministry of Defence, following open competition, for the specific purpose of setting up and managing the trust, they were consequently entitled to be released from, and paid for the unexpired portion of their contracts. All three agreed to stay on, however, to assist us in reorganising the way in which we manage our housing estate and preparing for the establishment of the Defence Housing Executive.

This work, to which their contribution has been invaluable, has progressed well, and the Defence Housing Executive is on course to take up its responsibilities from 1 April 1995. Meanwhile, and in addition to the Defence Housing Executive initiative, we are continuing to consider alternative possibilities for transferring the married quarters estate to the private sector.

Once the Defence Housing Executive formally comes into being, my Department will no longer require the services of two of the senior managers, Mr. Robinson and Mr. Taylor. They will accordingly be made redundant on 31 March. In line with the provisions of their contracts, they will be entitled to compensation for the remainder of the three-year period of their contracts, calculated at the annual rate of the first year's salary plus any bonus earned during the first year. Although the amounts of compensation have yet to be finalised, they are expected to be around £200,000 for Mr. Robinson and £170,000 for Mr. Taylor, depending on the final assessment of performance against milestones agreed with their line management. The basic pay for their period of service will be pensionable.

I am pleased to be able to announce that the third manager recruited to the trust, Mr. James, will stay on in the role of chief executive of the Defence Housing Executive. Under Mr. James's direction, the executive will bring together the disparate housing staffs, and will manage and maintain the married quarters estate as a single entity in accordance with best professional practice. Drawing on may of the plans originally developed for the housing trust, it will be able to maximise efficiencies and provide a better service to service personnel and their families.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the total amount of fees paid to (a) estate agents and (b) consultants in relation to the sale of surplus Ministry of Defence houses in the period 1 January 1993 to 31 December 1994.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 14 March 1995]: Although this information is not available in the precise form requested, fees paid to estate agents and consultants in support of the land and buildings disposal programme total £7.27 million for the period in question. These fees cover the cost of advice on planning, highways and other matters, and help to ensure that the best return for the taxpayer is obtained.

Bilateral Cost-sharing Agreement

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 2 February, Official Report, column 858, what works under the bilateral cost-sharing agreement are being carried out at each of the named locations; how much money was owed by the United States Government under this agreement on (a) 31 March 1992 and (b) 31 March 1993; what percentage of the annual expenditure under this agreement this figure represented on both dates, excluding administration costs; and which agency is responsible for carrying out the works and for collecting the debts under this arrangement.

Mr. Soames: Works being carried out at the locations named in my previous answer cover operation and maintenance, minor and major projects. Bills with the US Government for payment amounted to £12,200,00 on 31 March 1992 and £7,040,000 on 31 March 1993 representing 13.5 per cent. and 8.7 per cent. respectively of the annual expenditure on US works under the agreement. The Ministry of Defence, defence works services—United States forces—is responsible for carrying out work under the cost-sharing agreement, and for managing the associated financial arrangements.

TREASURY

European Monetary Institute

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the percentage and numerical breakdown by nationality of the employees of the European Monetary Institute.

Mr. Nelson: The information requested as at 9 March 1995 is as follows:

Distribution of EMI appointments by nationality

Nationality	Number	Per cent.
Austrian	5	3.2
Belgian	9	5.8
British	29	18.8
Danish	4	2.6
Dutch	9	5.8
Finish	1	0.6
French	15	9.7
German	51	33.1
Greek	2	1.3
Irish	11	7.1
Italian	9	5.8
Luxembourg	0	0
Spanish	8	5.2
Swedish	1	0.6
Total	154

Note:
Percentages do not sum to 100 per cent. because of rounding.

Exchange Rate Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the percentage change in nominal exchange rate between February 1993 and January 1994; and what were the policy considerations underlying this;

(2) what priority he attaches when he increases interest rates to (a) defending the exchange rate and (b) controlling inflation; and if he will make a statement on the connection between the two processes.

Mr. Nelson: Interest rates are set to deliver low inflation. Since changes in interest rates influence inflation with a lag, interest rate decisions are based on an assessment of the prospects for underlying inflation in one to two years' time. This assessment is based on a wide range of information including movements in the exchange rate. While the Government recognise the value of exchange rate stability, they do not have a target for the exchange rate. Figures for the nominal exchange rate are published by the Central Statistical Office in table 7.1A of "Financial Statistics", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of the change in the exchange rate between February 1993 and January 1994 on the competitiveness of British manufactured goods at home and overseas.

Mr. Nelson: An assessment of developments in trade and the balance of payments, including competitiveness, was published in chapter 3 of the November 1994 "Financial Statement and Budget Report". This took full account of changes in the level of the exchange rate.

Barings

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Finance Corporation will be affected by developments at Barings.

Mr. Nelson: That is a matter for them, but from what the two institutions have told my officials, neither currently believes that it will be affected by developments at Barings.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Publicity and Publications

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the total expenditure on (a) all forms of publicity and (b) all publications and pamphlets produced for his Department and for all the agencies and public bodies for which his Department is responsible for each year since 1979, including the budgeted figure for 1995–96, (i) including and (ii) excluding privatisation-related expenditures and expressed in 1994 prices; and if he will supply information for the period from 1 April 1993 to 1 March 1995 showing (1) the nature and (2) the purpose of each publicity campaign and of each publication involving the expenditure of more than £50,000.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The cost of publicity, publications and pamphlets, including court forms, produced centrally by the Lord Chancellor's Department since 1992 is as follows:

Year	£
1992–93	1,529,211
1993–94	1,342,743

Letter from Sarah Tyacke to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 17 March 1995:

I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply to your question relating to expenditure on publicity and on publications and pamphlets for each year since 1979, including the budgeted cost for 1995–96. The Public Record Office has a publications programme for the public records. The figures are:

Year	£
1990–91	13,282
1991–92	15,050
1992–93	39,954
1993–94	65,546
1994–95	[1]78,900
1995–96	[1]61,800

[1] Budget.

Information for earlier years is not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate costs.

The Public Record Office has not held a publicity campaign or issued a publication whose cost has exceeded £50,000.

Letter from S. Hutcheson to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 17 March 1995:

The Parliamentary Secretary of the Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to you as a part of the Lord Chancellor's Department's response to your Parliamentary question, listed on 14 March 1995, regarding expenditure on publicity and publications and pamphlets.

The Public Trust Office has not undertaken any publicity campaigns and none is planned for 1995–96.

The information required on all publications and pamphlets for each year since 1979 is not readily available and it would not be cost effective to produce the information required in the short period available. The budgeted figure for 1995–96 is not available as it is subsumed within other planned expenditure.

As the Public Trust Office has not been privatised there has been no related expenditure.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mr. Malcolm Bruce, dated 17 March 1995:

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, to reply to your recent question concerning total expenditure by HM Land Registry on all forms of publicity and all publications and pamphlets produced for each year since 1979. I can provide the following information.

(a) Publicity

The table below identifies publicity expenditure (expressed in 1994 prices) since 1989–90. These expenditures cover all public relations activities, communications to Land Registry staff and customer service literature. Prior to that date, no specific budget was held for these purposes. There has been no privatisation related expenditure incurred by the Land Registry.

Year	£
1989–90	3,368
1990–91	17,078
1991–92	24,400
1992–93	21,643
1993–94	10,765
1994–95	60,069
1995–96 (Budget)	46,489

(b) Publications and Pamphlets

The Land Registry produces a wide range of explanatory literature containing advice for practitioners and the general public on various aspects of land registrations practice and procedure and on the services that it provides. The cost of providing these publications is subsumed within the Registry's total stationery budget and individual elements cannot be identified. Stationery costs bear a direct relationship to the operational work of the Registry to which the majority of the budget is devoted.

In respect of publications issued by HMSO, for instance the Registry's Annual Report and Accounts, costs are borne by HMSO who aim to recover these from sales revenue.

As to the second part of your question, during the period from 1 April 1993 to 1 March 1995 the Land Registry did not undertake any publicity campaign or produce any publication involving the expenditure of more than £50,000.

There is no cost to the Exchequer for the Agency's publicity or publications as the Land Registry meets all of its expenditures from fees paid by those who use its services.

I do hope that this answers the points raised with the Parliamentary Secretary but please contact me if I can be of any further assistance.

Mr. Gerry Adams

Mr. Gill: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department in what circumstances and under what provisions legal aid can be refused to Mr. Gerry Adams in his application for judicial review against the British Government; and what changes in the law are necessary to prevent Mr. Gerry Adams from claiming legal aid in his application for judicial review.

Mr. John M. Taylor: All applicants for civil legal aid must pass a test of their financial means and of the merits of their case if they are to be awarded legal aid by the Legal Aid Board. Legal aid will be refused if the applicant is unable to satisfy either of these tests. The statutory basis for the grant of legal aid is the Legal Aid Act 1988 and the regulations made under it. Mr. Adams will be treated in the same way as any other applicant for legal aid. Any changes in the law relating to legal aid are made only when it seems sensible to do so in respect of all applicants.

EMPLOYMENT

Workplace Bullying

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research his Department has carried out over the last 10 years into the extent of workplace bullying.

Mr. Oppenheim: None.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has for introducing a code of practice aimed at avoiding incidents of (a) workplace victimisation and (b) intimidation of employees.

Mr. Oppenheim: The Department has no plans to do so.

Publicity and Publications

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total expenditure on (a) all forms of publicity and (b) all publication and pamphlets produced for his Department and for all the agencies and public bodies for which his Department is responsible, for each year since 1979, including the budgeted figure for 1995–96, (i) including and (ii) excluding privatisation-related expenditures and expressed in 1994 prices; and if he will supply information for the period from 1 April 1993 to 1 March 1995 showing (1) the nature and (2) the purpose of each publicity campaign and of each publication involving the expenditure of more than £50,000.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to him on 3 March 1995, Official Report, columns 747–48, which provides information on all publicity expenditure for each year since 1979. The budgeted figure for advertising and publicity for 1995–96 is £10.6 million. Further information broken down by type of publicity is not available.

Separate information on privatisation-related publicity is not available.

Information about individual publications between 1 April 1993 and 1 March 1995 involving the expenditure of more than £50,000 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The following publicity campaigns costing over £50,000 were conducted during the period:

Career Development Loans

To encourage individuals to take up loans to improve their careers;

Make it Your Business

To raise awareness of national vocational qualifications and encourage employers to develop their staff and benefit from the result;

Just the Job/New Measures

To publicise the range of new Employment Service measures available to help people back into work;

National Training Awards

To encourage employers and individuals to enter the national competition for training excellence;

Investors in People

To encourage employers to develop their staff and benefit from the results;

Employment Service Employer Campaign

To encourage employers to use jobcentre services;

Disability Campaign

To encourage employers to recruit or retain or retain people with disabilities;

New Horizons for Women

To highlight opportunities for women to realise their potential in employment, training, public life and voluntary work.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, under the proposed jobseeker's allowance, he intends to retain the provisions in regulation 7B of the Social Security (Unemployment, Sickness and Invalidity Benefit) Regulations concerning restrictions on availability for work resulting from the person's physical or mental condition.

Miss Widdecombe: Jobseeker's allowance claimants will normally be expected to be available for a minimum of 40 hours a week. Regulations will reflect our policy that claimants with a mental or physical condition will be able to restrict their availability in accordance with their disability.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Exhibitions

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Refugee Council to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 19 June to Friday 23 June 1995.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to Child 2000 to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 12 June to Friday 16 June 1995.

TRANSPORT

Publicity and Publications

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total expenditure on (a) all forms of publicity and (b) all publications and pamphlets produced for his Department and for all the agencies and public bodies for which his Department is responsible, for each year since 1979, including the budgeted figure for 1995–96, (i) including and (ii) excluding privatisation-related expenditures and expressed in 1994 prices; and if he will supply information for the period from 1 April 1993 to 1 March 1995 showing (1) the nature and (2) the purpose of each publicity campaign and of each publication involving the expenditure of more than £50,000.

Mr. Norris: For expenditure by my Department and its agencies on above-the-line advertising, I refer the hon. Gentlemen to the replies I gave on 14 February, Official Report, columns 524–25. Information on other forms of publicity could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Level Crossings

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the location of each automatic open level crossing (a) remotely and (b) locally monitored, which currently fails to meet the criteria specified in the report produced by Professor Stott, with the dates by which the replacement of the level crossing is expected to be completed.

Mr. Watts: Of the 250 automatic open crossings on the British Rail system at the time of the Stott report, 74 were identified as likely to fail to meet the criteria established by Professor Stott.

The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate has advised me that all remotely monitored automatic open level crossings now meet the Stott report criteria.

The following four locally monitored automatic open level crossings currently remain to be converted to meet the Stott report criteria.

Grove road level crossing, Beccles, due for conversion late spring 1996;

Marton (Gypsy) lane level crossing, Middlesbrough, due for conversion late autumn 1995;

Runswarp level crossing, Whitby, due for conversion late autumn 1995;

Hunmanby depot (Sands lane) level crossing, Filey, conversion date under consideration by Railtrack.

Her Majesty's railway inspectorate has been in discussion with Railtrack to ensure that any delays are minimised.

ENVIRONMENT

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost of his Department's expenditure on water and sewerage in (a) the current year and (b) each of the three previous years.

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department spent the following amounts on water and sewerage during the financial years indicated:

Year	£
1991–92	92,800
1992–93	124,000
1993–94	141,300
1994–95	106,200

These figures exclude the expenditure of the Department's agencies and properties where water and sewerage charges are included in the rent.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to the proposals set out by the Director General of Water Services at the House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities, Sub-committee C on the environment, public health and education, on 1 March, on the placing of a legal duty on water companies to promote the efficient use of sewerage services.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend is meeting the Director General of Water Services to discuss the issues.

Berkshire

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will consult the Secretary of State for Education about the implications for the education service of the Local Government Commission's recommendations in respect of Berkshire;

(2) if he will consult the Secretary of State for National Heritage about the implications for the public library service of the Local Government Commission's recommendations in respect of Berkshire;

(3) if he will consult the Secretary of State for Transport about the implications for transport planning of the Local Government Commission's recommendations in respect of Berkshire;

(4) if he will consult the Secretary of State for Health about the implications for social services, with particular reference to the development of community care and the protection of mental health, of the Local Government Commission's recommendations in respect of Berkshire.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Decisions made by Government, including decisions on the recommendations of the Local Government Commission, are taken collectively.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the recommendations of the Local Government Commission in respect of Berkshire; and how many of these opposed the proposals.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We have received some 5,400 letters. Many of these have not been couched in terms of support for, or opposition to, the commission's recommended local government structure for the county as a whole, but approximately three quarters have expressed opposition to change. We have also received a petition of some 10,000 signatures in support of an alternative unitary structure and one of some 4,300 signatures in favour of a unitary Reading on extended boundaries. One hundred and thirty-five pro-forma leaflets have been received, 39 of which have expressed opposition to change.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the Local Government Commission included the status quo as an option for public consultation in its review of local government structure in Berkshire.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: No. The commission's consultation report and leaflets did, however, explain that it must recommend to the Government whether to change the existing structure of local government in the county or whether to make no change.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to reach a decision on the recommendation of the Local Government Commission in respect of Berkshire.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: As my right hon. Friend told the House on 2 March, Official Report, columns 1183–1202, he expects to be able to make a statement in the very near future on Berkshire and those other counties on which decisions about local government structure have yet to be announced.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate the Local Government Commission has made of the additional administrative staff required by the proposals in respect of Berkshire.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The commission's financial estimates of costs and savings associated with its proposals for local government reorganisation in Berkshire, which were made publicly available in December 1994, incorporated the assumption that 129 additional staff would be required compared with the status quo. The staffing levels of local authorities are, however, ultimately a matter for the authorities themselves.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if joint arrangements between authorities would be needed for the implementation of the Local Government Commission's recommendation in respect of Berkshire.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: It would be for the Berkshire local authorities to consider the most suitable means of service delivery, including whether voluntary joint arrangements were desirable for particular functions. For the fire service, the Local Government Commission has recommended a statutory joint authority.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what agreement he has arrived at with the member of the European Commission responsible for the regional development fund concerning the retrospective element of the single programme document in the United Kingdom objective 2 areas with effect from 1 January 1994.

Sir Paul Beresford: The regulations governing the use of the EC structural funds provide for expenditure incurred after 1 January 1994 to be eligible for European regional development fund grant. Projects which involve retrospective expenditure will be considered at the first bidding round in each programme area. No other agreement has a been reached regarding retrospection in the objective 2 programmes for which my Department is responsible.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what negotiations he has carried out on the setting up of a programme for the European regional development fund for the eligible parts of the United Kingdom for objective 2 funding for the period commencing 1 January 1997.

Sir Paul Beresford: None.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the shire county areas, in respect of which the Local Government Commission has recommended the total abolition of the county council in favour of unitary authorities; and what percentage they represent of all shire county areas.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Local Government Commission recommended an all-unitary structure of local government in 10 county areas—that is, 26 per cent. of the 39 shire county areas in England. Specifically, it recommended that the county councils in Avon, Bedfordshire, Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Cleveland, Dorset, Humberside, North Yorkshire and Somerset should be abolished and that the Isle of Wight should have one unitary authority.

Housing Associations

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for increasing the amount of the housing association budget which can be spent for the Wirral.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The allocations from the Housing Corporation's approved development programme to local authorities in 1995–96 were announced on 15 December 1994, Official Report, columns 734–35, and details were placed in the Library of the House. There are no plans for increasing these amounts.

Health Risks

Mr. Nick Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the health risk level accepted by his Department for ground level concentrations of (a) vanadium and (b) nickel in nanograms per cubic meters.

Mr. Atkins: [Pursuant to his reply 2 March 1995, c. 695]: I regret that some of the factual information given was incorrect. The answer should have been as follows:

My Department has no air quality standards for these substances but the World Health Organisation guideline for vanadium is 1 microgram per cubic meter—averaging time 24 hours. There is no WHO guideline for nickel, but the WHO estimate a lifetime cancer risk of 4×10^{-4} at a nickel dust concentration of 1 microgram per cubic meter.

EDUCATION

Publicity and Publications

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total expenditure on (a) all forms of publicity and (b) all publications and pamphlets produced for her Department and for all agencies and public bodies for which her Department is responsible, for each year since 1979, including the budgeted figure for 1995–96, (i) including and (ii) excluding privatisation-related expenditures and expressed in 1994 prices; and if she will supply information for the period from 1 April 1993 to 1 March 1995 showing (1) the nature and (2) the purpose of each publicity campaign and of each publication involving the expenditure of more that £50,000.

Mr. Forth: The expenditure figures for publicity and publications for the Department for each year since 1979–80 are given in the table. The figures for publicity cannot be disaggregated from publications.

£ million

Year	Cash terms	At 1993–94 prices
1979–80	0.10	0.25
1980–81	0.07	0.15
1981–82	0.14	0.26
1982–83	0.04	0.07
1983–84	0.09	0.15

[1] Estimated.
[2] Budgeted.

The Department's agencies and public bodies are responsible for their own expenditure on publicity. Such information is not held centrally.

The Department has not been involved in any privatisation-related expenditure during this period.

From 1 April 1993 to 1 March 1995 the Department ran the following campaigns and issued the following publications costing more than £150,000.

Bullying Resource Pack (1994)

A pack produced for schools containing a video and information on how to counter bullying. Supported by television filler.

DFE Summer roadshow (1993 and 1994)

Information roadshow for parents and teenagers. Toured the country alongside the Radio 1 summer roadshow, to increase awareness of recent reforms and educational opportunities.

Drug Prevention Initiative (1994–95)

Launch and follow up regional conferences for teachers on the DFE drug prevention initiative, as part of a consultation process before publication of a circular for schools.

European Choice (1994)

A booklet on opportunities open to higher education students to study in Europe.

Further and Higher Education Charters (1993)

Distribution of information for students, parents and employers on standards to be expected in further and higher education. Supported by national press and radio advertising.

Grant-Maintained Schools Information (1993–1995)

On-going campaign to distribute a wide range of information leaflets for parents, teachers and governors, to enable schools to make an informed choice on the suitability for them of grant-maintained status. Supported by a press advertising campaign in 1994. Involved organisation of a series of regional conferences throughout the period 1993 to 1995.

It's Your Choice (1993 and 1994)

An information brochure about choices at 16-plus, to help students make an informed choice. Jointly funded with Employment Department Group and the Careers and Occupational Information Centre.

National School Tests (1993, 1994 and 1995)

Distribution of an information leaflet for parents explaining arrangements for tests and assessments in the national curriculum supported by press advertising in 1993 and 1994.

Private Finance Initiative (1994)

An information booklet setting out opportunities for investment of private finance in education. Distributed to business and education outlets, supported by national press advertising.

School Governors' Guides to the Law (1994)

An annual series of guides to the law for school governors, to help them to understand their legal rights and responsibilities.

School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document (1993 and 1994)

Distribution to schools of an annual publication on school teachers' pay and conditions, to inform teachers of their pay arrangements for the forthcoming year.

School Teachers Review Body Report (1994 and 1995)

Purchasing copies of the annual report of the School Teachers Review body, published by HMSO, and distributing to schools, to advise teachers of the recommendations of the review.

Schools Update (1993–1995)

On-going production of a termly publication for school teachers and governors, to keep them up to date with new developments, and the availability of on-request information.

Secondary School and College Performance Tables (1993 and 1994)

Publication of information to enable parents and pupils to compare the performance of local secondary schools and colleges, in order to make informed choices of post-11 and post-16 destinations.

Special Educational Needs Information (1994)

Distribution through schools of a package of information for parents and teachers on special educational needs and the SEN tribunal, to keep them up to date with the consequences of new legislation.

Student Grants and Loans Booklet (1994 and 1995)

An annual guide for prospective higher education students to the system of student financial support, distributed to local education authorities.

Updated Parents Charter (1994)

Distribution to all households in England of an updated version of the 1991 parents charter, incorporating recent legislative changes to the education system.

Newbury College

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations she has made to the Secretary of State for Transport regarding the proposal of the Newbury Transport Forum to build a new route for the A34 through the site currently earmarked for a new campus for Newbury college.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has made no such representations.

Student Loans

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what consultations she has had with the chairman of the Student Loans Company concerning the provision of student loans to students classified as bankrupt; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: There have been no consultations between Ministers and the chairman of the Student Loans Company on this matter. However, there has been correspondence between company executives and officials. The Education (Student Loans) Act 1990 does not specifically prevent students classified as bankrupt from being eligible for a loan.

Parents Charter

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the final cost of the household distribution of the updated parents charter.

Mr. Forth: The Royal Mail was the sole distributor of the 1994 parents charter. To disclose the payment made to the Royal Mail would compromise the Department's confidential tendering procedures.

DEFENCE

Menwith Hill Station

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what powers he is seeking in the courts an injunction preventing Ms Lindis Percy, of Bradford, from entering Menwith Hill station; what proportion of the legal costs are being borne by the National Security Agency of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: My Department is seeking an injunction against Ms Percy under the common law of trespass. The legal costs are borne by my Department.

Private Sector Contracting

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what level of cost savings were projected by his Department to arise from the implementation of its policy of transferring risk to the private sector in prime contracting; what savings have been made to date; and what savings are projected over the next five years.

Mr. Freeman: The Ministry of Defence has introduced a wide range of initiatives to improve value-for-money in defence procurement. These act concurrently on project costs and isolating the effect of a single factor, past or future, is a very complex process. It is, therefore, not possible to quantify the cost savings attributable to the policy in recent years of transferring or sharing risk, whereby taut and incentivised contracts are used to place responsibility with the contractor for activities which they are usually best fitted to discharge. We know that the costs of failing to do this adequately in the past could run into many millions of pounds on a single large project.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Leigh (Mr. Chisholm) of 14 December, Official Report, column 909, if the planned reduction in the United Kingdom's deployed nuclear explosive power involves an increase or a decrease in the number of deployed nuclear warheads.

Mr. Soames: It is not our current practice to release details of nuclear weapons numbers.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what are the implications of the comprehensive test ban treaty for the future development of a new nuclear warhead by the United Kingdom;

(2) what are the implications of the comprehensive test ban treaty for the adaptation of existing warheads for any future new nuclear weapon by the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: A comprehensive test ban treaty, effectively verified and commanding universal adherence, would have significant non-proliferation benefits. It would also place severe constraints on the five nuclear weapons states. We plan to develop further a range of techniques to enable us to maintain our nuclear capability in the absence of testing.

Publicity and Publications

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total expenditure on (a) all forms of publicity and (b) all publications and pamphlets produced for his Department and for all the agencies and public bodies for which his Department is responsible for each year since 1979, including the budgeted figure for 1995–96, (i) including and (ii) excluding privatisation-related expenditures and expressed in 1994 prices; and if he will supply information for the period from 1 April 1993 to 1 March 1995 showing (1) the nature and (2) the purpose of each publicity campaign and of each publication involving the expenditure of more than 50,000.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

TREASURY

Derivatives

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made as to the extent to which the Governor of the Bank of England's assurances of July 1994 on the monitoring of derivative trading were in the public interest.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 13 March 1995]: My right hon. and learned Friend has made no such assessment, but I am aware that the Bank of England has consistently made clear the risks involved in derivatives. The Governor's assurances of July 1994 related to the understanding of the most active players in the market and were balanced by a statement of the need to deter intermediaries who do not understand the risks involved. I recognise, as does the Governor, the need to ensure effective regulation of derivatives trading.

HEALTH

GPs' Night Visits

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations she has received in favour of her Department's offer to general practitioners of a new out-of-hours payment scheme; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: We have met with representatives of family doctors on many occasions to discuss our offer to change the night visit payments scheme. The profession's representatives are in favour of change, and we are continuing to discuss what form a new scheme should take.

Dialysis

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from the National Kidney Federation about the revised arrangements for the provision of home-based continuous ambulatory peritoneal dialysis.

Mr. Sackville: The National Kidney Federation has written to indicate its acceptance in principle of changes which will mean that continuous ambulatory peritoneal dialysis will be funded entirely through contracts let by health authorities after 1 April 1995. The federation has asked that these changes are monitored to ensure that the quality of services is maintained.

Breast Milk Substitutes

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment her Department has made of whether the principles set out in the World Health Organisation's international code of marketing of breast milk substitutes should apply to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sackville: The United Kingdom supported the adoption of this World Health Organisation code, by the World Health Assembly in 1981, as the recommended basis for action in member states. The Government have consistently supported breastfeeding as the best means of feeding a baby, and this is reflected in our policies and initiatives to promote and protect breastfeeding. We have also taken steps to restrict the advertising and promotion of baby milks in the Infant Formula and Follow-on Formula Regulations 1995 which came into force on 1 March 1995. The regulations implement the relevant European Community legislation which is firmly based on the principles and aims of the WHO international code of marketing of breast milk substitutes. The new regulations give a statutory basis to the restrictions on advertising in place since 1983 under the voluntary agreement with the baby milk manufacturers.

Listeria

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many strains of listeria monocytogenes are known to her Department; and what assessment has been made of whether each strain of listeria monocytogenes has the same potential effects on health.

Mr. Sackville: There are 13 main types—serovars—of listeria monocytogenes, each containing a number of strains. All strains contain virulence genes. This means that they all have the potential to cause human illness, although not all are reported to have done so.

NHS Cars

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) of 19 December 1994, Official Report, column 990, what estimate she has made of the percentage of (a) midwives, (b) community nurses, (c) health visitors, (d) doctors, (e) other health professionals in the community, (f) managers, (g) board members and (h) other non-clinical staff who have access to an NHS car.

Mr. Malone: All employees and board members who have a need related to their post may have access to a national health service car.

Unlicensed Medicines

Mr. Godsiff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the drugs with their respective uses currently administered in the national health service for which (a) a product licence has not been granted and (b) animal/toxicology and clinical trials have not been undertaken.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. Under the Medicines Act 1968 and the Medicines for Human Use (Marketing Authorisations Etc.) Regulations 1994, doctors acting on their own responsibility may prescribe any medicinal product, whether licensed or not and irrespective of its indications for use, which they consider to be clinically appropriate for their patients' needs.

St. Mary's Hospital

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the up-to-date position regarding the negotiations between the regional health authority and the architects for St. Mary's hospital.

Mr. Sackville: The South and West regional health authority and the architectural firm Ahrends Burton and Koralek have announced that arbitration proceedings between them have been settled by mutual consent.

NHS Consultants

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many whole–time equivalent consultants there have been in the NHS in each of the last five years.

Mr. Malone: The information is shown in the table.

Consultants—England (whole-time equivalents) 1989–1993 as at 30 September

Year	Consultants
1989	13,670
1990	14,190
1991	14,500
1992	14,850
1993	15,210

Note:
All figures are rounded to the nearest 10.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many whole–time equivalent consultants were appointed in each of the last five years as part of the new deal for junior doctors.

Mr. Malone: Our regional task forces report that appointments have been made as follows:

	Posts
1992–93	213
1993–94	191
1994–95—to 30 September 1994	130
Total	534

Non-consultant Doctors

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of whole-time equivalent staff grade and associate specialists in each of the last five years.

Mr. Malone: The information is shown in the table. Staff grade numbers are increasing as more posts are allocated up to a ceiling of 10 per cent. of consultant numbers which has now been reached. Associate specialist appointments are personal regradings, for which strict criteria are applied by regional offices.

Staff grade and associate specialists—England (whole-time equivalents) 1989–1993 as at 30 September

	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993
Staff grade	30	250	470	710	1,050
Associate specialists	670	740	760	770	840

Note:
All figures are rounded to the nearest 10.

Hepatitis C

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department is doing on hepatitis C.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health is funding through its centrally commissioned research programme a project which is looking at behaviours associated with exposure to hepatitis C, hepatitis B and HIV infections.

The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council which receives its grant in aid from the Office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and which is, I understand, funding a number of projects researching into hepatitis C.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when her Department first became aware of the risk of transmission of hepatitis C through blood transfusion products; when blood transfusion products were first screened for hepatitis; and when the blood test for hepatitis C was first available.

Mr. Sackville: It has been known since the 1970s that, despite the introduction of testing for hepatitis B, some recipients of blood and blood products continued to develop hepatitis which was neither hepatitis A nor hepatitis B—NANB. In 1988 a virus called hepatitis C was reported in scientific literature, which was thought to be the main cause of NANB transfusion-associated hepatitis. The first anti-hepatitis C tests were reported in scientific literature in March 1989, but did not become available until later in the year. Expert advice was that these tests should not be introduced because of proven deficiencies. These first tests had a large number of false positive and false negative results and no satisfactory confirmatory tests were available. In due course, the test was improved considerably and also confirmatory tests became available. Routine testing of all blood donations for antibodies for the hepatitis C virus was introduced in September 1991, when the expert advice was that sufficiently reliable tests were available.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on any plans she has to compensate patients developing hepatitis C from transfusion of NHS blood products.

Mr. Sackville: The Government have no plans to make payments to patients who have been infected with hepatitis C as a result of national health service treatment.

Junior Hospital Doctors

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who holds the job contracts of junior hospital doctors; and if she will make a statement on changes she is planning.

Mr. Malone: The job contracts of registrars and senior registrars are currently held by regional health authorities; those of senior house officers and pre-registration house officers are normally held by their employers, either trusts or health authorities. For information about our plans for the future, I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) on 9 February, Official Report, columns 369–70.

Capital Projects, Barnet

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what capital projects have been completed in the London borough of Barnet with a works cost of over £1 million since 1979; and if she will give a brief description of each project.

Mr. Sackville: The figures in the table record national health service capital projects that have been completed within the boundary of the London borough of Barnet with a works cost of over £1 million since 1979, and a brief description.

NHS capital project	Works cost £	Description	Year
Barnet General Hospital	1,482,590	Kitchen and dining	1983–84
Central Public Health Laboratory Service, Colindale	14,620,183	Public health laboratory	1984–85
St. Stephen's Aids Centre	2,097,000	HIV day unit	1988–89
Edgware General Hospital	1,362,200	Pathology department	1988–89
Colindale Psychogeriatric Hospital	2,723,370	Psychogeriatric facilities	1989–90

Acamprosate

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how much acamprosate was used in the NHS in 1994; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what guidelines are in place to regulate the use of acamprosate in the NHS, and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Information on the use of acamprosate in the national health service in 1994 is not available centrally. Acamprosate is not licensed for use in the United Kingdom, although an application for such a licence is currently with the Medicines Control Agency. Before a licence is granted, the Medicines Control Agency will need to be satisfied as to the product's quality, safety and efficacy.

Methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus Aureus

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures she has taken to secure the prevention of the spread of methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus in the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health in EL(94)74, entitled "Improving the effectiveness of the NHSE", issued to the NHS on 28 September 1994 commended the revised guidelines for the control of epidemic methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus published jointly by the Hospital Infection Society and the British Society for Antimicrobial Chemotherapy in 1990. New general guidance on hospital infection control issued to the NHS on 8 March includes new advice on the surveillance of MRSA and other antibiotic resistant bacteria. Copies of the guidance are available in the Library.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus have been reported in the NHS for each year since 1992.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Gulf War

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans her Department has to research potential links between the Gulf war and the outcome of pregnancies in service families.

Mr. Sackville: None. This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

AIDS

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has had from Manchester city council about her proposal to reduce the city's AIDS support programme; what reply she is sending; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We received one letter on 17 February which was answered on 8 March.

London Initiative Zone

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what criteria the areas helped by the establishment of the London initiative zone were selected; and what plans she has to extend the life and scope of the zone.

Mr. Malone: The London initiative zone covers those areas where need is deemed to be greatest, services weakest and where both hospital services and primary care present further challenges. The LIZ is expected to continue until 1997–98. There are no plans to extend the scope and the life of the zone.

Accident and Emergency Services

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is held centrally on London ambulance service response times; what are the catchment areas served by local hospitals; what are the numbers of patients attending accident and emergency departments; and what is the number of patients attending minor accident treatment service units.

Mr. Sackville: Information is collected centrally for ambulance services, including the London ambulance service, on response times. Information on catchment areas and patient flows is available from district health authorities.

NHS Trusts (Litigation)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what contingency plans she has in respect of court awards of large sums of money following litigation against health trusts.

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) on 16 March, Official Report, column 706.

Publicity and Publications

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total expenditure on (a) all forms of publicity and (b) all publications and pamphlets produced for her Department and for all the agencies and public bodies for which her Department is responsible, for each year since 1979, including the budgeted figure for 1995–96, (i) including and (ii) excluding privatisation-related expenditures and expressed in 1994 prices; and if she will supply information for the period from 1 April 1993 to 1 March 1995 showing (1) the nature and (2) the purpose of each publicity campaign and of each publication involving the expenditure of more than £50,000.

Mr. Sackville: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

SOCIAL SECURITY

War Widows' Pensions

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total cost of his Department's war widows' pensions currently being paid to post-1973 war widows.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Actual expenditure for 1994–95 post-1973 war widows' pensions is not available from the expenditure information currently collected, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The total estimated net cost of all war widows' pensions in 1994–95 is £361 million.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 2 February concerning a constituent.

Mr. Roger Evans: I sent a reply to the hon. Member today, having obtained a copy of the letter the day before. The original had not been received in the Department.

Maxwell Pensioners

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his Department's policy concerning the position of Maxwell pensioners.

Mr. Lilley: In June 1992, I announced a number of exceptional measures to help the Maxwell pensioners. This followed the discovery of a shortfall in scheme assets of some £440 million, affecting the pension rights of some 32,000 pension scheme numbers. About 4,000 current pensioners faced large and immediate cuts in their payments and about 12,000 future pensioners had no prospect of their pensions coming into payment. These measures have ensured that all pensions have stayed in payment while uniquely complicated asset recovery work has been undertaken by the pension scheme trustees and the liquidators of the Maxwell pension investment company.

The measures the Government took were: the provision of £2.5 million in emergency funding to keep pensions in payment in the short term; setting up the Department's Maxwell pensions unit and the Maxwell Pensioners Trust, chaired by Sir John Cuckney, which raised some £6 million; and deferring the collection of some £115 million in state scheme premiums payable on the pensioners' return to the state earnings-related pension scheme, which amounts to a substantial interest-free loan. Sir John Cuckney also acted as my adviser on the Maxwell pensions affair.

The Government and the Maxwell Pensioners Trust have encouraged the parties to Maxwell pensions claims to consider the possibility of out-of-court settlements and mediation so that the cost and delays of litigation can be kept to a minimum. On 10 February, I warmly welcomed the announcement by the scheme trustees and the liquidators that they had agreed in principle a basis of a major settlement of various claims. This agreement was subject to terms and conditions also being agreed and obtaining the necessary court approval. Other claims are unaffected and are being pursued separately.

I hope that the parties concerned will be able to finalise a settlement. I shall continue to follow developments closely as, I am sure, will others, including the Social Security Committee, who have done excellent work on behalf of the pensioners. Sir John Cuckney and the Maxwell pensions unit have played an important role in helping the parties to reach the basis for a major settlement. However, the task of bringing a settlement to a conclusion is in the hands of the parties concerned. So it is appropriate for the unit to cease acting as an independent entity and for me to release Sir John from his role as my adviser at the end of March.

The Government have played an active part in helping a resolution of the problems faced by the Maxwell pensioners. We have ensured that pensions continued to be paid by all Maxwell schemes while the scheme trustees and the liquidators undertook asset recovery work. We hope that the settlement recently agreed in principle can be concluded so that the pensioners can enjoy a secure future without the delays and costs of litigation.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 7 March, Official Report, column 168, how many of the people moving off incapacity benefit to sign on in 1995–96, and 1996–97, he estimates (a) will also receive an occupational or private pension and (b) will be aged 45 years or over.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in each of the years 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–89 he estimates will qualify for income support to top up a payment of (a) the lower rate of short-term incapacity benefit (b) the higher rate of short-term incapacity benefit and (c) the long-term rate of incapacity benefit.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available in the form requested. The figures in the table are based on the estimated number of incapacity benefit recipients also in receipt of income support at the end of March each year.

	1996	1997	1998
Short-term incapacity benefit (lower rate)	40,000	40,000	40,000
Short-term incapacity benefit (higher rate)	30,000	30,000	30,000
Long-term incapacity benefit	170,000	200,000	225,000
Totals	235,000	265,000	290,000

Notes:
1. Estimates are rounded to the nearest 5,000. Totals may not sum due to rounding.
2. As some estimates are based on small sample sizes, the data should be treated with caution.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals concerning invalidity benefit were (a) received and (b) decided in each of the quarters ending June 1993, September 1993 and December 1993; and what percentage of these were found in the claimants's favour.

Mr. Hague: The information is in the table.

Invalidity Benefit Appeals

Quarters ending	Received	Heard and decided	Percentage in appellant's favour
June 1993	5,689	1,800	51.7
September 1993	7,021	2,961	54.9
December 1993	7,150	3,225	57.8

Figures from "Quarterly Social Security Appeal Tribunal Statistics" produced by the Government Statistical Service.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of severe disablement allowance also receive an allowance for an adult dependant who is aged under 60 years who is not looking after children.

Mr. Hague: As at 3 April 1993 there were 3,000[1] recipients of severe disablement allowance, less than 1 per cent. of the total case load, who had an increase for an adult dependant but no increase for a dependent child in payment. Information is not available on the number of adult dependants who are aged under 60.

[1] Based on a 1 per cent. sample of claims in Great Britain rounded to the nearest 1,000.

Incapacity for Work Appeals

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the numbers and proportion of people who lodged an appeal during each of the quarters ending December 1994, September 1994 and June 1994 against a decision that they were capable of work, who were for the period pending their appeal (a) signing on as available for work, (b) claiming income support without signing on under regulation 8 of the Income Support (General) Regulations and (c) without any state benefit.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available.

Information Technology

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 20 February, Official Report, column 77, if he will state for each company the month and year in which they began employing staff from his Department.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The available information is given.

Date of leaving	Company joined
Information Technology Services Agency
27 November 1992	AA Consulting
20 May 1994	Price Waterhouse
28 October 1994	Siemans Nixdorf
6 January 1995	Syntegra

The officers who joined Fairhaven Computer Services and ICL both applied to leave the Department to join the outside companies during the first quarter of 1990.

The officer who joined BT Datacommunications applied to leave the Department during the third quarter of 1991.

Benefits Agency Mail

Mrs. Liddell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about acts of intrusion into the privacy of clients of the Benefits Agency with particular reference to the arrangements made with Royal Mail for the opening of mail to the agency.

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mrs. Helen Liddell, dated 16 March 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning confidentiality aspects surrounding the opening of Departmental post.

The Government's Competing for Quality initiative subjects public functions to competition from the private sector. As part of this initiative the Benefits Agency has market tested its accommodation and office services, which includes post opening operations.

The work was placed in geographical packages before being market tested and the outcome has been a mixture of wins by in-house and external suppliers. The Royal Mail are now opening and sorting post for the Benefits Agency under a sub-contract to the in-house team in the Tyne/Tees, North and West Yorkshire, Scotland, East Midlands, Wales, Greater Manchester and South East areas. This is not a national contract. The sub-contract with the Royal Mail was not obligatory for successful in-house teams, but the in-house teams in these areas have the opportunity to provide significant service enhancements along with savings for the tax payer.

The contract specifications drawn up with the Royal Mail contain all the necessary safeguards to ensure confidentiality of information is maintained to the high standards required by the Civil Service. All staff directly involved in post opening are bound by the same stringent security and confidentiality rules, including each member of staff being required to sign a declaration acknowledging the provisions of section 123 of the Social Security Administration Act 1992, which makes it a criminal offence to disclose personal information provided for Social Security purposes. The Royal Mail is a Government body and consequently the staff are already governed by the Official Secrets Act.

The mail is opened under supervision in a separate, secure area which is locked at all times, and only staff directly involved in the contract will be allowed access to this room. Whilst the post is being opened and sorted no one is allowed to enter or leave the room. Any mail marked "Private", "Personal" or "Confidential" is left unopened. The sorted mail is then placed in sealed bags and delivered to the District Office sections each morning.

The Benefits Agency has ensured that in seeking to provide better value for money in the delivery of public services, standards of quality and confidentiality will not be sacrificed. In particular the Agency has:

specified carefully in the contracts the standards which must be observed; ensured that staff are properly trained in post opening operations; set up detailed and continuous procedures to monitor the standard of service being provided.

There are many opportunities for enhanced customer service, in terms of the Agency's business as a whole, to be gained from the new arrangements and I am confident that we are able to maintain our high standards of customer confidentiality.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans the Child Support Agency has produced to move its headquarters to the Dudley Child Support Agency centre; when the Child Support Agency intends to implement that proposal; and whether the chief executive of the Child Support Agency intends to base her own office and her support staff at the Dudley Child Support Agency centre.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is the responsibility of the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. James Pawsey, dated 17 March 1995:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the relocation of the Child Support Agency's headquarters to Dudley.

A small project team was established in January to develop detailed proposals and plans for the relocation of the Agency's headquarters, and other centralised work, away from London. Implementation of these plans is now under way and proceeding to timetable. It is intended to relocate the Agency's headquarters to Dudley through a phased programme of moves by April 1996.

It is my intention to house both my own office and my support team at Dudley.

I hope that this is helpful.

Leaflet BAL4

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he introduced leaflet BAL4; what is its purpose and what was the reason for its introduction at that time; and if he will list the areas in the United Kingdom where the leaflet is being used.

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the Benefits Agency is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, its chief executive. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. John Austin-Walker, dated 16 March 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the introduction, purpose and availability of leaflet BAL4.

In 1993, as Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, I met with the National Association of the Citizens Advice Bureau. At that meeting, concern was expressed that the Agency was asking people, as part of the process for allocating National Insurance numbers to new customers, to produce documents they would not normally have in their possession, in order to establish their identity.

I arranged for action to be taken and, following further investigation and consultation with other welfare groups, the leaflet BAL4 was published in September 1994. Customers are now more aware, as a consequence, of the type of documents that will be required to provide evidence of identity when claiming benefit. This has allowed the Agency to give a better service to its customers as the allocation of National Insurance numbers is quicker. Consequently, the administration and payment of benefit via the computer system, which of itself offers an enhanced service, can be implemented more speedily.

The leaflet was made available to 20000 external organisations as well as Agency offices throughout the United Kingdom.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Family Credit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of (a) new family credit claims and (b) renewal family credit claims are presently being processed with in (i) one week, (ii) four weeks, (iii) six weeks, (iv) eight weeks and (v) longer than eight weeks.

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of family credit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Keith Bradley, dated 16 March 1995:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the clearance times of new and renewal claims to Family Credit. You requested details of the proportion cleared within one week, four weeks, six weeks, eight weeks and longer than eight weeks.

The table below details the information you have requested. Such figures are produced on a monthly basis and I have therefore provided information for the month ending 28 February 1995 which is the latest full month available. For the purposes of answering this question, one week has been calculated as 5 working days.

Percentage

	1 Week (1-5 days)	4 Weeks (6-20 days)	6 Weeks (21-30 days)	8 Weeks (31-40 days)	Over 8 weeks (41+ days)
New Claims	38.45	46.67	10.40	0.79	3.69
Renewal Claims	39.68	46.35	8.74	2.96	2.27

You may also be interested to know that Family Credit operates a Fast Track system for processing claims from the newly employed through the Employment Service. Information required for the assessment is provided by the customer's Client Advisor which enables the unit to assess the claim more quickly. Figures for the month ending 28 February showed that 90.06% of customers using the Fast Track system had their claim decided in 5 working days.

I hope you find this reply useful.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministers' Conduct

Dr. Wright: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will identify which forms of personal conduct are unacceptable for a Minister; and if he will amend "Questions of Procedures for Ministers" accordingly;

(2) if any Minister who has, or who has had, an extra-marital affair will be expected to resign.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

Paragraph 1 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers" makes it clear that Ministers are expected to conduct themselves in such a way as to protect the integrity of public life. My right hon. Friend has no plans to amend it.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Publicity and Publications

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, what was the total expenditure on (a) all forms of publicity and (b) all publications and pamphlets produced for his Department and for all the agencies and public bodies for which his Department and for all the agencies and public bodies for which his Department is responsible for each year since 1979, including the budgeted figure for 1995–96, (i) including and (ii) excluding privatisation-related expenditures and expressed in 1994 prices; and if he will supply information for the period from 1 April 1993 to 1 March 1995 showing (1) the nature and (2) the purpose of each publicity campaign and of each publication involving the expenditure of more than £50,000.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Special Advisers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the salary paid to Mr. Peter Luff while employed as a specialist adviser to Ministers by the Department of Trade and Industry during the period 13 June 1987 to 24 July 1989 was supplemented by income from employment outside the Department.

Mr. Heseltine: Special advisers are bound by the same rules as civil servants regarding outside employment and their other financial interests. In general, these require that there should be no conflict between those interests and their official duties. Apart from this, their income is a matter for them.

Eurosolar UK

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what contact his Department has had with Eurosolar UK; and what assessment he has made of Eurosolar UK's stated aims and activities.

Mr. Eggar: There have been exchanges of correspondence with Eurosolar UK and meetings between officials and representatives of Eurosolar UK. The Department was represented at the launch of Eurosolar

UK on 28 February. Eurosolar UK has been invited to express its views in the consultation process on the non-fossil fuel obligation and future renewable energy orders.

The Government welcome the launch of Eurosolar UK since its key aim is to promote the use of sustainable forms of energy which is in line with the Government's own policy in this area.

Funerals

Mr. David Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the Office of Fair Trading will publish its report on prepaid funerals and the funeral industry.

Mr. Ian Taylor: I understand from the Director General of Fair Trading that he expects to publish his report on prepaid funerals during April.

Temporary Contracts

Ms Harman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for this year and each of the past five years, how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which his Department is responsible who have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration are re-employed in the same or similar position at a later date.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 15 March 1995]: The information in precisely the form requested by the hon. Member is not readily available. The number of staff currently employed, or who have been employed during the last five years, on temporary contracts and then re-employed in the same or similar position at a later date is 70 for my Department and 279 for the agencies.

Ms Harman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many people he expects to employ in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which he is responsible on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration in the next three years, in each case specifying the number of employees who had previously been employed in a similar position on the same contract.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 15 March 1995]: The information is not available in the form requested. The Department's "Expenditure Plans Report 1995"—Cm 2804—gives details in man years of casual staff planned in my Department and its agencies. Copies are available from the Library of the House.

Ms Harman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many employees in (i) his department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by his Department have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks of (b) less than 51 weeks' duration for this year and each of the past five years, in each case specifying what percentage of the respective total work force these employees constitute.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 15 March 1995]: The information requested by the hon. Member is as follows:

	51 weeks	Per cent.	Less than 51 weeks	Per cent.
Department
1989–90	14	0.2	131	2.0
1990–91	19	0.3	120	2.0
1991–92	7	0.1	75	1.2
1992–93	6	0.1	103	1.5
1993–94	10	0.2	83	1.3
1994–95	n/a	n/a	140	2.3
Agencies
1989–90	13	0.2	272	4.1
1990–91	15	0.2	347	5.1
1991–92	19	0.3	322	4.7
1992–93	16	0.2	278	4.2
1993–94	29	0.3	334	5.3
1994–95	n/a	n/a	566	9.4

n/a Not available.

Exact figures for the current financial year are not available because some staff taken on during the course of the year will not have served a possible full 51-week term.

Ms Harman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the full terms of employment as specified to employees in his Department and all executive agencies for which he is responsible who are employed on a temporary contract of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 15 March 1995]: Several types of temporary appointment are permissable under the civil service Order in Council. The two types mainly in use in the DTI are the fixed-term appointment and the casual appointment. The full terms of employment offered are in accordance with the guidance issued by the Civil Service Commissioners and are set out in a letter of appointment and associated schedule, and the "Staff Handbook"—"The Guide". The letters of appointment and associated schedules for both types of appointment, together with a copy of "The Guide", have been placed in the Library of the House.

Ms Harman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guidance has been issued in respect of the recruitment and appointment of non-permanent employees in (a) his Department and (b) all executive agencies supervised by his Department.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 15 March 1995]: The DTI and its agencies are required to follow recruitment principles set out in the civil service management code and the civil service Order in Council. The DTI guidance on the recruitment of non-permanent employees is based on these principles, and supplementary guidance which is issued from time to time by the Civil Service Commissioners.

Ms Harman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what positions in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which his Department is responsible are filled by employees who are employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 15 March 1995]: The information in precisely the form requested by the hon. Member is not readily available. Those staff employed on temporary contracts in both the Department and its agencies are mainly used in the junior administrative grades.

Motor Manufacturing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the net loss of employment in the motor manufacturing industry as a result of the establishment of Japanese car plants in the United Kingdom; and what was the cost to public funds in grants and subsidies and in supporting those made unemployed.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom has successfully attracted £3.5 billion of investment from Japanese car manufacturers which have established plants here since 1986. This has directly created 9,500 jobs and is generating £1.5 billion a year in additional component procurement in the UK and continental Europe. It has also made a major contribution to improving quality, productivity and competitiveness across the industry. The Government assistance provided was limited to £125 million to Nissan to establish and expand its Sunderland plant.

The United Kingdom is now the most rapidly expanding car manufacturing base in Europe with significant new investments announced in the last year by the major vehicle manufacturers. The recent announcement by Toyota of the expansion of its Burnaston plant is an important example of this. There has been a net loss of 27,000 jobs in the motor vehicles and parts sector since 1986 which reflects underlying improvements in competitiveness and the introduction of lean manufacturing techniques. It is not possible to determine the impact of these changes on the numbers unemployed and the associated costs to public funds.

Coal Subsidies

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what amount of subsidy has been paid to the coal industry since the White Paper "Prospects for Coal" was published; and to which mine each subsidy applied.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 16 March 1995]: Since the publication of the White Paper "Prospects for Coal", subsidy paid to the coal industry under the Industrial Development Act 1982 amounts to about £9 million. Payments are in respect of Ellington, Monktonhall, Blenkinsopp, Lyn Clipstone, Rossington, Hem Heath and Markham Main. A further £1,650 million of financial assistance for the coal industry has been paid under the Coal Industry Acts.

Cable Television Franchises

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list for each cable television area (a) the company awarded the franchise, (b) the date cabling commenced or the current expected date of commencement, (c) the number of homes in the franchise area and (d) the number of homes cabled to date.

Mr. Ian Taylor: I am writing to the hon. Member and will place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Murvi Motorcaravans Ltd.

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will ensure that the application from Murvi Motorcaravans Ltd., which he received on 14 March, for regional selective assistance receives immediate attention.

Mr. Page: The application for regional selective assistance from Murvi Motorcaravans Ltd. is currently being appraised within the Government office for the south-west as quickly as resources permit.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Identity Cards

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make available as an alternative travel document to the British visitor's passport a United Kingdom identity card officially recognised throughout the European Union;

(2) when he will publish a Green Paper containing proposals for the introduction of a United Kingdom identity card.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: We intend publishing, later in the spring, a Green Paper on identity cards. This will set out and canvass views on the possible options for a national identity card scheme, including the use of a United Kingdom identity card as a travel document within the European Union.

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the dates in each of the last three years when an inmate in Wandsworth prison has (a) committed suicide and (b) sought to commit suicide and has needed hospital care.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tox Cox, dated 17 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking the dates in each of the last three years when an inmate in Wandsworth has committed suicide or attempted to commit suicide.

There were no suicides in 1992, although five attempts were made.

Two prisoners killed themselves in 1993, one on 5 December and one on 8 December. In this year there were nineteen unsuccessful attempts at suicide.

In 1994 there were two deaths recorded as being death by misadventure, on 17 July and 2 November, and two suicides on 26 July and 20 November. There were 43 suicides attempts in this year.

Information on the dates of the suicide attempts is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Prison Security Reclassifications

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many security reclassifications have occurred for each category of prisoner in each of the past five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 17 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of security re-classifications of prisoners which have occurred for each category in each of the past five years.

Re-categorisations from Category B to C and from C to D are the responsibility of Governors of prisons and no central records are kept. I regret, therefore, that the information requested about this group of prisoners is not available.

The relevant information about prisoners re-categorised from A to B is as follows:

Year	Number
1990	78
1991	85
1992	56
1993	51
1994	25

Prisons (Young Offenders)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of receptions into Prison Service custody of 15-year-old (a) girls and (b) boys; how many were (i) on remand and (ii) sentenced; and in respect of what offences they were committed, in each year since 1990.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 17 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking what has been the number of receptions into Prison Service custody of 15 year old (a) girls and (b) boys; how many were (i) on remand and (ii) sentenced; and in respect of what offences they were committed, in each year since 1990.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which Prison Service institutions have held 15-year-olds boys and girls in (a) 1994 and (b) 1995 to date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 17 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking which prison service institutions have held 15 year old boys and girls in (a) 1994 and (b) 1995 to date.

The readily available information relates to the populations of 15 years olds, in boys and girls prison service establishment on 30 June 1994 and 31 January 1995, and it is given in the attached tables. A copy of these tables has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Prison Escort Services

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of (a) privately managed (b) police and (c) Prison Service escorts are carried out in secure cellular vehicles for the latest dates for which figures are available;

(2) what percentage of (a) Group 4's prisoners' escorts and (b) Prison Service escorts are transported in secure vehicles;

(3) how many prison escapes have occurred in the Metropolitan area since Securicor commenced escort services there;

(4) what are the number of prisoner movements for each escort area in the last five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 17 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about prisoner escorts.

Information on the number of prisoner escorts for each escort area in the last five years is either not available or could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. Neither the Prison Service nor the police record it centrally. The limited information which is readily available relates to those areas where court escort and custody services have been contracted out and is given below.

In Area 7 (East Midlands and Humberside) there were approximately 100,000 prisoner movements in 1993–94 and there have been approximately 107,000 such movements until 28 February in this financial year. A prisoner movement is defined as either the escorting of a prisoner from a prison or police station to court or from court to his place of custody. In Area 3 (the Metropolitan Police District) Securicor conducted approximately 57,000 prisoner escort movements between 27 June 1994, when they began operating, and 28 February 1995, although this does not represent all of the movements in the area.

In Areas 4 (East Anglia) and 6 (Merseyside), Greater Manchester and North Wales) contracts have been awarded to Group 4 for the provision of prisoner escort services for operation from July this year. Special exercises were conducted in 1994 to establish the likely number of prisoner movements the contractor would have to manage. These produced estimates of approximately 95,000 prisoner movements in Area 4 and 201,000 in Area 6 each year.

Information on the percentage of prisoner escorts conducted in secure, including cellular, vehicles is not recorded by the police and prison services. Again, the only information available relates to privately managed prisoner escorts.

It is the general policy of contractors to transport all prisoners in cellular vehicles except where special circumstances apply, for example where the prisoner is heavily pregnant or a nursing mother or disabled. In Area 3 Securicor have conducted 98.3 per cent of prisoner escorts using cellular vehicles and in Area 7 Group 4 estimate over 99 per cent of such escorts have been in cellular vehicles.

Since Securicor began managing prisoner escorts in Greater London in June 1994 there have been two escapes from their custody. This compares with 16 in 1993 under the previous arrangements. The two figures are not directly comparable because the contract with Securicor is being phased in and will not be fully operational until June this year. Nevertheless, the figures so far indicate their performance will be better.

Prison Workshops

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many (a) workshop and (b) education places there were in the Prison Service in each of the last 15 years broken down by prison population in each year;

(2) how many workshop places were available for prisoners in each of the last 15 years broken down by the number of places per prison population.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 17 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about the number of workshop and education places at Prison Service establishments in each of the last 15 years.

There is no fixed allocation of places for prisoners to attend education classes. The number of prisoners able to attend full-time or part time education courses is determined according to need. In addition to classroom based teaching there is also tuition for prisoners at other locations, such as in the prison hospital, and teaching staff provide support to prisoners undertaking private study.

Information on work places for prisoners in industries and farms is available only from 1987, and from 1988 for vocational training places. This information is given in the attached table, a copy of which has been placed in the House of Commons library.

		Employment places

Prison Operating Costs

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the current net operating cost per prisoner place in (a) local prisons and remand centres, (b) contracted-out prisons, (c) dispersal prisons, (d) category B training prisons, (e) category C training prisons, (f) adult male open prisons, (g) young offender closed establishments, (h) young offender open establishments, (i) young offenders remand establishments, (j) female establishments and (k) non-operational establishments; what is the net headquarters operating cost, and, when this figure is added to the above establishments costs, what is the net operating cost per prisoner place before exceptional items for the Prison Service in England and Wales from 1 April 1994 to 31 March 1995;

(2) what is the net operating cost per prisoner place per annum for each of the local prisons and remand centres, excluding the contracted-out prisons, in England and Wales from 1 April 1994 to 31 March 1995.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for these matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 17 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions on net operating costs.

Figures for 1994–95 will be published later this year in the Prison Service Annual Report for 1994–95. Figures for 1993–94 have been published in section A of Part Two of the Prison Service Annual Report and Accounts, a copy of which is in the House of Commons Library.

Prison Escapes

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of escapes from prison establishments and from prison escorts for each of the local prisons and remand centres, excluding contracted-out prisons, in England and Wales from 1 April 1994 to 31 March 1995.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 17 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of escapes from prison establishments and prison escorts for each of the local prisons and remand centres, excluding contracted out prisons, in England and Wales from 1 April 1994 to 31 March 1995.

The attached table shows the information requested from 1 April 1994 to 9 March 1995 inclusive, for those establishments where escapes occurred. A copy of this table has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

[1] This figure excludes 15 escapes from escort that were previously the responsibility of the police and are now the responsibility of private contractors.

Prison Officers (Time Off)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many hours were owed to prison officers under the time off in lieu scheme in total and for each prison in England and Wales for (a) the latest date available, (b) six months ago, (c) 12 months ago, (d) 18 months ago and (e) two years ago.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 17 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about how many hours were owed to prison officers under the TOIL scheme in total and for each prison at different times in the past two years.

The information is not available centrally in precisely the form requested and could be collated only at disproportionate cost. However, a survey was completed recently, covering a similar period and the figures from it, which are provisional, have been included in the attached table, a copy of which has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Prisons (Assaults)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offences relating to assaults proved in disciplinary proceedings, including attempted assaults, incitement and assisting other prisoners in assault excluding criminal proceedings relating to assaults took place in each local prison and remand centre excluding contracted-out prisons in England and Wales since 1 April 1994; and how many took place in (a) local prisons and remand centres, contracted out, (b) prisons, (c) dispersals, (d) category B training prisons, (e) category C training prisons, (f) adult male open prisons, (g) young offender closed establishments, (h) young offender open establishments and (i) female establishments.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 17 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of proved offences of assault at disciplinary proceedings since 1 April 1994.

The enclosed tables give the number of assaults for each non-contracted out local prison and remand centre and the total number of assaults by type of Prison Service establishment. A copy of these tables has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Super-prisons

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to develop a super-prison along the lines of Oak Park Heights in Minnesota USA.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 17 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question on what plans there are to develop a super-prison along the lines of Oak Park Heights in Minnesota, USA.

The new prison building programme includes no plans to develop a super-prison along the lines of Oak Park Heights in Minnesota, USA.

Prison Officers' Training

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many weeks basic training is given to (a) prison officers and (b) prison custody officers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 17 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about how many weeks basic training is given to (a) prison officers and (b) prisoner custody officers.

The basic training of prison officers (ie those who work at directly managed prisons) consists of nine weeks (256 hours) residential initial training at the Prison Service College. In addition, there is two weeks before and two weeks after the formal training, which is spent at their parent establishment in observation and induction.

Under the Criminal Justice Act 1991, prisoner custody officers (PCOs) may be certificated either for custodial duties at a prison or for escort functions, or both. The minimum training required for escort PCOs is 234 hours, and for custodial PCOs 269. This excludes company induction and on the job training (the equivalent of the 4 weeks observation and induction training for prison officers).

Prison Overcrowding

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the average percentage overcrowding in each local prison and remand centre in England and Wales since 1 April 1994 on the basis of the methodology as applied within section B performance statistics of the Prison Service annual report and accounts for 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1994.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 17 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the average percentage overcrowding in each local prison and remand centre in England and Wales since 1st April 1994. The statistics have been calculated using the methodology applied within Section B performance statistics of the Prison Service Annual Report and Accounts for 1st April 1993 to 31st March 1994.

The information requested is given in the attached table, a copy of which has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Prisons (Drugs)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have been adjudicated against for possession of drugs in each of the past five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Doug Hoyle, dated 17 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisoners adjudicated against for the possession of a controlled drug in the last five years.

The numbers in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales are given below.

Possession of controlled drugs: Offences[1] proved at adjudication hearings, England and Wales, 1990–1994

Year	Number
1990	2,650
1991	2,798
1992	2,041
1993	1,797
1994	[2]2,414

[1] Including attempts, incite or assist.
[2] Provisional.

Parkhurst Prison

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 March, Official Report, column 663, on Parkhurst prison, on what date he passed the question to Mr. Derek Lewis for a reply.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Chris Mullin, dated 17 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the answer of 2 March, Official Report, column 663, on Parkhurst prison.

You asked on what date the Question was passed to the Prison Service.

Your Question was passed to the Prison Service on 18 January.

Swaleside Prison

Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the proposal to construct a six-hole golf course at Swaleside prison on the Isle of Sheppey; what costs were incurred before its cancellation; what information officials in his Department or in the Prison Service had about the proposal; and what guidelines are issued to prison governors to control expenditure on leisure facilities of this nature.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Sir Roger Moate, dated 17 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the proposal to construct a six hole golf course at Swaleside Prison on the Isle of Sheppey; what costs were incurred before its cancellation; what information officials in his Department or in the Prison Service had about the proposal; and what guidelines are issued to prison governors to control expenditure on leisure facilities of this nature.

The governor of Swaleside prison obtained agreement from the Kent area manager to enhance sports facilities available to prisoners at Swaleside, including the provision of three golf greens (each of two holes). Officials in the Prison Service Enterprise and Activity Services were asked to provide technical advice on construction and costings.

When I learned of the proposal I took the view that it was inappropriate and I instructed that the project be cancelled.

Current indications are that liabilities of less than £17,000 exclusive of VAT have been incurred and it is expected that much of this cost will be recoverable.

Expenditure on leisure facilities is subject to the normal budgetary controls, project approval requirements and tendering rules. In addition, governors are required to ensure that any expenditure is appropriate to a prison and provides good value for money.

Boot Camp Prisons

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library the conclusions of any studies available to him as to the effectiveness of boot camp prisons in the United States of America.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Copies of the readily available published reports have been placed in the Library.

Prison Staff Costs

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were (a) the staff costs, (b) the staff cost per place per annum, (c) the staff cost per prisoner per annum for (i) Blakenhurst prison and (ii) the Wolds prison for the years beginning 1 April 1993 and 1 April 1994.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. George Howarth, dated 17 March 1995:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the staff costs of Blakenhurst and Wolds Prisons.

The Prison Service pays a fee to UK Detention Services Ltd and Group 4 Prison Services Ltd to manage Blakenhurst and Wolds prisons respectively. It is not broken down into such elements as staff costs. The Prison Service does not have the details requested about staff costs for Blakenhurst and Wolds. These are matters for the companies in question.

WALES

Class Sizes

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the average class sizes in (a) primary and (b) secondary local education authority schools in (i) 1987 to 1990 and (ii) the last available year in each of the counties of Wales.

Mr. Richards: The information requested is shown in the following table. For secondary schools, comparable information cannot be provided for all the years requested.

LEA maintained primary schools

Abattoirs

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many abattoirs there were in 1993 and 1994; and how many of these met European Community standards.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In 1993 and 1994 there were 39 licensed red meat abattoirs in Wales. Of these six were fully approved to trade throughout the European Community and the remainder were approved to trade on the national market. All these red meat abattoirs were licenced in accordance with European Community requirements under the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection Regulations) 1992.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he or his officials last met the National Farmers Union in Wales to discuss the issue of the live export of sheep to continental Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I met representatives of the National Farmers Union (Wales) on 24 January 1995.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he or his officials last met the Farmers Union of Wales to discuss the issue of the live export of sheep to continental Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I met representatives of the Farmers Union of Wales on 24 January 1995.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to ensure that lambs exported from Wales in line with the minimum standards for the road and sea transportation of such animals reach their destinations without hindrance.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Progress on the question of the transport of live animals will best be achieved by reaching an agreement throughout the European Community which would allow the trade to operate on a basis acceptable to all. The United Kingdom continues to press for progress at the Council of Agriculture Ministers. Although agreement on transport requirements was not possible at the February meeting of the Council, the presidency has confirmed that it will be taking discussions forward. In the meantime, there are signs that public awareness on animal welfare issues is growing in other parts of Europe, and that the prospects for progress at the European Community level are more encouraging; we shall be working hard to maintain the momentum we have achieved.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to attend a meeting of the Council of Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I will do so when a suitable opportunity occurs.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children have received statements for special educational needs in each year since 1987 in (a) Dyfed, (b) Wales and (c) Britain.

Mr. Richards: The number of children for whom statements of special educational needs were made for the first time, for each calendar year since 1987, are shown in the following table. Figures for Britain as a whole are not available in the same format.

Calendar year	Dyfed	Wales
1987	104	1,552
1988	121	1,948
1989	193	2,099
1990	225	2,227
1991	272	2,456
1992	397	2,650
1993	437	2,881

Welsh Language Letters

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received pursuant to his decision to decline to sign letters written in the Welsh language; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have received about 30 representations. All correspondents writing to me in Welsh receive a reply in Welsh as well as in English.

Meningitis and Tuberculosis

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many identified cases of meningitis there were in Wales in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many identified cases of tuberculosis there were in Wales in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: The numbers of notifications of meningitis and tuberculosis in Wales reported to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys in each year since 1990 are shown in the following table:

Notifications	1990	1991	1992	1993[1]	1994[2]
Meningitis (all forms)	203	202	210	190	185
Tuberculosis (all forms)[2]	194	166	201	199	184

[1] Provisional.[2] Excluding chemoprophylaxis.

Eisteddfod

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he intends to visit the Urdd national eisteddfod this year;

(2) if he intends to visit the Royal national eisteddfod this year.

Mr. Redwood: I have made no decision as yet.

Transition Committees

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what evaluation this Department has undertaken to oversee the formation of transition committees in Wales pursuant to the Local Government (Wales) Act 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: As required under section 46 of the Local Government (Wales) Act 1994, transition committees have been established in all the unitary authority areas.

In July 1994, guidance was issued to transition committees on the preparatory work to be done in the time leading up to 1 April 1996.

Since then, officials have maintained contact with transition committees and, where necessary, they have sought confirmation of progress in relation to certain matters.

Defence Employment

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were employed in the defence industry in Wales in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: There is no standard definition of defence industry employment. However, the Ministry of Defence publishes regional figures on the number of its own service and civilian staff and estimates of the number of employees in private industry involved directly in world for the Ministry. These figures are shown in tables 1.9 and 2.4 of "UK Defence Statistics, 1994", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Toy Libraries

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the grants given to toy libraries in Wales in each of the last five years.

Mr. Richards: A grant of £10,650 was made to the Montgomeryshire toy library in 1991–92 under the Department's child and family services grant scheme.

Toy libraries may also apply to county voluntary bodies under the "small grant" element of that scheme—grants up to £1,000. Details of such awards are not held centrally.

Tourism

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were employed in the tourist industry in Wales in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 12 December, Official Report, column 517.

Business Start-Ups

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to gather the information necessary to produce a comprehensive and accurate figure for the number of annual business start-ups in Wales and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: No. No country keeps a comprehensive list of all their enterprises. For most practical purposes the figures for VAT registrations are adequate in both Wales and the United Kingdom. Attempting to acquire more complete information would put an unnecessary burden on all small businesses.

Anthrax

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of anthrax were reported in each year since 1985.

Mr. Richards: The number of confirmed cases of anthrax reported in each year in Wales since 1985 was as follows:

Year	Number
1985	2
1986	1
1987	1
1988	Nil
1989	1
1990	1
1992	1
1993	Nil
1994	Nil

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the cost of his Department's expenditure on water and sewerage in (a) the current year and (b) each of the three previous years.

Mr. Redwood: Figures for the current year are not available. For previous years expenditure is:

Year	£
1991–92	79,319
1992–93	44,262
1994–95	48,807

Brucella Melitensis

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of brucella melitensis were reported in each year since 1985.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No cases of brucella melitensis have been recorded in Wales since 1985.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales for which geographical areas and with which local authorities, joint venture agreements or heads of terms agreements were entered into by the Welsh Development Agency under the urban programme during the period for 1991 to 1994 inclusive.

Mr. Redwood: I will arrange for the chief executive of the agency to write to my hon. Friend and for a copy of his letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Morriston Hospital

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 13 March, Official Report, column 444, about the market testing of the cardiac unit at the Morriston hospital, on how many occasions he met each of the four organisations bidding for the cardiac surgery unit at Morriston hospital contract during the contract tender period (a) prior to 1 October 1994 and (b) after 1 October 1994 but before 2 March.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 3 November 1994, Official Report, columns 1326–27, and to my letter of 24 November 1994.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 23 February, Official Report, column 301, what representations he has had from conservation voluntary organisations concerning progress on habitat loss mitigation measures arising from the Cardiff bay barrage and the European wilds birds and habitat directives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: None. As I stated in reply to a question by my hon. Friend for Vale of Glamorgan (Mr. Sweeney) on 3 March, Official Report, column 769, the Cardiff Bay development corporation, acting on the advice of the Countryside Council for Wales, the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds and the Land Authority for Wales, is reviewing the options for suitable site locations along the south Wales coastline between the Burry inlet and the Gwent levels. I hope to make an announcement about site acquisition within the next two to three months.

National Nature Reserves

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the proposed levels of funding ensure the development of the national nature reserves beyond essential care and maintenance.

Mr. Redwood: The funds allocated by the Countryside Council for Wales toward maintenance of national nature reserves are sufficient to maintain their legal obligations.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the single programming document area monitoring committee concerning the division of European regional development funds coming to Wales between (a) local authorities, (b) the Welsh Development Agency, (c) other non-departmental public bodies and (d) other organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: None. There are no such pre-determined splits between sponsors. Each sponsor submits its projects in competition with all others and, as a result of them being carefully appraised against agreed selection criteria, an eventual list of approved projects is established.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has had in relation to probability factors pertaining to the attainment of the anticipated levels of financial assistance from the European regional development fund to the Welsh Development Agency in ascending amounts corresponding to descending amount of grant in aid from his Department's budget.

Mr. Redwood: None.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had concerning the reconciliation of the project-by-project basis of assessment of applications for financial assistance from the European regional development fund, with the anticipated levels of assistance from the fund in the three years corporate plan he has agreed with the Welsh Development Agency.

Mr. Redwood: None. The agency will compete for funds in the normal way.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the bids from the Welsh Development Agency and other non-departmental public bodies he sponsors, and all other bodies eligible for financial assistance from the European regional development fund will be entered for approval and funding under the single programme document for the calendar year 1994.

Mr. Redwood: Applications for the calendar year 1994 have recently been invited from all sponsors, including the Welsh Development Agency and other public bodies mentioned, and these are due to be submitted by 31 March 1995. All bids received will be carefully appraised against agreed selection criteria and in competition with each other and the successful projects will be announced in due course.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to establish an advisory group on sustainable development for Wales in line with those in England and Scotland.

Mr. Redwood: The Government panel on sustainable development provides independent and authoritative advice to all Ministers, including me. Welsh members have also been appointed to the United Kingdom round table and the citizens' environment initiative organising committee. I see no need at this stage for any additional advisory group in Wales to supplement these arrangements.

Secondary School Reorganisation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if his decision in relation to the proposed amalgamation of secondary schools in Ely will entail all school teaching posts being declared vacant and all post-holders to reapply for jobs.

Mr. Redwood: It is for local education authorities to manage the staffing consequences of their proposals.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce his decision on the proposed reorganisation of secondary education in Ely; if he will give the principle reasons for delay in announcing his decision; what impact the accumulated delay will have on the proposed inspection of Glan Ely high school by Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools on 1 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: As soon as possible. I need to consider carefully and fully a number of statutory objections. It is for Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools in Wales to decide whether the proposed inspection should go ahead.

Countryside Council For Wales

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which members of staff of the Countryside Council for Wales given early retirement are subsequently being offered remunerated membership of the council.

Mr. Redwood: None.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the Countryside Council for Wales will publish its 1995–96 corporate strategy.

Mr. Redwood: The Countryside Council for Wales does not publish a corporate strategy. Each year it prepares a corporate plan and submits it to the Welsh Office as part of the public expenditure review. The document is not published. The council publishes its annual report each autumn.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what funds from its 1995–96 budget, the Countryside Council for Wales has allocated for new management agreements; and if he will make a statement about the effectiveness of management agreements for sites of special scientific interest protection.

Mr. Redwood: The Countryside Council for Wales has 433 management agreements and I believe it is one of a number of effective protection mechanisms. The council has allocated sufficient funds to maintain the existing agreements but not for new management agreements in 1995–96.

Children Act 1989

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Association of Directors of Social Services, Wales branch in relation to duties on local authorities under section 24 of the Children Act 1989 with respect to those aged 17 years and over and previously in local authority care, with respect to a continuing duty of counselling and advocacy; and what proposals he has for issuing guidelines on interpreting section 24.

Mr. Redwood: This subject has been discussed with the directors of social services in Wales and led to the inspection by the social services inspectorate of services for children leaving care in Clwyd, Powys and South Glamorgan. These were published in 1993. I have no plans to publish additional guidance to that contained in volume 4 in the Children Act series, issued to all social services departments in Wales and which covered this aspect of services.

Council Tax

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the band D council tax for 1995–96 for each local authority in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Local authorities in Wales were required to notify the Welsh Office of the level of council tax set for 1995–96 by 16 March. Provisional information is given in the following table. I shall write to my hon. Friend when final figures are available and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Medical Secretaries

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines cover the use of national health service medical secretaries during their working hours by private medical consultants at their private consulting rooms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: There are no guidelines issued nationally. It is a matter for employers to instruct their employees on the duties of their jobs.

"People and Prosperity: a Challenge to Wales"

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to publish a statement follow-up consultation document on training, education and enterprise "People and Prosperity: a Challenge to Wales."

Mr. Redwood: I will publish a follow-up action plan "People and Prosperity: an Agenda for Action in Wales" on Monday 20 March. This sets out the action needed to raise standards, make faster progress towards the national targets for education and training and promote a culture of learning and enterprise.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Advertising

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the expenditure by the Central Office of Information on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) all other advertising and publicity, for each year since 1979, including the estimate for 1994–95 and the budget for 1995–96, expressed in 1994 prices.

Mr. Horam: The Central Office of Information conducts no television advertising, radio advertising, newspaper advertising or any other advertising or publicity on its own behalf.

Citizens Charter

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the expenditure on publicity and public information associated with the citizens charter in each year since 1988; and if he will supply details for each campaign involving expenditures of over £10,000 of (a) the nature of the campaign, (b) the purpose of the campaign and (c) the results of any assessment of the success of the campaign.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Deformed Fish

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what records his Department keeps of the incidence and location of catches of fish with (a) skeletal deformities and (b) sores and lesions.

Mrs. Browning: No such records are kept.

Dioxin Monitoring

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what monitoring his Department carries out of sea birds, sea mammals, fish or shellfish for dioxin levels; and in what way the results are made available.

Mrs. Browning: The Ministry has an extensive programme for monitoring dioxins in food which includes some samples of fish but not sea birds, sea mammals or shellfish. The results for fish were published in "Food Surveillance Paper No. 31", which is available in the Library. A further survey of sea fish will start later this year and the results will be published in the "Food Safety Information Bulletin."

Temporary Contracts

Ms Harman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidance has been issued in respect of the recruitment and appointment of non–permanent employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by his Department.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 15 March 1995]: All recruitment in my Department and its agencies is conducted in accordance with the Civil Service Order in Council 1991. Detailed guidance is given in the civil service management code which is available to all personnel staff.

Ms Harman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the full terms of employment as specified to employees in his Department and all executive agencies for which he is responsible who are employed on a temporary contract of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 15 March 1995]: The terms of employment of all staff within the Department and its agencies who are on a temporary contract of up to 51 weeks are based on the guidance set out in Treasury general circular No. 375 issued on 30 April 1991.

Ms Harman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what positions in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which his Department is responsible are filled by employees who are employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 15 March 1995]: Some casual staff occupy posts at EO level and above, but the vast majority are employed in the clerical and support grades.

Ms Harman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fishers and Food how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies supervised by his Department have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration for this year and each of the last five years, in each case specifying what percentage of the respective total work force these employees constitute.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 15 March 1995]: The total numbers of temporary workers on contracts of up to 51 weeks in my Department and its agencies for the years 1991 to 1995 are as follows:

Percentage of total work force

Year	Core-MAFF	Agencies	(Core-MAFF and agencies)
1991	535	79	5.8
1992	592	84	6.4
1993	847	314	10.2

Percentage of total work force

Year	Core-MAFF	Agencies	(Core-MAFF and agencies)
1994	836	290	9.8
1995	733	310	9.2

Ms Harman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people he expects to employ in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which he is responsible on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration in the next three years, in each case specifying the number of employees who had previously been employed in a similar position on the same contract.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 15 March 1995]: Staff are employed on temporary contracts for a variety of reasons including to cover unexpected short-term requirements which cannot be forecast three years ahead. Therefore, only broad estimates are possible. My Department expects to employ around 1,000 people on contracts of up to 51 weeks over the next three years. The agencies are expected to employ some 300 such people. No estimates are possible of the number of those employees who would have previously been employed in a similar position on the same contract.

Ms Harman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, for this year and each of the last five years, how many employees in (i) his Department and (ii) all executive agencies for which his Department is responsible who have been employed on temporary contracts of (a) 51 weeks or (b) less than 51 weeks' duration are re-employed in the same or similar position at a later date.

Mr. Waldegrave: The number of members of staff re-employed by my Department and its executive agencies under temporary contracts of up to 51 weeks in the years 1991 to 1995 is as follows:

Year	Core-MAFF	Agencies
1992	16	41
1993	21	50
1994	28	107
1995	8	57

Brucella Melitensis

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of brucella melitensis were reported in each year since 1985.

Mrs. Browning: None, there has never been a case of what is now recognised as brucella melitensis in England.

Milk

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations the Ministry has made to the European Commission on the fiche d'impact produced in relation to Council directive 94/71/EC regarding natural milk, heat-treated milk and milk-based products.

Mr. Jack: The Commission did not produce a fiche d'impact in respect of directive 94/71 which amends and relaxes certain requirements of the milk hygiene directive—92/46. During the negotiations on directive 94/71, the Government pressed successfully for the easing of requirements in respect of somatic cell counts which would have imposed a heavy burden on the UK dairy industry.

Minced Meat

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minster of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to the European Commission on the fiche d'impact produced in relation to council directive 94/65/EC, regarding minced meat.

Mrs. Browning: The fiche d'impact with the Commission proposal for the minced meat directive in 1990 did not address industry costs. Despite requests for such information, none was produced. However, during the lengthy negotiations on this directive, the Government pressed consistently and largely successfully for requirements imposing unnecessary burdens on industry to be removed.

Fisheries Protection

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether Spanish warships sent to protect Spanish fishing vessels in the north Atlantic are in any way financed by the EEC or authorised to act on its behalf.

Mr. Jack: Fisheries protection and enforcement in international waters is the responsibility of the flag state. No EU finance is involved in providing fisheries protection.

North-west Atlantic Fisheries Organisation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's membership of the North-west Atlantic Fisheries Organisation; whether the United Kingdom is represented at all meetings; and whether in decisions on catches and quotas the British representative gives British views or a view agreed with the EEC.

Mr. Jack: The European Union has been a contracting party to the convention on future multilateral co-operation in the north-west Atlantic fisheries since it came into force on 1 January 1979. The United Kingdom is represented at all NAFO meetings and voices British views and concerns within the EU delegation of which the Commission is the spokesman.

Mr. Philip Corrigan

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what references were obtained from the Australian Government's quarantine and inspection services in respect of Mr. Philip J. Corrigan before his appointment as head of operations of the Ministry's meat hygiene service; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: Inquiries were made in the usual way about Mr. Corrigan before his appointment, including from his previous employer, the Australian quarantine and inspection service.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Western Sahara

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from the United Nations about the movements of Moroccan settlers into the Western Sahara for the purpose of registering for the referendum.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Security Council resolution 907 sets out the criteria which individuals must meet to become eligible to vote in the planned referendum. In particular, prospective voters must be able to show evidence of a link with the Western Sahara extending back to at least 1974. Settlers without such links are therefore excluded from the referendum. It is the responsibility of the UN Identification Commission to ensure that these provisions are complied with.

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Government of Turkey as to the application by the Republic of Cyprus for membership of the European Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Davis: We maintain regular contacts with Turkey, both at ministerial and at official level. When I met Mr. Karayalchin, the Turkish Foreign Minister, on 2 February in London, Cyprus was one of several issues raised. Both Mrs. Ciller, the Turkish Prime Minister, and Mr. Karayalchin attended the EE/Turkey Association Council on 6 March. The application of Cyprus and EU membership also featured in those discussions.

Kashmir

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last spoke to the Indian Government about human rights in Indian-occupied Kashmir.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discussed the human rights situation in Kashmir with the Indian Government during his visit to India in January this year.

East Timor

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 6 December 1994, to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn), Official Report, column 172, what were the exact dates of visits to East Timor by diplomatic staff attached to the embassy in Jakarta in 1980, 1984, 1988, 1989, 1991, 1992, 1993 and 1994; and what factors determine the frequency of visits.

Mr. Goodlad: The information is as follows:

29 October–2 November 1980
26–30 November 1984[1]
12–15 January 1988
13–16 February 1989
7–8 March 1989
8–15 October 1989
12–14 February 1991
24–28 September 1991
14–19 November 1991
28 April–2 May 1992
3–7 March 1993
12–13 May 1993
20–22 May 1993
1–3 November 1993
24–26 January 1994
1–5 August 1994
18–20 September 1994

[1] The month was incorrectly recorded as December in the Official Report, column 172.

A wide range of factors are taken into account in determining the frequency of visits to East Timor.

China

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government propose to take in relation to the imprisonment by the Chinese authorities of Liu Gang, an Amnesty prisoner of conscience.

Mr. Goodlad: During my visit to China last July, a list of prisoners of concern to us was handed over to the Chinese authorities. This list included the case of Liu Gang. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary again raised the list with the Chinese Foreign Minister last September. We will continue to raise Liu Gang's case at every suitable opportunity.

Falkland Islands

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the reasons for the delay in approval being given by the European Commission for the construction of an abattoir at Port Stanley, Falkland Islands to European Union standards.

Mr. David Davis: Approval of the release of Stabex funds for the construction of an abattoir at Stanley, Falkland Islands was held up by administrative problems in the European Commission. After further prompting by Her Majesty's Government the Commission has now approved the release of the funds for this project.

Overseas Premises

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the expenditure on all overseas premises for each year since 1979, broken down to show (a) expenditure on the construction or purchase of new premises, (b) expenditure on the refitting or upgrading of premises, (c) expenditure on the maintenance of existing buildings; and whether he will give details of the (1) location, (2) cost and (3) purpose of, any new premises opened abroad in each of the last five years, and those presently planned for the next five years.

Mr. Goodlad: The information requested is not immediately available. I shall write to the hon. Member with as comprehensive a reply as possible, bearing in mind that the Foreign and Commonwealth Office only became responsible for the overseas estate in 1983, as soon as it has been obtained.

Publicity and Publications

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total expenditure on (a) all forms of publicity and (b) all publications and pamphlets produced for his Department and for all the agencies and public bodies for which his Department is responsible for each year since 1979, including the budgeted figure for 1995–96, (i) including and (ii) excluding privatisation-related expenditures and expressed in 1994 prices; and if he will supply information for the period from 1 April 1993 to 1 March 1995 showing (1) the nature and (2) the purpose of each publicity campaign and of each publication involving the expenditure of more than £50,000.

Mr. Goodlad: This information will take some time to compile. I shall write to the hon. Member shortly.

Former Prisoners of War

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 14 March, Official Report, column 509, what backing Her Majesty's ambassador in Tokyo gave to the case argued by former British prisoners of war of the Japanese when they visited Japan recently to claim compensation for their treatment and that of other Japanese prisoners in the second world war.

Mr. Goodlad: We gave assistance to the former British prisoners of war, through the British embassy in Tokyo, on the lines described in my answer of 14 March. The question of compensation, however, was in our view legally settled by the San Francisco peace treaty of 1951; so we are pursuing a different approach. As agreed between the Prime Minister and his Japanese counterpart in September 1993, we have been examining whether non-governmental measures could help. One such proposal—for a private sector foundation—turned out not to be feasible, but we are discussing with the Japanese Government possible alternatives.

North-west Atlantic Fisheries Dispute

Mr. Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the terms of the message communicated to the Government of Canada by the Committee of Permanent Representatives in Brussels on 13 March and whether he had been consulted before the message was sent.

Mr. Hurd: COREPER agreed on 13 March that clarificatory discussions should take place between the Commission and Canada in preparation for formal negotiations which could begin when the Canadian authorities had released the Spanish vessel Estai. This was in line with Her Majesty's Government's approach.

Our wider policy on the fisheries dispute between the EU and Canada was outlined in the reply given on 16 March 1995 to the hon. Member for South Dorset (Mr. Bruce) by the Minister of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for Grantham (Mr. Hogg), Official Report, columns 657–58. As he said, the United Kingdom has been using its position as a member of both the Commonwealth and the EU to promote solutions to the immediate difficulties and to contribute to an outcome in the longer term which is satisfactory to all.

The Canadian Government yesterday expressed their gratitude for the "very helpful role" which Her Majesty's Government had played in moves towards a resolution of this dispute.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 256

SESSION 1994–95

6th March—17th March 1995

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
